The Phenicians, with their ships on every sea, the parents of commerce, discovered the tin mines of Scilly Islands, off the southeast coast of England. These people overran Wales, and Ireland, and left portions of their language, as they did their features, with the people. That language and those features, are well preserved to this day in all the countries the Phenicians visited. And scholars who gain their history from the mythical Moses, with his substitution of imagination for facts, are misled, and, unfortunately, mislead others.

Our great schools of learning, until within a few years, contributed to the growth of romance. The preachers aided in misleading, by contending that the fictitious "ten lost tribes of Israel" had wandered away from Central Asia, where they suppose they were captives, traversed 5,000 miles of desert, mountain and plane, crossing great rivers, and broad seas, and landed in Wales and Ireland. The Jews were everything, the Phenicians, with their sailors in every port, and their ships on every sea, with populous colonies wherever trade called them, were and are nothing. Their history was stolen, and their rulers are appropriated and made to appear as Hebrew kings. David—Phenician Dido,—is made to appear as a man after God's own heart, and Solomon, with his multitude of wives, the wisest of men, as taught in Sunday schools, worshiped strange Gods, and did evil, building altars in high places and sacrificing to their Gods, is presented as a character for our children to imitate.

Mormonism, with polygamy, is only a reflex of the Bible teaching. The Patriarchs, the prophets, and the rulers of Israel, were polygamists, and not one solitary word from the Bible, or, Jesus in opposition to it, was ever written, or fell from his lips. The object lessons of Christianity are polygamious.

A Defective Maxim.

"A falsehood insisted upon is as good as the truth," was an old-time maxim among the boys. It saved them from many a merited whipping.

That prominent government official, who, in one of his publications, declared Thomas Paine "a filthy little atheist," had his attention called to the misrepresentation. He was shown that the author-hero-of-the-revolution, was never a filthy person; that in stature he was two inches above the average man; and that instead of being an atheist he was the opposite, a very ardent theist.

He who boasts of his determination to give a "square deal" to all, though often importuned to do justice to the memory of Paine, continues to imitate the clam, and keeps his lips closed.

We note with pleasure a correspondent of the Truth Seeker has expressed his determination "to force a correction of the fiction, if he has to spend ten years in digging up the evidence."

A now deceased Kansas journalist, in attendance on a press association of his state related the fact that when inexperienced as an editor, and just entering on his new task, he was told to never make a correction; that on the contrary, he should repeat the old lie with added force. Many journalists do this, and it seems probable the government official mentioned is of this school; but if so he should cease to harp on a "square deal."

A Terrible Mother.

A mother over there in Rockford, Ill., having three boys, she allowed them and their companions to play on the beautiful lawn. A neighboring woman expressed regret to see the grass trampled on and the roots destroyed. The good mother replied: "I am raising men, not hay." The result is reported, she has three sons who would be ornaments in any society.

"Boys will be boys wherever they be," is the refrain of an old-time ballad, but the place for them, particularly at night, is under the watchful eye of a loving mother. That mother who guards the adolescent period of her sons with the same zealous care she does her daughters will be saved a world of sorrow in later years.

The discovery of the true, and the practice of the good, are the two worthiest objects of philosophy.—Voltaire.

Let none of you treat his brother in a way he himself would dislike to be treated.—Mohammedan.

Progress Everywhere.

It was only a few years ago when our principal colleges and universities were almost universally under church control, and were conducted in its interest, clergymen generally filling the professors' chairs. And their main duties consisted in qualifying persons for the ministry. As education has become more general, new subjects have been added from time to time to the curriculum until now every branch of learning is taught where theology only held a few poorly filled chairs.

Brown University, in Rhode Island, is an old institution under Baptist management. It has gradually outgrown its swaddling clothes until it has petitioned the legislative authority to amend its charter so as to make it non-sectarian. It is said there is a mercenary motive underlying this desired revision of its charter. It does not matter. Its usefulness will be largely increased by the change.

The Baptists have usually been classed with the most bigoted of the Christian sects, but we have observed through all the years the preachers were engaged in trying to get God in the Constitution, with the final object to unite Church and State, the Baptists have been with the opposition. They probably still remember of the Baptist whipping and expulsion from Massachusetts during colonial days, culminating in the founding and settlement of Providence, Rhode Island, by Roger Williams, in 1636. Williams' chief offence consisted in declaring the civil magistrate is bound to give equal protection to every form of religious faith.

Our Pigmy Ancestors.

The armor of the knights of the middle ages is too small for their modern descendants. Hamilton Smith records that two Englishmen of average dimensions found no suit large enough to fit either of them in the great collection of Samuel Meyrick. The head of the oriental saber will not admit the English hand, nor the bracelet of the Kaffir warrior the English arm. The swords found in Roman tumuli have handles inconveniently small, and the great medieval two-handed sword is now supposed to have been used only for one or two blows at the first onset. The statements made by Homer, Aristotle and Vitruvius represent six feet as a high standard for full-grown men, and the irrefutable evidence of ancient doorways, bedsteads and tombs proves the average size of the race certainly to have diminished in the modern days. —The Hospital.

It was only a few years ago, figures based on enlistments in European armies for a considerable period, showed the stature was gradually diminishing, and, continuing at the same rate, the race was destined to become pigmies. These later figures, based on armor, swords, door-ways, tombs, seem to establish an opposite fact. Physiologists have demonstrated that persons reared in limestone regions attain a greater height and larger bone., than those reared in soft water regions, just as hens deprived of an abundance of phosphate of lime, give us eggs with very thin shells, and sometimes no shells at all.

All Things to All Men.

An old Georgian, recently deceased, who, when he had finished reading the Bible the third time by course, is reported by a friend to have said:

"Anything you wish to prove on any subject, or any side of a question, can be proved by the Bible."

The Georgia octogenarian was not the only person who made the same discovery. It is only the interested priest and his ignorant dupe, who has brass enough in his make-up, who dares claim "The book is inspired by God from kiver to kiver'." A sectarian book so full of contradictions would have no standing in the literary world.

Quotations From Thomas Paine.

A continual circulation of lies among those who are not much in the way of having them contradicted, will in time pass for truth; and the crime lies not in the believer but the inventor.

Eloquence may strike the ear, and the language of sorrow draw forth the tear of compassion, but nothing can reach the heart that is steeled with prejudice.

I love the man who can smile at trouble, who can gather strength from distress, and grow brave by reflection.

It is the business of little minds to shrink; but he whose heart is firm, and whose conscience approves his conduct, will pursue his principles unto death.

The Scheme Was a Defective One.

A colored Baptist preacher down in Alabama, whose brother is condemned to death for murder, requests to be hanged in place of his brother, giving as a reason, he is prepared to die, and is sure of heaven; whereas the brother is not prepared for the awful change.

The state, not being in the vicarious business, had no authority to punish the innocent in place of the guilty, so the criminal will have his own neck pulled.

It takes a good orthodox churchman to believe his God was so good as to accept the suffering of his son on a cross for the sins of the world, provided the sinner will believe Jesus died for him.

Heart keeping is the secret of happy housekeeping.—Anon.

SPIRITUALISM.

Of What Benefit to Humanity Is It?

You who are professedly leaders and teachers; you whose names appear with prominence in each issue of the Spiritualistic press, whose sayings and utterances are ever before he public as supporters and expounders of what is termed the Philosophy of Spiritualism, are you able and willing to answer a simple question?

The question may seem too simple to some of you to call for your answer, and yet, it is firmly believed, were such answer to be made, intelligently, clearly, and with truth's convincing explanation, much good would be accomplished.

What is Spiritualism understood to be, as to modern meaning?

Is it not based on the claim that the real being, the man and woman of humanity, is a soul, an invisible ego, dwelling within the physical body, and that when death of the body occurs, this soul enters a new sphere, a new condition or realm, whence, as a possibility and as a fact, it can and does return to earth, manifesting itself to "sensitives," at least, and making itself known to and entering into communication with, through media, the children of earth life?

Is not this substantially the basis of what is known as Spiritualism?

If not correct, what IS Spiritualism?

These questions are made solely for the purpose of obtaining an unquestionably true and certain definition of the term.

The answer being presumably in substantial accord with the definition which the question implies, then, as set out in the caption to this article: "Of what benefit to humanity is it?"

The writer hereof recognizes no religion higher than Truth, and therefore feels bound to no creed, no sect or ism, except so far as the same represents Truth only, and then it is not the outward form, but the truth within deemed worthy of real consideration. The vehicle temporarily carrying the truth can but be viewed as of relative and minor importance.

For the purposes of this article, personal belief not making a fact of what is not a fact, and vice versa, let it be frankly admitted that spirit return, and communion with spirits departed from earth life, may not truthfully be gainsaid, and then the question is solemnly asked of you as to what benefit a knowledge of and the existence of such fact is to humanity.

Many there are, learned, and of prominence and standing in the creedal churches which they represent, who do not deny the possibility of spirit return and communion with them, but in the making of the admission they hasten to say that such spirits are of evil only, and they warn humanity, and especially their own following, not to have anything to do with Spiritualism lest most grave detrimental results follow to themselves.

A certain cult representative of occult teachings, and of not an insignificant standing in the world of thought of to-day, claiming Truth as the only thing sought after, and devoid of any sectarianism, through its representative head says that it "does not teach or endorse hypnotism, OR ANY PSYCHIC PRACTICES; but on the contrary, protests against these and points out the terrible dangers attending them. It asserts most emphatically that they do not lead to true knowledge, nor to a true understanding of life.

What have you teachers and expounders of Spiritualism to say in answer to the foregoing two objectors?

You will concede that to those who are yet in the primary school of spiritual thought, such positive assertions on the part of Spiritualism's opponents, leave room for uncertainties, and act as a deterrent to timid seekers.

In line with kindly and dutiful act toward such, will you not give an answer to the question: of what benefit Spiritualism is to humanity, and let such answer be generally published to the world?

Fraternally and sincerely,
P. O. CHILSTROM.

Startling Discoveries.

According to the press reports, some of the preachers are making some startling discoveries of late. One of them has discovered that Heaven is located on the Star Alcyone, and Hell is located in the Sun. How he found it out is not known, but we presume it was revealed by his inner consciousness.

And now comes the Rev. S. S. Hilscher, who, on The Chautauqua platform at Waterloo, Iowa, assailed the prevalent conception of the devil. He pictured him as a beautiful, seductive personage, with subtle qualities which attract rather than repel. No horns, hoofs, or spiked tail are visible in his picture. He declared his belief in a personal devil, who, through his blandishments, exerted a powerful influence secondary only to that of God.

This brings up again the query, who made this beautiful devil? Did God make him knowing what he would do, and the "powerful influence" for evil he would exert?

And since he is such a wicked devil, and exerts such a powerful influence in opposition to God and so destructive to humanity, why does not God kill him and put an end to his pernicious influence? What a "God's mercy" that would be to mankind—wouldn't it?

However, under the influence of modern thought, and especially the influence of Modern Spiritualism, many preachers of the more progressive sort, are discovering that there is no Devil, no Hell, no Heaven nor God of the old orthodox type.

Heathen Philosophy.

Since it is possible that thou mayest depart from life this very moment, regulate every act and thought accordingly. But to go away from among men, if there are Gods, is not a thing to be afraid of? for the Gods will not involve thee in evil.—Marcus Aurelius.

Correction does much, but encouragement does more.—Goethe.

Ignorance the Parent of Popular Ideas

Had there been no volcano with a sulphurous flame, there would have been no hell for the preacher to threaten sinners with. Is it not probable the optical illusion of the mirage, common to observers wandering in desert regions, first gave rise to the idea of a heaven just above the clouds? If not a New Jerusalem what was it? Philosophers in Bonaparte's army, when in Egypt, about a hundred years ago, were the first to explain how the natural phenomena were produced. Captain Scoresby, sailing in the polar regions in 1822, was horrified to see an inverted ship sailing in the air, but he soon discovered it was the reflection of his father's ship 30 miles away.

Off With the Hats.

A Kansas editor advances the following convincing argument as a reason why women should take off their hats in church:

"Ladies should take off their hats in church. No preaching can inspire a man who is looking into a lopsided aggregation of dead birds, stuffed weasels, chameleon skins, ribbons, beads, sticks, straws, corn tassels and thistle-down. It makes a sinner feel as though he were lost in the wilderness."

After the Devil Dodgers.

By their own confession the Devil Dodgers are perfectly useless. They take our money, but they do little else. Honesty would make them disband. But they will never do that. They will have to be cashiered or starved out by cutting off supplies. The real truth is, they never were useful. They were always parasites. They gained their living by false pretenses. They dodged an imaginary enemy. The Devil is played out in educated circles. Presently he will be laughed at by everybody. Then the people will dismiss the priests, and there will be an end of Devil-Dodgers.—G. W. Frost.

Much of the religion to-day is only respect for the religion of the past.—Investigator.

A fool in revolt is infinitely wiser than the philosopher forging a learned apology for his chains.—Rossitter.

TELLING THE FUTURE.

Medium's Prophecy Came True—Inherits Fortune of Long-Missing Father.

In the remarkable fulfillment of a prophecy of a medium, Mrs. Helen Carroll, wife of S. W. Carroll, employee in the St. James Hotel, Denver, Col., has inherited a large fortune from the father, Thomas Moran, missing for more than fourteen years.

A short time ago Mrs Carroll, who suffers from heart trouble, took treatment from a medium on Curtis Street. At that time the medium predicted she would receive a large fortune in the near future through the death of a near relative, living not far from Denver. Mrs. Carroll paid no attention to the prediction, for she knew of no relative possessing any considerable means.

A few days ago, while out at Manhattan Beach, she saw in The Post a brief notice of the death of Thomas Moran in Douglas, Wyo. Thinking it might be her missing father, Mrs. Carroll had her husband telegraph to Douglas. They had no idea Mr. Moran was a man of wealth, and their intention was to see that he was properly buried, if the relationship was established.

What was their surprise to learn that Moran had not only left considerable property, but had willed it all to his favorite daughter, Helen, now Mrs. Carroll.

Mr. Carroll has employed an attorney to look after his wife's interests, although no legal difficulties are anticipated. They reside in the Rosslyn annex, Welton street.

Moran was crushed beneath the wheels of a heavy wagon so badly one of his legs had to be amputated. On recovering from the anaesthetic the shock of realizing his leg had been amputated killed him.

At the time of the disappearance fourteen years ago, Mr. Moran lived in a small town in Kansas. He went to Chicago, where he built a number of the World's Fair buildings. Later he came West, where all trace of him was lost.—Denver Post.

MOST REMARKABLE.

Spirit Hands Painted Her Daughter's Portrait.

A spirit picture of her daughter, Minnie, is in the possession of Mrs. Louise E. Sackett of Springfield, and she tells a wonderful story of how the oil painting was made by spirit hands.

Her claim is borne out by the assertion of Dr. C. W. Amerige, once a practicing physician of Springfield, who declares that he witnessed the appearance of the painting on canvas, without the aid of human hands.

Mrs. Sackett and her husband, Denison Sackett, are both Spiritualists and the leaders of the Church of the Spirit, which meets in their home in Andrew street. Their daughter, Minnie, was the wife of Dexter Graves at the time of her death. The instance of the painting of her portrait is told by Dr. Amerige as follows:

"On the evening of June 21, 1898, I sat with the Campbell Brothers of Lily Dale to see if I could receive a portrait for Mrs. Sackett of Springfield, who could not possibly come to Lily Dale, owing to her ill health. Before I left Springfield for Lily Dale, Mrs. Sackett gave me a pair of gloves that had been worn by her deceased daughter while on earth, and whose portrait she desired; she also gave me a sealed letter which was not opened until after the portrait was received, I, myself, opening the letter.

"I thoroughly examined the canvas and magnetized it myself. The elder Mr. Campbell pinned the gloves upon the canvas, which never left our sight. I should here mention a strange circumstance in regard to the gloves. After having sat a short time we noticed a peculiar and bright light emanating from the gloves and they seemed to rise from the canvas again and again. We then noticed a faint outline of the face and gradually it grew fuller and fuller; another strange thing we noticed was bright flashes of light dashing across the canvas that played more fully about the forehead than any other part. I know it was impossible that any artificial light could have been introduced while I sat with Mr. Campbell, holding his hands and facing the canvas in a lighted room.

"A wonderful and convincing test here occurred. The spirit, speaking through the guide, Alice, gave her name in full, which was unknown to any of us, and said her favorite flowers were roses, and desired some roses to be placed near the canvas, which was done. While we were sitting there we saw the perfect resemblance of the roses come on the bosom and in the hair of the spirit portrait. I should state they were perfect facsimiles of the roses we had placed near the canvas.

"To please her mother, she said she would have some lace painted over her shoulders like she had made before she passed away, and it would be recognized by her mother. She also said her mother had the lace she had made over a picture at home.

"There were many other tests given which we knew nothing of at the time; but after writing Mrs. Sackett, she informed me that the roses, the lace and the names given were perfectly correct.

Another strange thing among the many tests given was: The Guide, Alice, spoke of a cat, described it perfectly and kept telling the cat, which she called Pussy, not to get too near the canvas; she also asked one she called Louie to take the cat away. I have since learned from Mrs. Sackett that the description of the cat was perfect and it was the favorite cat of her deceased daughter. The name Louie is the name of a gentleman the deceased was engaged to; he, too, has passed away. All these facts were unknown to any of us until I had written mentioning them to Mrs. Sackett, and which facts were all confirmed by her.

"The portrait is in oils and perfect, the coloring exquisite; it was some days before it was dry enough to handle with safety—Boston Post.

WOMEN AND ANGELS.

"Real Angels" in Chicago—Clubwomen Tell Why They Will Will Get Wings.

Chicago women can become angels. They are just as eligible for wings as men, according to Chicago club women.

"Halos" for Women.

In fact, they are even wearing "halos" now in Paris. The fashionable halo is a slender circlet of gold or filagree silver attached to a back comb, which holds it in place on the head.

The halos are of various designs, some being made of precious stones, diamonds, turquoises and pearls, and some of gold, enriched with fine traceries. The halo floats above the waved hair, and from the front its fastening point is not perceptible.

How will the halo adjust itself in Chicago—or Chicago to the halo? Just what is to be expected is a question. For Paris, having started to borrow from heaven—earthly things being already passed, we can expect to see ourselves dressed, as saints by the new year, with halos atop of marcelled curls, and sandals, a la Mary Garden, on our feet.

Listen to what the local femininity has to say about the declaration of the ministers at the Methodist meeting at Chester Heights, Pa., that there could be no female angels:

"The idea that women cannot be angels is quite ridiculous," declared Mrs. Grower. "The proof is that women are angels now—I mean the majority of them—and they undoubtedly will go on being angels forever. Here in Chicago, and all over the country are plenty of women who are angels—all the men have to do is to use their eyes and brains to see that. I don't think the sex, therefore, need have any cause for worry over the news from Pennsylvania."

Mrs. John Worthy, chairman of the art and literature department of the Chicago Woman's Club, also rallied to the support of her sex.

"It may be that no records exist of female angels," said she, "but that is no proof that female angels do not exist.

"I don't know whether any people at all will become angels, but if we are to do so then I am sure women have quite as good an opportunity as men. There certainly will be a large representation of women among the angels. I do not make any claims as to which sex will be in the majority, but some women will be there without doubt. I see no cause for pessimism over the angelic future of my sex.

Female Saints? Oh, Yes!

It should not be forgotten that there are plenty of records of female saints even if records as to female angels are lacking. Besides that, many women are saints even on earth to-day."—Chicago American.

International Peace From the Standpoint of the Higher Thought

Address by Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond at the "Circle International" The Hague, Holland, June 26, 1907.

Introductory Remarks by the Chairman.

Ladies and Gentlemen:—It is my pleasant task to introduce one whom you have seen here before on several occasions and some of you have heard on one or two occasions. It is a curious fact that you will find people whom everybody knows through great movements, and whom nobody knows outside of those movements.

I do not say that nobody knows Mrs. Cora Richmond at The Hague. Some of you do. But there are very few people who have any idea of the position which the lady who will address you holds and has long occupied in the United States of America. Pray do not mistake me in imagining that Mrs. Richmond is a politician. She has never, so far as I know, been in politics; has never been a candidate for president of the United States. The advantage of a monarchy over a republic you can appreciate here in Holland, because, as you know, your present sovereign is a queen, but in the lifetime of the oldest of you, who has come across a republic which allows a woman to be a president? I think that outside the range of politics in America there are great fields of work that are exceptional fields of thought and question—fields in whatever is extraordinary and new. How prodigal many Americans are in the production of new fields of thought. I sometimes feel when in America that one is not an American unless he be a native of Chicago or New York, or lives in one of those cities. I think, as a rule, a person in Chicago is quite as much interested in what goes on in Hindustan as in New York. In Chicago, which is a world in itself, Mrs. Richmond has held a high position for a long time. Mrs. Richmond belongs to those gifted mortals who are highly inspired or who have been reincarnated many times and acquired more knowledge than ordinary mortals, a more advanced mind. This being so, you may call it psychic, you may call it Spiritualistic, you may call it hypnotic—you may call it any name you like—the fact remains that certain persons can see and hear things that are impossible to ordinary people. Mrs. Richmond has several faculties which I do not possess Therefore I naturally feel in her presence, apart from the fact that she is a woman, that I am in the presence of a superior being.

Mrs. Cora Richmond has been, and now is, pastor of The Church of the Soul, in Chicago. She has been there—take a good look at her—a long time. She has been pastor of that church for thirty years, or rather she has been preaching to that congregation for thirty years. When I heard it I remarked, "you must have begun preaching when only ten years old." Mr. Richmond said: "That is true. Mrs. Richmond commenced her ministrations when only ten years old."

When speaking she is usually supposed to be in a trance. It is really a pleasant surprise to us that we are to have the chance of hearing this gifted lady. She has remained constant to her gift, in season and out of season, speaking the message that has been given her to tell. Whether conscious or unconscious, there has been the same unity of thought, the same directness of purpose in the same line of psychical expression.

Mrs. Richmond is here representing many of the advanced thoughts of America, bearing credentials from Spiritualistic associations and Higher Thought unions, which, with a short address she has presented in person to President Nelidoff. She is now to speak upon "The Higher Thought." What that is I do not know. I know very well what the lower is. I am sorry to say many people whom I meet, who think themselves very, very clever, dwell in the realm of the lower thought. You can easily distinguish one who is in this range of thought, because he always wishes to tell you of some delegates quarreling, or something against another delegate, until the "devil's to pay." But very soon Mrs. Richmond will speak to you upon the subject of "Universal Peace from the point of view of the Higher Thought." Therefore, in presenting the highest thought and ideals of the human mind and those higher planes to which human beings tend, in a measure must exalt mankind; without further introduction I will call upon Mrs. Richmond.

Address by Mrs. Richmond.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:

It certainly is not a holiday excursion that brings so many people together at the present moment in the name of peace. It has brought your present speaker and her husband nearly five thousand miles for AN IDEAL. Is it not an ideal instance that the best representatives of the nations of the earth convene without arms, without guards, without display of military force or power, even to profess, if that is all they will do, even to profess to desire the peace of the nations of the world? It is the psychological moment, the culmination of many years, of many centuries, of many thousands of years of the best thought of the human race. If we do not know what the "higher thought" is, then we are not representatives of the highest civilization of the world; for it is that which many recognize in the Sermon on the Mount; that which philosophers recognize in the highest thought of Plato; that which Emanuel Kant emphasized in his wonderful essay on the Day of Peace ("Eternal Peace"), that the time would come when all the nations of the earth would, by mutual agreement, determine on peace instead of war. But he further said, "this cannot occur until there is a federation of nations (i. e., organization for peace).

More than to the Peace Congress, to which we offered an address, not knowing whether it would be received or not, our thought was attracted thither to this International Circle, by the enthusiasm that Mr. Stead created when he said in America, in many councils and assemblies, "we want a moral force, a representation of the people, a representation of those who have the thought of peace, and will produce an effect upon the Congress."

We all recognize the power of human thought; we all recognize the influence that the human mind possesses, and we all recognize the larger influence of a combination of minds upon those who are carrying forward the work of the world. We do not know how far the members of the Peace Congress, or Conference may be susceptible to the psychology of peace, but we do know in the welcome we have received here, in the discussions of ideas by brilliant minds from all parts of the world, that this center of internationalism will prove a great psychological strength in the interest of peace, and that that which is said here from day to day will produce its influence, which will continue to grow long after the other congress has dispersed.

The underlying principles of peace are not in the discussions of the lessening of armies and navies, not only in reducing the horrors of war, so called, because war in any shape is horrible. The killing of human beings by one nation and by the other is the most horrible thing that can be. But there are states of war in times of so-called peace. There are oppressions that are as terrible as war. We hope before this International Circle shall be dispersed, Mr. Chairman, that many of those great problems that cannot be touched by the Congress yonder, but can be discussed elsewhere, will be perpetuated and agitated until the real underlying causes of war shall be removed.

It is our belief and our thought that there is nothing greater in the overcoming of war between nations than that which one of the greatest generals has said: "The largest conquest is self-conquest." When individuals shall be able to govern themselves they may be able to govern societies and States. Internationalism comes when people have learned that the highest attributes are the governing attributes. We are nearer, we hope, in all the world to the Sermon on the Mount than when it was uttered nearly two thousand years ago. We are nearer to the divine utterances of Plato than when they were uttered. The world grows by degrees; its ultimate proposition is to find the great heritage of the human race. The brutal instinct first holds sway, then the intellect must hold its sway, then comes that which is highest, which some call spirit and some call soul—the DIVINE INTELLIGENCE that is in every human being. When that begins its sway we shall find that these higher attributes are to govern our daily existence. When we shall fully realize that these higher attributes are to dominate the world ultimately, we shall be able to bring such thought to bear upon the legislatures in republics, upon parliaments in monarchies, upon all governing people, that they will realize that the people have the right to the largest inheritance of humanity; not only the right to self-government when they are ready, but the right to be governed by these higher and diviner qualities. That must come by education; that must come as the result of unfoldment; that must come when genius is here by inspiration.

The truth is, that it is a fitting thing that a millionaire should offer to build a "Peace-Temple" at The Hague. Mr. Chairman, the millionaire has made his money by wresting it from the people by the success of providing steel and ironclad ships of war. When a millionaire shall return to the people some of the wealth secured from them, he has developed that which our chairman says no editor has developed: a conscience, and wishes to make such restoration of "conscience money" that will scarcely atone for the wresting of these millions of money from the people by taxation for war and the destruction of people. He cannot restore the lives lost in the Spanish-American war; he cannot restore the lives lost in the Boer war, and he cannot by any process give back to the people that which has been wrested from them because of these wars. But he can help with the paltry means at his command to restore, somewhat, the inheritance of the people through the belief that humanity is not, after all, totally depraved.

We have said that there are other underlying causes of war than war itself. War is the outgrowth of individual and collective power and its oppression. Perhaps one of the fundamental causes of war, and one which even now threatens disturbances in America, and possibly in England, and throughout the world, is that which many people hesitate to speak of, but which unquestionably is the next great question of the hour: the INDUSTRIAL WAR. When we consider that wealth is the cause of oppression; that in America we have no kings, we have no titles, we have no "classes" that should be lordly one over the other; but we have our millionaires, and a country that can produce millionaires is liable to suffer from millionaires. A country that PERMITS millionaires is liable, perhaps, in the future to receive from those millionaires that which we have already experienced: oppression. Class instinct inheres, though it is not a dogma of our government, and when this prevails it is oppression, because the results prove that it DOES OPPRESS. When kings and queens, titles and wealth, armies, or whatever it is that causes children to go down into the ground to work under age; whatever it is that causes them to go into the mills when they should go to school and into the playground; whatever it is that causes women to leave their little children to whatever accidents may occur, to go out to earn their bread, and sometimes they cannot earn it by any possibility; whatever it is that oppresses BY ANY SYSTEM is a state of warfare—like that which is slumbering in Russia—not slumbering, for it awakens the revolution, which is the next question in Russia. It may not burst forth as it once did in England in the form of "bread riots" until such far-sighted men as Richard Cobden and John Bright brought the great question before Parliament and the subject was settled there before there was war, in the abolition of the "corn laws."

The evolution of the people to a higher standard of human thought and liberty is by such processes as shall uplift "even the least of these little ones." They are to make up the States of the future; they are to constitute those to whom you will turn ultimately for the fashioning and bearing forward of your laws.

It is not simply among the so-called "higher classes" that the education and bearing forward of governments is to rest in the future. In America we have the experiment of those public schools that admit of people and the children of people passing on and on to the highest position. We have Abraham Lincoln as a representative that all nations look to with the greatest and most devoted reverence for his worship of law and liberty, his scholarship, his true genius, and he sprung from the common people.

You do not know when or how the great prophets of the future will spring forth. But it is the thought of the societies we represent here, and that we come to represent to this International Circle more than to the Congress over there (the "Peace Congress"), that the prevailing power in the world should be, and is, the power of mind over matter; the power of the spirit over the body; the power of kindness, good feeling and fraternity over diplomacy, hatred, scorning and malice.

We think the time is coming in the history of the world when these higher attributes of human nature shall be more and more obeyed and strengthened, when we have the right to enter into that inheritance that places us in possession of the best and highest gifts of the world.

This wonderful country to which you are summoned, and in which many of you live, has been rescued from the ocean, and from the encroaching rivers by patience, by the unfolding of a system that redeems it from the wild waves and devastation of nature. Is not human nature as capable of being saved—saved from the great ocean of human passions, and the desolating rivers of human ambition? Individual pride and individual avarice have been allowed to deluge the lands with their waters (of blood)—waters of hatred and strife. Will not the same patience of philosophers, teachers, sages—those who lead the world in human thought—at last rescue humanity from the terrible sea of these great disturbances?

Must we always find retaliation for a wrong the only remedy? Must we always turn against the highest and best, merely because others turn toward us in anger? If "a soft answer turneth away wrath;" if it is true that there is greater power in good than in ill—as we all believe; if it is true that whatever the name, we may worship the same infinite God; whether we are Parsees, Brahmins, Buddhists or Christians, we recognize among us all this Infinite Intelligence that guides and governs the universe—is it not true that we are all brothers?

At the "Parliament of Religions" held in Chicago at the time of the Columbian Exposition there in 1893, held in commemoration of the discovery of America, it was found when people came up from India, from China, from Japan, from all the nations of the earth, they all agreed on the fundamental principles of religion: that God is the Infinite, by whatever name; that human lives are fraternities; that there is one God, one humanity, one divine truth of universal brotherhood. It made the small barriers of nationalities and of creeds sink into insignificance before the higher and more perfect unfoldment of the fraternity of souls.

We could but think when the Dean of Ripon was here and pronounced at last the words of peace that the church has hesitated for so many years to pronounce, that the honor was conferred upon the church, not upon "peace." But some of the best church people say, "Oh, I have sacrificed so much for such a truth, so much for the cause of peace. Friends, can we ever make a sacrifice to truth? Is it not forever an honor to stand in the public places and declare the highest that we know? Is it not our blessed privilege to be near when peace shall crown our thoughts and lives; when love shall uplift humanity to the recognition of man's relations to all men? No one can feel that it is a sacrifice to pay tribute unto Truth.

When the Anti-Slavery Society, founded for the abolition of chattel slavery in the United States of America, was to be disbanded because of the results of the terrible war that brought the liberation of four millions of slaves, someone said at the last meeting of the Anti-Slavery Society, "slavery could not have been abolished but for us." Wendell Phillips said, "slavery could have been abolished without us, but we could not afford to be outside this movement; so we must have spoken here as we have."

Beloved friends, peace will come if we are not here; if this conference of the International Circle were not held, as the brighter and more luminous of the two. Peace will ultimately come, but we cannot afford to be out of this movement. We cannot afford to lag behind our fellows. When the great work is going on we cannot afford to be idle.

We know the speech (born of the thought) that goes out in your public meetings does more to bring about this result than all the enactments of the Peace Congress with its thoughts and suggestions of disarmament or reduction of armies and navies.

Let us be more intent on celebrating the great events of peace than those of war. If it shall transpire that the enactments of the Peace Conference shall be favorable to peace; if there be any agreement for permanent arbitration, or parliament of nations, let that be celebrated as a double peace; let the world bring its songs, its flowers and its little children without the accompaniments of war.

We have in the United States of America the celebration of the 4th of July as the result of that war brought about by that little tea party in Boston harbor. We celebrate the 4th of July with pomp and pride, the booming of cannons and the marching of soldiers, and the telling of our great victory over England. I like to celebrate the day of National Independence, but let us have no more of the dismal horrors of war; let not any sounds of guns be heard; let us celebrate, if it is recorded, the intelligence of the nation. Let us inculcate in schools and in universities, like that which Mr. Stead addressed last evening, the value of intelligence in speaking of the peace of the world. Value the cultivation of the fraternal spirit; value the obliteration forever, if possible, of the memories of those horrible events in history that recall the use of arms and the butchery of innocent women and children, and the oppression that is the result of war.

Poets, philosophers, painters, orators and presidents alike agree as to the horrors of war.

Then let us all agree to put forth every endeavor, and all our best and highest intelligence to that end, that the beautiful ideal state shall come pictured by Victor Hugo, who said: "The time will come when you France, you Germany, England, Russia, Austria, Holland, Italy, Japan, America, all you nations of the world will clasp hands around the globe as a sisterhood of nations." So may we pray, so may we work, that all our words shall speed that day.

Meanwhile, let the governments, the diplomats and congresses meet and take such careful steps as their fear of each other will permit. But we are not afraid of each other; we can speak the best thought that we know, even if we criticise one another as to methods, the agreement is that the object is the same.

The beauty, loveliness and divine order of the universe require that when the periods of storms and tempests are over, when these human passions shall have spent their force and fury, when all that is possible shall have been done in the name of war, there will rise nations like that which our country could have been if it had had power—moral power—enough to have been the advance nation in peace.

We deplore the tendency of our republic to be a great "world power" by the force of arms; we deplore most fervently the tendency to build up a great warlike nation; in fact, we deplore a standing army in a country where every man would spring to the cause of humanity if required. But while we deplore these things, we still know that fundamentally if the other nations were agreed, there would be the basis of peace in the thought of every statesman that now seems to desire war.

We must look to the future while working in the present, and we must understand that there is no high hope, no dream of poet or philosopher, no prediction of prophet, nothing in the world that has ever been thought by humanity for the unfoldment of the human race that cannot and will not be fulfilled.

* * * * *

I have dreamed—and all these dreams come true—
That somewhere, and sometime, over all the earth,
The blessed fraternity shall be in view
For which the great Christ-life had its birth.

And dreaming, there appeared from out the sky
Wondrous harbingers of light and love,
That said, a day of peace is drawing nigh,
A power in which mankind its light can prove.
Through this prophecy all souls may be,
At last a portion of that blest fraternity.

I dreamed that over all the earth
Nations linked together in one accord
Shall be, breathing the spirit of higher worth,
And blending in Freedom's perfect word.
But not without Justice can this thing be,
And Justice cannot come devoid of Liberty.

MT. PLEASANT PARK CAMP.

The Chautauqua People Praise the Camp Grounds at Clinton, Ia. — Excellent Prospects for the Camp Season.

The Clinton Chautauqua having just closed a very interesting and successful session of ten days here, are loud in praise of our camp grounds, and have done much to fell the walls of prejudice which, for some reason, has stood so long as a partial barrier between the park and the Clinton people. Many have learned for the first time that such beautiful grounds are so near their door, thus proving that the world is full of beauty if only we will look for it. Could they learn from the motto of a Woman's club—"nothing that pertains to humanity is foreign to me"—they would indicate a liberal policy and feel glad they have found us. In fact I think this is true of the Chautauqua people, for they have spoken for the use of the grounds for next season, and propose holding a two week's session.

Many of the old cottagers are already on the grounds, and new ones are coming every day. The indications are that a glorious session is just before us. We are sorry to announce however, that Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond was obliged to cancel her engagement with us, owing to her journey across the water, but we feel that by presenting instead; Hon. H. D. Barrett, President of the N. S. A., we lose none of our prestige and interest. A brilliant orator, a Spiritualist to the back-bone, Mr. Barrett has won a warm place in the hearts of all who love loyalty, discipline and principle.

The management decided to offer to the mediums the use of the pavilion for the 4 o'clock message services this season, thus giving wider scope to the mediums than we could possibly do by engaging them for special dates. Many have heretofore requested such a change, and the opportunity is now extended to them. This will be the season when all will have the privilege of touching the heart-strings of humanity and make music in places that are dark. This will be the season for all to bring some message of love from the world of Truth. This is the season to stand shoulder to shoulder, brothers and sisters, rally, strangers and friends to the support of our Association, and help make Mt. Pleasant Park second to none other in beauty and accommodations, that the truth of our eternal progression may be proclaimed unto all the nation. Let us send broadcast the spirit of love, to bless and prove a savior to others.

And while the angels have looked in wonder at the turbulent waves of unrest for the past twelve or twenty months, we can at last "gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." As I lift mine eyes and look out upon the beautiful lawn in front of the hotel, everything is green, blooming and sparkling. The air is cleared of dust and haze by the recent showers, and the atmosphere is delightful. I take it as a sign of the times—not visionary, but literally true.

Those wishing to know more of this camp, which opens July 28, and closes August 25, should write for pamphlets, addressing Pine Grove Camp-Meeting.

To the Editor:—I wish to call the attention of your readers to the work of the Connecticut Spiritualist Camp-meeting Association at Pine Grove, Niantic, Conn.

Pine Grove is the name of the Association grounds, and it lies on the broad and picturesque Niantic river, about a mile inland from Long Island Sound. Here we have a summer community of 115 cottages of all sizes, and nearly the entire ground is covered by a well-grown pine grove. The Niantic river lies to the east of the grounds, and on the north is a narrow stream, or strait, that widens out, forming quite a large cove which bounds the grounds on the west, thus giving water on three sides. The river proper (more of a bay than a river) is a mile wide opposite our grounds, and sets in from the sound about five miles, affording ideal boating and fishing waters, while the beaches in some places sandy, and free from weeds, afford splendid still water bathing; but it's salt, just the same, as salt as the briny deep.

Frequent excursions are made to the neighboring beaches and to Block Island, Fisher's Island, and other places in and along the sound. I enter into these details to let our western brothers and sisters who may wish to visit the eastern camp in August, know that this, one of the oldest and one of the least advertised of the New England camps, is one of the most beautiful and restful in the Eastern States, and to suggest that they or some of them include Pine Grove in their itinerary. There are no hotels in the grove, but cottages can be cheaply rented, or rooms secured from cottagers at very low prices. It is not a grab-all summer resort. There is a large pavilion for dancing, and a restaurant where meals are served at ordinary prices. There is no show or ostentation, and no one goes there to make money.

Our meetings are held on Sunday in the open air, where the audience is seated on a hill-side, under the pines. Evening meetings are held in a small building owned by the Ladies' Aid, connected with the Association. This building is a cottage which was purchased by the Aid last year, all thrown into one room, extended in length, and a wide porch built on two sides.

Our camp season is eight weeks, beginning on the second Sunday in July, when there are five Sundays in the month, and through the month of August.

During the present month, Mrs. Sadie Hand, a lecturer and psychic who is rapidly becoming recognized as one of our most energetic, conscientious, as well as most able women workers, has been serving us, and too much cannot be said in praise of her work. She has endeared herself not only to the Spiritualists and advanced thought people on the grounds, but to many of the non-Spiritualists, of whom we have our fair proportion.

During August the following are to serve us: Sunday, August 4 Edgar W. Emerson; August 11, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham; August 18, and probably 23, Wellman C. Whitney.

As several of the camps do not begin their lecture season until August, visitors can spend a few days if they choose in each, but we do wish to put in a bid for Pine Grove.

I. R. SANFORD.

VALE ET AVE!

I've thought my little thought,
And said my say.
My little fight is fought,—
And now, away!

O, World, with steady keel
Traverse the wave.
Long may your timbers feel
The pulls I gave!

Feeble indeed they were,
Yet, as we are,
Our weakest breath may stir
The furthest star.

I've done a little harm,
A little good,—
But never has my arm
Done half it would.

Good bye, dear Mother Earth,
We've loved each other.
Now for another birth,
Another mother.

The secret sense I see
Of shroud and tomb.
The womb is for me
Another womb.

And though the fates may bless,
And though they damn,
I never can be less
Than what I am.

AFFLICTIONS OF THE EYE

Successfully Treated By "ACTINA"

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no risk or necessity of experimenting, as many people report having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Mrs. T. F. Moyle, Waterford, Wis., writes:—"About two years ago I was taken with Iritis in both eyes and nearly went blind and it was thought an operation would be necessary. I sent for an Actina last April and it has taken all the inflamation out and my eyes are now well.

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept 3121, 311 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

A NEW CATECHISM

BY M. M. MANGASARIAN.

Fourth Edition—Six Additional Chapters—260 Pages, Bound in Cloth, $1.00.—Containing Likeness of the Author.

"A New Catechism" has enjoyed a remarkable sale both in America and England. George Jacob Holyoake, in his introduction to the English edition of "A New Catechism," says:

"A New Catechism" is the boldest, the brightest, the most varied and informing of any work of the kind extant. The principal fields of human knowledge, which the churches have fenced round with supernatural terrors, the Catechism breaks into, cherishing what is fair and showing what is deformed. The notes, of which there are many, both ancient and contemporary, are as striking as the text. The book is a cyclopedia of theology and reason in a nutshell.

"NO BEGINNING."

An Excellent Work for Thinkers.

This book, "No Beginning," is by William H. Maple. The Arena says of it: "The argument is unanswerable. Free Thought Ideal says: "We found it full of glittering thoughts for thinkers, and the very death warrant of Christian superstition shines upon its pages." Price 75 cents.

Mrs. M. L. Fields of Berlin, Wis., once an old-time Spiritualist of Chicago, is visiting in the city, and called at Spiritualist headquarters—The Progressive Thinker office.

Georgia Gladys Cooley started for Lake Brady July 27. She is soon to be in Meadville, Pa., Lily Dale, and Clinton Camps. Not busy, but just working all the time, with little signs of any real needed rest. But she says the world seems to need and desire her labors, and she sees no better way to put in the earth-time. There is little time to be lost by any of our good mediums.

Mary C. Pierson writes from Spring Hill, Kansas: "To all those who are contemplating a trip to one of the Spiritualist Camp meetings, you can find no place more inviting than Forest Park, at Ottawa, Kan. The Ottawa Camp commences August 16, and closes 26, with the best of workers and best of mediums. Come one and all to Ottawa and enjoy a ten day's outing in one of Nature's garden of Edens, and be fed with the heavenly manna. There on the banks of a beautiful stream of water boating and fishing can be enjoyed by all. There are good accommodations on the grounds for eating and sleeping, but be sure and bring sheets and blankets, and enjoy a regular camp outing. All welcome to the beautiful Forrest Park."

Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner lately returned to Chicago. She has been in Texas for several months, and did a most excellent work there. She expects to go to Arizona soon to visit her son.

Ferd. C. Suhrer writes: "With the opening of fall and winter services of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists at 406 Ogden avenue, corner Robey st., in Hygea Hall, several new and unique features will be introduced for the first time in Chicago, which will be of vast benefit to those participating. Everyone will be invited to take part and receive the benefits. It is not the policy of the Fraternal Order to depend on luck or convenience for its talent, and as in the past, when we advertise the appearance of a noted speaker or any other prominent worker, arrangements have been completed for their services. We as Spiritualists, should not be unmindful of the fact that there are people in Chicago planning daily the downfall of Spiritualism; by making it impossible for mediums to demonstrate. The officers of the Fraternal Order are also wide awake and watching pretty closely for any attempted hostile legislation. What would you do without a meeting to attend—no circles, and no mediums? You can help to prevent this by joining an established organization, as an organized body has more prestige and influence than any number of individuals. Our membership numbers nearly 100 now, and we are anxious to secure another 100 as soon as possible. Can't you see your way clear to send your name with $1.00, to Sister J. S. Adams, Financial Secretary, 1007 W. Harrison street We want to initiate another large class soon after our opening in October. Tell your friends about it also. Spiritualism has done much for you, has it not? What have you done for the cause of Spiritualism? Paid your way, perhaps, like hundreds of others, but dear reader, it takes work and constant planning to interest and satisfy the public and we need your dimes and doings. Come, add your strength to ours, and we will both be stronger. We have been asked not to abandon the Fraternal Camp idea by friends from downstate. Indeed we are planning every day and looking up statistics, etc., that will make the Fraternal Camp of Illinois the wonder of the Spiritualistic world. Your attention is again directed to the coming of Miss Elizabeth Harlow, Wednesday, August 28, who will lecture for us in Hygeia Hall, 406 Ogden ave., corner Robey street."

Mrs. May A. Price is assisting in the work at Lily Dale. Her eleven-year-old daughter, Ruth, is also assisting in her work, by giving clairvoyant tests, descriptions and names in seance work. Mrs. Price is open for engagements with different societies for platform work as lecturer and test medium. Ruth will assist in seance work with her mother. Address them at Lily Dale, N. Y.

Emma A. Ellis writes: "Thursday, July 18, the Band of Harmony's summer social met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fresness. The afternoon was spent in tea-cup readings and social converse. The hostess prepared the table in such a kind and loving way that all enjoyed it immensely. After supper, there were remarks by Mrs. Goodrich and Mrs. Peet, interspersed by a number of selections on the violin accompanied by piano; also piano duets. Owing to the warm weather the day's outing was shortened, with the promise of all to meet again and bring friends to the residence of Mrs. Montgomery, 5209 Chicago avenue, Thursday, August 1."

Mrs. M. J. Briggs writes from Decota, Cal.: "Enclosed you will find a one-dollar to renew my subscription to The Progressive Thinker. I was unfortunately one of the King Solomon's Mine victims, although I did not invest very much, $45; but even that money would be of benefit to me now. I am at the Masonic Home, and I am contented and happy. I enjoy the reading of your paper so much that I cannot get along without it. There are a few Spiritualists here. A lady medium and myself have our regular sittings twice a week, and we are satisfied that we are improving and hope to do some good, as several unhappy ones have already come to us and perhaps by talking to them we may be able to bring them into the light."

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

The following is from London, Eng., written by Mark Scott Rowland: "July 15, 1907.—I have duly received the several issues of The Progressive Thinker. Contents are most interesting. I am glad to note that you are courageous enough to exploit the doings of "Rev." Hugh R. Moore, inLos Angeles. Your course is to be highly commended and is in marked contrast with your contemporary, The Light of Truth (Untruth would be more appropriate.)

T. J. McFerron, Secretary, writes "Our noble young worker, John W. Ring, has been with us since the 26th of March, and it would be useless for me to say that he has worked all the time, for everyone who knows him is aware of the fact that he cannot be idle for a single day. He is surely doing a grand work for the First Spiritualist Society of San Diego; not only for the Society, but for the whole community, as he makes it a point to come in touch with all those who are seeking for the truth. He has on several occasions, by invitation, spoken to large assemblages of the Grand Army people, at their place of meeting, and in that way has aroused an interest in a great many who would not otherwise have availed themselves of an opportunity of hearing our Harmonial Philosophy. Brother Ring speaks for our society afternoon and evening of each Sunday, to large and appreciative audiences. August 4, will be his last for this engagement, as he is to give Harmony Grove Camp his services on the 11th of August, and then goes right on east to fill other engagement. We are making an effort to get him back with us for a part, at least, of the winter months. Our society has more than doubled in membership in the past 16 months. We had an election of officers on the 15th of July, at which there was a greater number of electors present than at any previous election in the history of the society. The officers elected are: President, C. A. Buss; vice-president, E. L. Nichelson, late of Seattle, now of San Diego; secretary, T. J. Mc Feron; treasurer, A. W. Belden, and Directors, Dr. W. H. Van Riper and Mrs. Lena Garner."

S. F. Moore writes from Arlington, Ohio: "Well, the so-called Light of Truth is dead. Now, what will the world do? The loss is irreparable! Where is any truth to be found now? Who or what will fling itself into the aching void and close up the mighty chasm that has been rent asunder in the cause of truth and honesty? Who will inspect and sort out the Spiritualists and tie them up in bundles with wool-twine and baby-ribbon, and label them according to their merit and true value? Echo answers, Who? Hoo! Hoo!! HOO!!!"

Mrs. Carl Blake writes from Erie, Pa.: "We have had Charles J. Barnes with us ten days. He is a splendid man, and a grand trumpet medium. He left this morning for camp at Grand Ledge, Mich."

Minnie Eastman Hanvey writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritual Society and the Golden Star Center have consolidated, and hereafter, beginning Sunday night, August 4, 1907, will hold their meeting in Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. Speaker for Sunday night, August 4, Nellie Kusserow. Services at 8 p. m. Watch for notice of mass meeting at Star Lodge Hall."

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale, President of the Spiritualists' Association of Texas, would like to hear from good test mediums and speakers who would like to come to Texas this fall and winter. Address her R. R. 5, Box 61, Ft. Worth Texas.

G. H. Brooks writes from Wauwatosa, Wis.: "I have had the pleasure of being home just ten days, after a long trip in the State in the interest of the State Society, and leave this morning, July 23, for Monroe Camp, where, on the 24th, we have a board meeting of the State officials to transact business of importance, and decide where we shall have our next convention. On the 30th I start for Lily Dale, where I am to speak on Sunday, August 4. I note in a late issue a letter from one bearing the same name of myself, George—H. Brooks," stating he is in Los Angeles, Cal. I have never had the pleasure of meeting my brother by the same name, but hope to some day, but many people think Geo. H. Brooks and G. H. Brooks are one and the same. Well, we are not. Many have have thought I was in California, but you see I am not, but here in Wisconsin, trying to do my work as best I can, do not always believe all you read, nor that Geo. H. Brooks is G. H. Brooks, for we are not one and I have no doubt he is glad that such is the case. I expect to remain right here awhile. What the future has in store for me the Lord only knows, and he won't tell."

C. M. Gage writes from Racine, Wis.: "It was my pleasure to hear a lecture, given July 27 before the Chautauquan Assembly, by Laura G. Fixen. "The Reality of the Unseen" was the subject of her discourse. She held the large and intellectual audience, from the first words to the last of the grand discourse. Many were there from the different churches of this city, but all agreed that she had given them food for thought that they well liked. She gave two lectures here before the W. C. T. U. of Racine. We hope to have Mrs. Fixen come again to our city, where she will be a welcome guest."

MARRIED—Mr. John D. Mullen and Miss Mabel Reid Thompson, both of Muncie, Ind., were united in marriage, July 18. The ceremony was performed by Sarah A Crossfield at her home, in the presence of a few relatives and friends. A reception followed and dainty refreshments served. Mrs. Mullen is a highly cultured and prominent young lady. She is well known as a lyceum worker. Mr. Mullen is a popular young man. They will visit Camp Chesterfield. Their home will be in the East where Mr. Mullen is employed as a window house worker. The ceremony was beautiful and impressive. The spirit Father of the bride made himself manifest to the writer, invoking his blessing upon the happy couple.

TAKE NOTICE.—Correspondents are requested when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on only one side of the paper, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

The arrest of Mrs. Noyes in Santa Barbara, Cal., for practicing her mediumship without a license, has awakened the Spiritualists there to a realizing sense of the situation. She is an excellent medium, and her arrest is an outrage, andwe hope the friends there will rally to her assistance with money as well as sympathy.

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale has been lecturing for the Fort Worth Spiritualist society since her return home. Address her for engagements, R. R. 5, Box 61, Fort Worth Texas.

Dr. R. T. Hendricks writes from San Diego, Cal.: "I have been here something over three months and during all this time it has been one continual soul feast from Sunday to Sunday, listening to the beautiful inspired lectures of Rev. John W. Ring. Everybody loves him. The First Spiritual Society of San Diego, under the able management of our President, Brother C. A. Buss, and the grand, harmonizing work of Brother Ring, is flourishing and growing continually. I regret to say that Brother Ring will take his departure from here sometime between August 4, and 11, but we all hope to re-engage him for the winter months, unless he should be elected President of the N. S. A."

A correspondent writes from Barre, Vt.: "Mrs. Laura Cummings of Hardwick served the South Barre society the 23rd and 30th of June with good satisfaction. Her lectures were logical, interesting and instructive, and her readings from articles and spirit descriptions well received. Her work here has aroused new interest, and zeal in the town, and we expect the good work will go on through the coming fall and winter. The society owns their nice chapel, beautifully situated on a bluff overlooking the village, which was built largely through the efforts of Brother Lucius Colburn, now of California, who was a fine worker for some time in this society, and is today loyally remembered by the society. There is a growing interest here among the young people, and a great amount of ability that speaks well for the future of the Barre society. It already has a nice little amount of the 'necessary' in the bank against a rainy day, but with the well attended dances and other entertainments held from week to week, they expect to be able to hold the meetings and meet other necessary expenses. The chapel has recently been wired for electric lights, a new floor laid and the dining room is well equipped with dishes, tables, etc., and the South Barre society is neither dead nor sleeping, and its officers are men and women of capacity."

Mrs. Hamilton Gill, of Chicago, an excellent medium for messages from the spirit world, has left for Onset, Mass., and will be there until late in August. She hopes to renew the acquaintance of many eastern friends, and her work at Onset will no doubt be the means of adding many new workers to our cause. Chicago friends desiring private readings will please note that Mrs. Gill will be away till September 1st.

The Rev. Alice Baker of Dallas Texas, is dangerously sick, hence cannot answer important letters. Will do so as soon as she has sufficiently recovered.

THE WILKES BOOTH TEST.

Mrs. Margaret Gaule-Reidinger and Her Excellent Work in New York..

To the Editor.—I was much interested in reading in a late issue of The Progressive Thinker an account of the psychometric reading of a lock of hair of J. Wilkes Booth, by Mrs. Margaret Gaule-Reidinger. This took place after the close of our regular meeting, but I happened to be present during almost the entire reading.

I wish to state that as far as reported it is strictly true, but there was much more said. It is very difficult for one to give a correct impression of these wonderful readings to one who is not actually present.

Mrs. Reidinger has been doing what might be termed without exaggeration, marvelous work during the past season, and we often remark each Sunday was better than the last, if possible.

Our metings have been well attended, our hall being one of the best in the city, and with our glorious American flag draped at the rear of the platform,the beautiful Columbus Column just outside our doors, the sweet and refreshing breezes from Central park across the street, why should we not have the most favorable conditions for spiritual work?

It is very interesting to learn by a little careful inquiry how large a number of persons are interested in spiritual phenomena, and are having sittings in their own homes with results most gratifying; but for reasons best known to themselves these sitings are kept quite private.

The good work goes steadily on. For which we are truly thankful.

THE LIGHT OF TRUTH.

Appropriating the Livery of Heaven to Serve the Devil In.

To the Editor.—In a late issue of The Progressive Thinker comes the announcement of the suspension of the publication of the Light of Truth, and the editor's (Willard J. Hull's), renouncement of Spiritualism, and as he puts it THE DEBAUCHED AND PROSTITUTED MEDIUMSHIP.

This recalls the story told by James Anthony Froude in his American lectures concerning a Scotchman. The worthy from the land o' cakes was taunted by an Irishman with having sold his country. He retorted by thanking God he had a country to sell.

With the dissolution of that paper comes the "Deluge," as was said before the French revolution, for not alone the loss of the subscription for the paper, there is other loss in the King Solomon's gold mine, for which that paper was the agent, inducing its patrons to buy stock in its mining schemes, thus losing all, and the investors are now complaining and laying to Spiritualism when, IN FACT, IT IS THE LACK OF SPIRITUALISM.

When an organ called a Spiritual paper resorts to such methods as the Light of Truth has, appropriating the livery of heaven to serve the devil in, what can we expect only the censure and blame of the world and a lack of interest in the true spiritual workers and the cause in general?

I have some honest-hearted friends who have unfortunately been interested in his King Solomon's Mine, and who are ill able to lose by it, and among the number one worthy sister and peerless worker, in California.

May you and your paper continue the noble work to purify and exalt our cause. BISHOP A. BEALS.

LAKE PLEASANT CAMP.

The 34th convocation opened here last Sunday with a splendid attendance at all the meetings. The week preceding was marked by interesting events, notably band concerts by the Sixth Regiment Band; a whist of ten tables given in the Temple Monday evening; a prize waltz Wednesday night, with an attendance of 150 couples, and a dramatic entertainment by Miss Bertha Bryant and others on Friday evening. On Thursday night a mass meeting was held and Hon. J. E. Kavanaugh, of Boston, addressed the property owners upon the subject of making Lake Pleasant a fire district, and getting the town water into the grounds. Undoubtedly action will be taken to carry out the plan in the near future.

Upon the completion of her new cottage last week, Mrs. Alice S. Waterhouse was surprised with a "tin shower." About every one on the grounds participated. Tinware of all kinds was in evidence, as well as carpets, matting and furniture. It was a decidedly pleasant surprise to "Ma Waterhouse," but she was equal to the occasion, and in response to speeches of congratulation by President R. F. Churchill, Mrs. Carbee, Judge Dailey, George Cleveland, and others, she made witty and interesting remarks. On the same evening Mrs. M. L. Sanger, of Waltham, received her many friends, it being her birthday, and speeches, music and good cheer were the order of the day.

Hon. John W. Wheeler has erected the prettiest cottage on the grounds.

Mrs. M. G. Carbee commenced the erection of a cottage last week, and Miss Kate Newack will start one this week. This will make the seventeenth new cottage erected since the fire.

Our new hotel, "The Roosevelt," and Streeter's, Wood's and Mulvey & Corliss' dining rooms are furnishing ample accommodations for visitors.

The addresses of President Churchill and Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding at the opening of camp were excellent, and Mrs. Harding's message work was accurate and good. The speakers for the present week are Albert P. Blinn, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds and Mrs. Alice M. Whall, the two latter accompanying their addresses with message work.

We hope to have Mrs. May Pepper Vanderbilt with us Sunday, August 11, to remain till the close of camp.

ALBERT P. BLINN, Sec'y.

The John Wilkes Booth Test.

I have read the "Astounding Statement" in The Progressive Thinker, of July 20, wherein a lock of hair of a dead man named David E. George, who died January 14, 1903, was taken in June, 1907, to a New York clairvoyant to be psychometrically identified, and the clairvoyant, with the hair in her hand, described the assassination of Lincoln, an event that occurred 40 years previously to the death of the owner of the hair.

I respectfully submit that this is very poor scientific evidence indeed. Here it is perfectly clear that Mr. Hubbell, to whom the lock of hair was given, says he was "particularly impressed with the resemblance of the body to that of Booth family."

Thus it is quite as likely as not, that this thought in the mind of the person who had been handling the envelope in which the lock of hair had been confined, was that the clairvoyant read and described.

This is much more probable than to suppose that at the time of the man's death the hair of his head should on any special degree have been associated with an event in his lifetime (assuming he was J. W. Booth) which had happened 40 years previously.

I once gave a lock of hair from a lady friend (which I had begged for a clairvoyant test) to a medium. The lady was in good health, but the clairvoyant said: "The owner of this lock of hair is suffering from brain fever."

I reported this to the lady and she replied, "The lock I gave you was an old one cut off when I had my hair removed in brain fever sickness some years previously." I mention this to show that the clairvoyant would (at first attempt) be almost sure to describe the person as he was when he died in 1903.

It would take considerable time to make investigations into that person's past life. For this reason I submit that Mr. Hubbell's thought influenced the clairvoyant reading, and it is not a test at all.

Sunapee Lake Camp.

The Annual Spiritualist Camp-meeting at Blodgett's Landing, Lake Sunapee, N. H., merits the attention of all readers of this paper, and especially of those in New Hampshire and neighboring states. In any work undertaken by a society co-operation is the essential for success. United effort is what counts. Individual interest manifested by personal presence is just what is needed to make this camp-meeting the most successful of many years. The management has spared no labor or expense within its means for the edification and benefit of those who attend.

The meeting opens August 4, and extends through September 1st, giving four weeks, with five Sundays' lectures and seances.

Among the noted speakers and mediums secured are G. W. Kates and wife of Cheyney, Pa., Edgar W. Emerson of Manchester, N. H., Mrs. Kate R. Stiles of Charlestown, Mass., Mrs. Whitehead of Lawrence, Mass., and others of extensive fame.

The place itself needs no commendation or reference; the charms of Lake Sunapee are too well known.

All are welcome; everyone should attend; Spiritualists, investigators, scoffers and non-believers. Spiritualists, for it is the way to truth made clear; scoffers and non-believers, for here their armor of prejudice and bigotry will be well-tried, and in defeat they may taste victory of the highest type. TEXAS SPIRITUALISTS.

A Personal Appeal to You!

The State Association has been handicapped in the past for lack of funds, and I now call upon every Spiritualist in Texas, as President of the State Association, and make a personal appeal to you to send a contribution, no matter how small, so that we may be able to do some good for our cause during the next year.

I have many friends and acquaintances who, I am sure, will respond to this appeal, but friends, don't put it off, "DO IT NOW!"

The Secretary, Mrs. Annie J. Quinn, is out of the State on a vacation, and until further notice contributions may be sent to me, and a list will be kept for a special vote of thanks at the Convention.

I know that every Spiritualist who reads this will send a small amount, and I expect to have a long list of names.

Don't delay this minute, "DO IT NOW." Very truly,

CARRIE M. HINSDALE.

The passing of Samuel E. Oviatt of Lansing, Mich., occurred July 7, at an advanced age. He was a man of high aims and much esteemed by all who knew him. Mrs. A. E. Sheets conducted the funeral services.

Mrs. H. L. Shonts passed to spirit life at her daughter's home, 162 N. View St., Aurora, Ill., July 6. She was 77 years of age. She was a devoted Spiritualist, and highly respected. MRS. J. W. WARFIELD.

Passed to the higher life from his late residence, Detroit, Mich., July 17, 1907, Charles F. Baade, beloved husband of Rev. Nellie S. Baade. We know our loss is his Spiritual gain, and it is well with his soul. Services conducted by the wife, Rev. Nellie S. Baade.

Who Can Answer

The Question, "What Shall We Do to Be Saved?"

It is a subject fraught with great responsibilities, for on a satisfactory answer to that question depends the physical and moral happiness of the human race, but if not answered it is to their misery. We know that there are many conditions from which human life should be saved, but it first must be known from what particular wrong conditions does it desire to be saved. With a large majority of the race, when they ask this question it is with a desire to be saved from the result of their own acts, or from conditions transmitted from ancestors; but salvation can only come by changing the habits of life and turning the currents of their being into a higher channel.

Every individual should have knowledge of the power of those forces from which he needs to be saved. But on that subject there is a woful lack of knowledge. The inebriate, the libertine, the dishonest individual do not realize the power of those forces of the lower that holds them in their grip; if they did there would be greater and more successful efforts made for emancipation. The question, "What shall we do to be saved?" would be satisfactorily answered.

As the years roll on, that question among the civilized races is becoming more earnestly asked, and the anxiety it has aroused is not ephemeral, but it has a permanency that is favorable to and will eventually solve the problem. There is a growing sensitiveness when dealing with the question of moral degeneracy, that was not known a few generations ago; the realization is that salvation must come from those degenerate states; if they are not expelled from human society they will cause it to revert back to the barbaric state from which it has been slowly emerging. There are individual sins and national sins, violations of that great moral and spiritual law which must dominate human life, or else it will come under the dominion of the lower elements of its being.

As nations and races are composed of individuals, they being the primary units from whence all larger organizations, the true reformation and salvation must begin with the individual, for the average standard of individual character is the standard of the nation of which those individuals are units. How futile would be the effort to abolish the liquor traffic, the practice of polygamy, or any of the vices that stand condemned before the more advanced conscience of civilization, if the general desire among the nations was to practice those vices. What shall we do to be saved from those conditions that will, if not checked, overwhelm our modern civilization in disaster and ruin the same as the ancient civilizations were destroyed?

It is a serious question, more so than the mass of materialistic minds realize. They do not hear the rumbling, nor feel the vibration of the eruptive forces, but that does not prove their non-existence. The burden that bears heavily on the spirits of the more spiritually unfolded minds of the world to-day is, can we find salvation from the horrors of war? Can we induce mankind to adopt more peaceful methods in the settling of the difficulties that arise among them?

The evolution of racial and national life from the lower planes of being to the higher and more spiritual ones is slow; imperceptible to the ordinary materialistic mind. The question can with propriety, be asked, has human society developed up to that plane of being where they can understand and would accept better methods if presented? It is very evident to the observing mind that it has not yet advancer thus far, although its journey is in that direction. A few have and while they may be instructors of the higher law they cannot dominate the thought of the world, and as long as it is on that lower plane of being it will make itself manifest in acts corresponding to that plane.

We bow in reverence to those noble, earnest men and women of the present day that are striving to plant a higher civilization in human life, one that will remove all apparent necessity of resorting to the arbitrament of war; and the earnest yearning of our spirit is that their efforts may be crowned with success which must be, as they are the prophets of the glorious coming age of which at present we only catch a faint glimpse; but human life must work out its destiny on lines that it can understand, and at present it does not understand the higher law. To remove the obstacles that prevent a realization of the golden age, if our prognostications are correct, there will be needed a mighty conflict waged, greater and more far-reaching than history has ever recorded. That demon of corrupt greed must be destroyed, that not only hoards the products of wealth, but the actual wealth of the world, and can fix prices which can bring starvation to thousands.

We prate on morality, but how can the morals of human society be maintained to that high standard that we all admire, when the physical conditions of a large body of people, especially in our large cities, is such as must reflect back on the moral nature to its degradation?

We were pained as we read a short time ago of the police in one of our large cities, finding an old man and woman dying of hunger and cold. They had been ejected for non-payment of rent, the cause, inability to find employment. Some will probably say, "O, you are too sensitive."

Well, if we are, thanks to the divine Father and Mother, and may we never be any other than sensitive, but when such things can take place in a country that boasts of its high civilization, there is a mistake in names, for such things are savagery of the lowest type, and such acts are silently strengthening the forces that will in time make governmental systems and our civilizations tremble on their foundations if it does not overthrow them.

We see the effects and impotently cry, "What shall we do to be saved?" but as that does not remove the cause our cry for salvation is a failure. It is a law that cannot be presented in its operation, that the sins of the parents shall be borne by the coming generations, and our republic is now facing that question in the unsettled race problem. It is claimed by the South that seventy percent of the crime committed in that section is by the enfranchised race. We will neither affirm nor deny the statement, and the cry goes up, what shall we do to be saved from such an awful condition? and even if true it is not to be wondered at. For generations under the old slavery system it was a systematic brutalization of the race, human beings in their relations with each other were compelled to live as brutes, and now, after forty years of change in the external life of the race the dominant traits are made manifest. The white race is reaping what it has sown, and merely intellectual training of the former enslaved race will not remove the wrong unless it is supplemented with high moral culture, and generations will come and go before the degradation of the slavery system can be removed.

The more progressive minds of all civilized countries are asking, "What shall we do to be saved from the physical and moral degeneracy produced by the liquor traffic? A traffic that has not one single redeeming feature in its horrible business. Legislation has only partially succeeded and on some of the most important points is impotent. Legalizing a moral wrong does not make it right; the effects of such wrongs are just as disastrous whether legalized or not, and of the two they are more venomous when legalized, as they are bolder and can count on the laws of the land to protect them in their work of human degradation.

Our attention was lately called to those facts when listening to a lecturer on that subject. The scene was laid in Boston, the cradle of American liberty. It was in condemnation of the license system which gave the legal right to rob human life of its moral and intellectual liberty and then thrust its victim into the street; but one thousand dollars a year paid to the city relieved the dealer, according to the manner of interpreting the law, from all responsibility.

We observe that some who profess to believe in the spiritual philosophy fail to recognize the difference between liberty and license. They argue that it is a restriction of individual liberty to prevent them from acting out their desires, even if they were working degradation to human society. There is a law of moral eminent domain that gives human society a right to protect itself, and wrong is done if it does not use means for preservation. The pure, the temperate, the honest man or woman does not need the enforcement of external law to compel them to be pure, temperate and honest. They have an internal law that directs their life, which is superior in every respect to the external.

What shall we do to be saved from these forces that are working for human degradation? To deny that there are such forces would be foolish, as we see their operation in all phases of human society. In the political, moral and religious world they are made manifest. To rise to the height it has attained, human life has had to struggle mightily, and to-day the real struggle is not "against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers of darkness, against spiritual corruption in high places;" and salvation can only come when mankind ceases to do homage to the elements of their lower life, and look upward for the ideal toward which they are striving. The intelligent believers in the spiritual philosophy have knowledge of the fact that while we can be helped by those who are on a plane above us, we must work out our own salvation, and we can be strengthened by placing ourselves in concord with those higher powers.

We will not be of that class who claim degeneracy as the ultimatum of human existence. We must look upward and move forward to the more exalted planes of our being. The mighty unrest and dissatisfaction that exists in civilized society is indicative of progress, it is the yearning for that uplifting power and it causes the soul to cry out, "I want to find a further increase, I don't feel satisfied."

It is that dissatisfaction which made manifest will be the redemption and exaltation of the race to a plane of life far superior to the one on which it is now living.

Grand Ledge Camp, Michigan.

The Grand Ledge Spiritualist Camp meeting had a most auspicious opening on Sunday, July 21. The morning service was devoted to an address of welcome by Oscar A. Edgerly, which was enthusiastically received by the audience. Mr. Edgerly's discourse was followed with messages by the widely known "Drummer Medium," George A. Letford. The messages were accurate and most convincing.

In the afternoon Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets was the speaker, and as we had expected, her lecture was eloquent, practical and soul-inspiring.

We have a good array of private workers on the grounds this year, among the number I would mention Mr. A. H. Finney, trumpet medium, of Grand Rapids, Mr. C. A. Barnes, of Indiana, Mrs. Russell of Grand Ledge, Mich., Mrs. Christine Oswald of Chicago, and other good mediums are expected.

Everything seems to favor a grandly successful meeting here this year.

HERE IS LOVE.

Why ask "O, what is love?" when in thy pulsing heart there lies
A sweet and tender love for all around that never dies?
Why frame such sentence in thy mind,
when down within thy soul
Thou knowest well that all is love, entwined in one grand whole?
Why give to thoughts within thy brain that space and strength and time,
When thou art filled with love for all of Nature's works sublime?

The love thou wouldst but find in Heaven, Sister, Brother, dear,
Lies all around you in close touch, within the now and here.
'Tis sad to find a floating soul anhungered, passing on,
Despairing, hopeless in the golden light of such bright dawn
As holds this earth en rapport with the spheres of life on high.
Oh, kindred heart, let all that's sweet within thee drown that sigh!

This Universe just teems with power of love made manifest,
And thine is part within the whole, coequal with the rest.
There is no love of greater worth than dwells within thy heart;
Go, thou, forth in this world of love and growth, and gain thy part.
This world is only loveless to the soul with love subdued;
'Tis always bright to those with life's bright sunlight rays imbued.

The bright and fragrant flowers, the little buds of spring,
Sweet babes and lambkins, nestling birds, each blooming, growing thing,
Should find a lodgment in thy loving soul and give it light
And life, and help pour out the bitter dregs and put to right
Thy spirit, grand, and searching for the good, the sweet, the true;
While searching it will surely come to thee—it is thy due.

Look down within the fount of life with loving, patient care,
And see if love, with bow and arrow,
is not hiding there.
Look out upon the great and vast expanse of vibrant space,
And see if there thou canst discern that little smiling face.
Look down within thy human soul for foot-prints that one day
He made when once he gaily pranced along thy youthhood's way.

This life is fraught with weal and woe,
and disappointing things,
But each in turn in passing time some new unfoldment brings.
Lift up thy head, oh, hungering soul, and let thine eyes behold
The shining light that is for thee within Love's shimmering fold.
Send forth thy quest, and know somewhere within this life's expanse Thy yearnings all for Love's true touch is ever in advance.

He leads thee on, oh, floating soul, to higher, greater heights,
His little footsteps are the trail for thee through days and nights.
His silent voice of soul to soul illumines darkened ways,
As yonder sun illumines earth with scintillating rays;
His nectar'd lips e'er pursed in pose await in anxious bliss
The coming touch, the charming thrill of thy responsive kiss.

A FLOURISHING SOCIETY.

Letter From Los Angeles California.

July 7 was a day of unusual interest for the Society of Spiritual Progression of Los Angeles, Cal., it being the annual election of officers and its fifth anniversary. Appropriate services and a picnic were held.

Mary C. Vlasek was re-elected pastor, which position she has filled acceptably since the organization of the society. She is a leader of great power and as a medium she has few equals. Through her unselfish conscientious, untiring efforts, she has built up one of the strongest societies in the west. This society with 120 members holds meetings every Sunday morning and evening at 814 South Main Street. We have good lectures, music and messages at all meetings, and have been assisted from time to time by such workers as John W. Ring, Mattie E. Hull, Prof. Bowman, Mrs. Gillespie and others of equal standing and ability.

The first Sunday of each month new members are initiated with an impressive and interesting service.

In connection with this society there is the Lyceum (the only one in the city) meeting Sundays at 9:30, a. m., with an average attendance of 52.

The young people's Progressive League was organized last Easter with 32 charter members; it now has over 50 names enrolled. Meetings at 6:30, p. m., Sundays.

The Ladies' Auxiliary, known as the Sunshine Club, consisting of 83 members, has its meetings at 2:30 p. m., Thursdays, at 121 East 30th st. They make clothing for the needy, visit the sick and help the poor, whether they are Spiritualists or not. The society and all of its branches are in an active, harmonious and flourishing condition.

We have started a home fund, and as soon as we get enough to make the first payment we will buy a lot and build a Temple for Spiritualism. The money for this fund is placed in the Security Savings Bank on condition that it cannot be used for any other purpose.

Dear reader, if you wish to help the cause of Spiritualism through one of the noblest mediums in the field, send a donation of any amount to Mary C. Vlasek, 121 East 30th, street, for the building fund, and become an honorary member of an enterprising, successful society, where you will find friends and a cordial welcome when you come to this city.

Parties and entertainments are given the 4th Friday evening of each month. Come and get acquainted and have an enjoyable time

TAKE NOTICE!

Spiritualists Everywhere Be On the Alert.

Spiritualists of the United States, do you want Spiritualism properly represented in the report of the Director of the Census? If so, urge the officers of your local and State association to fill and return the card sent them long ago, by the Department. Every opportunity has been given us to prove by figures how many we are, and it will be our own fault if we are incorrectly reported. Spiritualists, have you the courage to stand up and be counted? If so, send in the reports of your local societies.

A Striking Experience

In the Land of Visions and Dreams—Its Results.

I sat in my room all alone at evening twilight. Within and without a sacred silence prevailed. It was such a time when memories of the past naturally arose; when thoughts of reflection occurred; when clairvoyant power came into activity with its visions, phantoms, dreams, oracles and reveries of natural interest; and this was my state of mind for a season. The panoramic pictures were quietly moving along, each one having its own special interest, when I became conscious of the presence of someone approaching. Turning my head I beheld my most interesting little companion of years ago standing at my side—little Nellie, nine years of age.

I addressed her in my own cheery way, saying: "Well, well! Here is my little pet! Yes, always welcome! But what has sobered this little face to-night?"

I had always been the sharer of her confidence, so when she had become nicely settled upon my lap, she said: "Uncle, I have got something to show you, and you won't laugh at me or make fun, will you?"

"Why, bless you, child, no. Uncle has never acted that way with you, has he?"

She answered, "No."

Then putting her hand into her pocket she pulled out a paper with some writing upon it, saying, soberly, "Now don't laugh. Yesterday morning when I got awake, something said to me, 'Go quickly and get your pencil and paper, then come over to the table all alone and write. Do not say a word to anyone.' I was awfully quiet about it. Then when I had sat down at the table, I had not time to think what I was to write about. When I began to write, I could not help it. It seemed as if someone was using my hand and was writing so fast. After I had stopped, I looked at it, and it was not my writing at all, nor the way I write. I could not read it well, because there were so many big words. I did not know what to do about it. I was going to tell my mamma, but was afraid, so I thought that I would wait and show you. I did not seem afraid of you. I guess it was because I always liked you so much."

I took the paper and read the following:

Why Is Spiritualism, as a Modern Religion, Slow in Its Growth?

First.—Because being more attractive in its phenomenal part, people will not at once look into the philosophy.

Second.—Because attracted imitationary phenomena, when once exposed, will bring a wonderful backset, which will have to be overcome.

Third.—Because the psychic portion, of so much importance, requires time in order to be thoroughly understood. A difference between the imaginary must be made. The same may be said concerning impressions, that interpretations may be correctly given.

Fourth.—Because there are two kinds of genuine spiritual materializations which appear, which require distinction for the sake of the truth. The two phases here represented are: (1) the person actually in the spirit realms, and (2) the spirit of the medium whose body is lying in a trance state. The distinction is noticeable only in the knowledge displayed. That part of the medium can only give that which has been gathered from friends still in the flesh, whilst the real person in spirit is able to answer all questions. This really does not reflect upon the fleshly medium. It does show that the spirit form of the medium, so anxious to meet the occasion, not being able to secure the proper person in the spirit realms called for, assumes through psychic means to give, when it would have been better to postpone for the time.

Fifth.—Spiritualism will be slow in advancing in works of benevolence, because many who are able to give are still within the orthodox church, and are contributing there. These have not openly espoused the cause, and have not yet been educated into its philosophy.

Sixth.—Spiritualistic societies will be slow in organizing into a large religious body because of the great influence used against it by the churches. When once it has organized, it will become the greatest and most satisfying of religious bodies in the world.

Seventh.—Modern Spiritualism will be seventy-five years old before its truths will be fully realized. Then shall it find a recognition which will place it above the reproaches of the past. Its teachings, also, shall be accepted.

All these stages must be passed before this last result takes place. More will be given later. I must not weary my little lady in her first unrealized experience, so farewell.

BENJAMIN GORDON.

I was wonderfully surprised when I was through with the reading. Then, as I was about to speak to little Nellie, I was awakened and realized that I had enjoyed a clairaudient spell.

And now: Are there not some truths here worthy of notice? (1) Value placed upon the phenomenal part in the establishing of a fact; (2) the importance of the study of its philosophy (education); (3) the importance of a distinction between the two phases of spirit materializations (knowledge); (4) the importance of a complete union of all Spiritualistic societies into State and National organizations (organization); and (5) the insistance of a moral standard for the entire membership (good morals).

A close study of the above letter may solve some of the apparent hindrances which hold back many of the honest investigators. We shall be pleased to hear again from Mr. Gordon.

THE RESULT OF A VISION

The Golden Rule Association of the United States.

To the Editor:—I enclose you the printed call for a meeting to organize The Golden Rule Association of the United States, also a copy of the Constitution then adopted, and a copy of the obligation which it is proposed shall be taken by every member.

The charter membership fee is $1, and the charter will be open for subscribers anywhere in the United States. To all who thus become identified with the movement, full details of the action taken at the next regular meeting, including a copy of bylaws and constitution will be sent, with a request that steps be taken to form a similar, or branch association in their community. When a sufficient number are organized, it is proposed to employ teachers and psychics to cover the field, and keep them all busy. In this communication I am simply outlining briefly our proposed work.

I wish to say that the successful development of this movement will mean much for The Progressive Thinker, as we should establish libraries and clubrooms where all standard progressive periodicals will be kept on file, and individual subscriptions received. Also our libraries will necessarily be large purchasers of your publications.

This movement is the result of a vision given to the writer last May, and immediate steps were taken to start it.

Unfortunately, June 5, the date of the first meeting was, without exception, the stormiest day of the entire season, so the attendance was rather small, but the work is going steadily on, and our first series of lectures will be held next fall, winter and spring. No engagements have been or will be made until the completion of the organization, September 18, but I should be pleased to receive applications from lecturers and teachers along the lines of psychic science, mental science, ethics, criminology, or any line appropriate to the purpose of the Association.

THE WATER WITCH.

It Located a Never-Failing Well.

I have read a good deal in The Progressive Thinker, pro and con, in regard to the Water Witch, and I should not have said anything but for W. P. Brittain's strong assertion to the contrary in your paper.

In an early day, on my father's home place, we had a well, but not giving an adequate supply of water. Father was undecided what to do, when one day a man stopped to get a drink. When he learned about the water famine he said, "Well, I am going to see what I can do for you."

He went to a peach tree and cut off a forked limb of one year's growth, trimmed it to suit his fancy; then he started out, circling round on the premises, widening out his circle as he went. Finally he pulled up in plowed ground, two hundred yards from the house, and set a mark. Then he worked all round that place, but his bush would always lead him back to that spot. Then he told us to sink a well there and we would get plenty o fwater. Father had little faith in it, and I did not have very much, but we had to do something, and we concluded to try that place. We sunk a hole there, and the first four feet were as dry as a powder horn, but just below that level we encountered a fine vein of water coming straight up, and by the time we got down ten feet the water came in so strong that we could go no deeper, and that has been a never failing well for fifty-five years.

Now these are facts. I was there and saw the man locate that spot, and I dug the well, but the divining-rod won't do anything for me. We are not all water-witches.

A GOLDEN SHEAF.

To Our Friends: — October next will bring the 50th anniversary of our marriage, and nearly the 55th of our labor in the field of Spiritualism. In the first years we published a volume, "Blossoms of Our Spring," thinking that should the time come in the autumn of life, we would have a volume fitting the occasion of the closing years, of fruitage. A half century has almost gone by, and this 50th anniversary gives the occasion for the issuance of this volume, which we have entitled A GOLDEN SHEAF. It will be made up of selections from matter not before published, in prose and verse; selections of the best sentences and paragraphs scattered through our various books; a new spiritual song with music; illustrations of fac simile automatically written manuscripts; photogravures of our home, birthplace, and brief autobiographical sketches.

We propose to make the book in paper and binding as superior as the price, $1.00, will permit. Every copy will be numbered and contain our autographs.

The number of copies will be strictly limited to the number of subscribers, and the book will not be placed on sale after publication. As we have reached the conclusion to publish at a somewhat late date, if you favor the undertaking you will confer a favor by sending your name, by card or letter, at once (the price is not now wanted).

A list of names of subscribers will be published in the volume.

We thank you beforehand for your favor in inviting our book to your homes.

LIFE and REMINISCENCES OF Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

By Edward C. Smith.

"The Record of a generous life runs like a vine around the memory of our dead, and every sweet unselfish act is now a perfumed flower."

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL was a great and brilliant man, he was the greatest genius of his age. His place is beside Shakespeare, Voltaire, Goethe and Shelley. He was a great Lawyer, Politician, Reformer, Orator, Critic and Philosopher. His wonderful gift of language touched with the spirit and charm of poetry aided by his powerful gift of wit and humor, made him the most formidable foe the church has ever had.

He was great because he was honest. He shook the world with his eloquence and reasoning. His arguments were never answered. As a Lawyer his arguments were always so convincing that he won his case.

He knew many things by learning and more by intuition.

He was an intellectual Giant, and it is very probable that the wonderful combinations he possessed, the world will never see again.

The author who was a close friend and great admirer of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, was assisted by near relatives who collected a great amount of valuable data, and in no other way could this information be obtained. The writing of the "Life and Reminiscences" was purely a labor of love; and it is useless to say has been written in the fairest and kindest spirit, every detail having been carefully recorded. Much of this data was collected and revised before the Colonel's death, and great care was taken in only recording after careful research.

This valuable edition has been aptly illustrated with many beautiful half-tone illustrations of the Colonel in different periods of his life. Also portraits of his sisters and brothers, family, father and mother, together with a genealogical chart, also many valuable reminiscences. The work is well written, handsomely bound, and beautifully printed. All admirers of the Colonel will welcome its publication.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

HARWICH CAMP, MASS.

Eva A. Cassell Writes of the Oldest Camp in the Country.

I am here on Cape Cod, at Harwich, at the Ocean Grove Camp-meeting, the oldest camp-ground in this country; 41 years ago it was inaugurated.

I feel I am treading on holy ground. Here once gathered the shining lights of Spiritualism; here the shades of our departed early workers held concourse on whose shoulders rested the burdens and sufferings of building up a rational Spiritual faith; here they bared their shoulders to the anathemas and curses of the orthodox and Methodist Christians.

How that little band of struggling souls worked to establish a camp-ground! First at Cahoon's Grove, Rev. Presby Clark, a man of broad understanding, put his shoulder to the wheel, assisted by Mr. Thayer, a Millerite. Next, the camp-meeting was removed to Robbins' Grove. There was always the Christian Church opposers, who blocked the efforts of the little band. The hounded Abolitionists sought the shelter offered by the Spiritualists, who opened wide their doors to them.

The Methodist zealots hung like barking dogs on the heels of these struggling souls, disturbing their meetings and breaking them up.

There have been hot times in the ancient history of the now peaceful Harwich.

Speaking and lecturing for the Abolitionists was Wm. Lloyd Garrison, Parker Pillsbury, Wendell Phillips, Samuel J. May, Captain Ephraim Doane, Lucy Stone, Stephen S. Foster and many others; Theophilus Baker, Watson Kelley and wife. Among the enemies to freedom and Spiritualism was a rigid church pillar by the name of Timothy Baker, who thought he was adding to the glory of God and the splendor of the heavenly courts by attacking this band of human brethren who were trying to breathe the Almighty's air of freedom without hindrance; he incited riots which broke up the meetings, riots in which Garrison, Henry C. Wright, Foster, etc., were rotten-egged; riots which were a disgrace, a crime on the part of the fanatics who represented the theological God and the biblical Devil, and the structure of superstition termed orthodox and Methodist Christianity!

Under such conditions as these the little band passed a chaotic period, and then the camp-meeting was removed to Nickerson's Grove, and here such shining lights as William Denton, Dr. Storer, Dr. Richardson, and others came to rejoice in the new faith.

Finally, in 1867, the camp-meeting, in the effort to find a peaceful haven, was driven almost into the Atlantic Ocean; the brethren were led by the spirit to select this spot bordering on the water, 41 years ago, and here it found its final resting-place.

The early mediums were pure in heart; Mrs. Hettie Clark, Mary Albertson, Susie Fletcher, Susie Nickerson White, Mrs. Typhena Chase, Mrs. Barbara Hamer, Aunt Mary Stearns, Mrs. Rebecca Nickerson, Mrs. Rebecca Taylor, Aunt Mary Nickerson, Mrs. Emily Kelley, Ed. Wheeler, Moses Hull, Dr. Greenleaf, Dr. Peebles, Mrs. Love Howe, who seemed to me, as I sat listening yesterday, to her story of this eventful past, to be a veritable "Mother in Israel," with her 70 odd years; gentle, sweet-faced, every word carrying force and power as she revealed the early history of this memorable camp-ground. The angels are very near this dear old soul, ripe with experience; I saw the scintillations of their wings and knew that she is daily upheld by their spiritual strength.

I must not forget Victoria Woodhull; the waves of the new revelation took her before she was prepared for it and she hardly developed to the onslaught; she had no time to smoothe out the angularities or corners and present her standpoint with artistic coloring; she took the bull by the horns, desperately. I was not there, but I have read all about it. My tender sympathy now and forever be with this sister who bled in the cause of the new revelation.

Some of the brightest stars in the spiritual firmament have graced this camp-ground, in recent years; Colville, Jennie Hagan, Frank Baxter, Joseph Stiles, Storer, Wiggin, Kate Stiles, etc.

This is the first time I ever visited here, and I found so many kind people. How true 'tis, "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country." I might walk my home village all day with never a glad hand outstretched in gratitude for a kind word, an uplifting thought radiated from my pen; but here, kind people thronged around me; broken voices said: "Oh, how I have longed to see the writer of those letters in The Progressive Thinker! And you are she! How wonderful! How your letters have stimulated and helped me; cheered and encouraged me." Mrs. H. G. Handren (Aunt Hitty) with her plain, honest features shining with love and beneficence, told me how she had ever reached forth into space for me; she is strong, powerful, with her 78 years of earth experience.

On the shoulders of a few people like these rests the welfare of this camp association.

I will not speak of the camp program, for this summer, as it will be written up by another; but will say that I met here Mr. Albert Blinn and his charming young wife; Miss Lizzie Harlow, and enjoyed her strong, vigorous lectures; Mrs. Clare, an old worker under a new name (Pennell).

This camp is beautifully located on the Ocean; sky and water meet. Often I strolled along the sands thinking of the early days. Where was Timothy Baker? Where his companion zealots? Let us hope he is enjoying the glories of the theological hereafter he revelled in while here, and believed and preached; in the three-pronged God and Christian Devil, hoofs, horns and tail; that he has had a taste of that sizzling hell wherein he consigned the unborn infant, the heretic, the humble Spiritualist—it would be a pity to have him so bitterly disappointed in not finding the graven images of Christianity; I can even imagine him scurrying through the spirit sphere in the effort to find them shouting, "Where is Jehovah"—reaching down to the earth to hook "the offending sinner! Where is Jesus? Where are the saints? Where is the golden city? Where is the whole outfit?" I can even see him falling into the arms of the Devil, and rubbing noses, should he find him. Even the Devil is better than nothing, out of the whole superstitious structure; in which case he would smell something a great deal worse than the rotten eggs with which he stoned the poor Abolitionists; and a rotten egg is very bad indeed—phew! Its horrid!

Onset, Mass.

ONSET NOTES.

This Great Camp Meeting Is Now in Full Blast, With All On Deck.

The Camp-Meeting held at this place was opened to-day, before one of the largest gatherings of many years. Every train that arrives comes crowded. Every electric car is taxed to its utmost. About all the cottages are opened, the hotels are filled, and good rooms in cottages are few. It gives promise of one of the best seasons that this camp has enjoyed for a long time.

To-day the exercises were opened with a fine concert given by the New Bedford Band. The book store was officially opened to-day.

During the season The Progressive Thinker will be found on sale and subscriptions will be taken, as this paper is to be the official paper for Onset. It will contain all the news of the meeting, it also contains all camp news from all parts of the country. Besides the news referred to it contains the best spiritual reading of any of our publications. Every Spiritualist in New England should support this paper, and make it a New England organ.

The meeting at the Auditorium opened with singing by Mr. A. J. Maxham, who received an ovation when presented by Mr. J. B. Hatch, the vice-president, who presided at the meeting; after which Mr. Hatch presented the speaker of the morning, Dr. George A. Fuller, Chairman of the Onset Camp Meeting, and president of the Massachusetts State Association.

Dr. Fuller read a poem written by Belle Bush, "One Night," and gave an invocation. He said "It has been my custom to give an address of welcome for the opening lecture at Onset, but this year I am merely going to say, you are all welcome to old Onset, and to all that Onset has to give to humanity, and we trust that this year you will all have a spiritual feast which will be of lasting benefit to you all." He took for his subject "The Spiritual Perspective of the Future from the Standpoint of a Spiritualist." This subject should mean a great deal to us as Spiritualists and we should stop and consider, is Spiritualism fulfilling its divine mission to humanity? I have no fault to find with Spiritualism, if fault could be found sometimes with Spiritualists. I have no fault to find with Christianity, though much fault might be found with so-called Christians. We draw no line of demarkation between the two, what is wrong for one is wrong for the other; what is right for one is right for the other. We are not here to quarrel with any sect. Spiritualism has its own great principles to establish, and therefore has no time to quarrel with anything.

The first thing to establish is the continuity of life, the fact of communication between spirit and mortal, and mediumship is the avenue through which we receive our proof. I am one of the fossils who believe in mediums and mediumship. I became a Spiritualist when everyone sought the mediums for the demonstration of the truth, but to-day many are trying to reach heaven in some other way; but, my friends, through the avenues of mediumship is the only straight way. Spiritualism came to establish mediumship in the world, just as Jesus came for that purpose in the earlier days; therefore Christianity in its earliest primitive form lived to establish mediumship, and, my friends, Spiritualism is trying to drift away from its purpose, just as Christianity has drifted away from its purpose. Are we going to allow this to happen? I think not, because we are not of as much importance as we feel we are, we are instruments in the hands of this great unseen force. Spiritualism does not depend upon the people of earth, but upon that great immutable law of the invisible world. All thinkers are with us to-day, so far as the phenomena is concerned. All philosophers are with us, so far as our philosophy goes, and all ministers, so far as religion goes; therefore we have nothing to fear, for Spiritualism is growing in the hearts of the people.

Spiritualism works in all fields of reform; it enlarges man's field of action; it places before us ideals that have never been presented before; it says do good, because it is right to do good; serve humanity, because you love humanity, and then you receive your reward because you know you have done your duty toward the world.

Spiritualism has come to plant within us higher conceptions of things and life. Dear friends, do not forget the mediums. Give to them the best conditions, cherish them; if not, you will be apt to drive them from our ranks, and we may have a dearth of these mediums, who are our consolation and our joy.

The meeting closed with singing by Mr. Maxham, and a benediction by Mrs. C. F. Loring. At the close of his lecture, Miss Susie C. Clark presented Dr. Fuller a bouquet of roses, as a token of love and respect from his friends. Dr. Fuller responded in a feeling manner, expressing his thanks for the same.

Sunday afternoon a good audience convened to listen to Mrs. Kate R. Stiles. After a vocal selection by Mr. A. J. Maxham, Mrs. Stiles read a poem. She took for her subject "Esoteric and Exoteric Spiritualism." She handled the subject in a very able manner. She said the signs of the times point that we are to let go of many things of the past, and grasp the things of the future. She said that she did not feel to undervalue mediumship, but nevertheless she felt the Spiritualism of the future would be more from within than from without. Spiritualism is as old as life itself, and it is here to teach us to climb higher. The address was appreciated by all who heard it.

Mrs. Carrie F. Loring then gave messages, which were all recognized and which gave great satisfaction to all who received them. Mr. Maxham closed the meeting with singing.

Monday we held our first Conference, and a goodly number of people were present. The day was all that could be desired, and the Conference was of the best. Mr. Burnham opened the meeting (after singing by Mr. Maxham) by reading selections from Cora Lind Daniel's book, "As It Is to Be," asking through the book many questions which are of value to the masses. The questions, as proposed, brought out many responses.

Mrs. Johnson (daughter of Moses Hull) read two selections, which were very highly appreciated.

Tuesday, July 23, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn was the speaker, and as usual she took her subject, from the audience, 'Eternal Justice." Mrs. Allyn spoke as length upon the following subjects: "What Shall the Harvest Be?" "Concentration," and "Wireless Telegraphy."

Spiritualism means not the worship of your ancestors, nor the communication with your friends, but it means practical work, and it is as valuable in the kitchen as in the parlor. She spoke of the reforms of the day, and of the children and their needs. We have no right to want to die until we have learned how to live here. We must consecrate our lives to good deeds, and not to words. Mrs. Allyn closed her lecture with an improvised poem.

Wednesday was Conference day again, and Mr. Maxham sang one of the finest of his songs; he is always appreciated. Mr. Burnham was asked to read from the book "As It Is to Be," and he did so, and he was listened to with much interest. Miss Victoria Bowman then came upon the platform, and seating herself at the writer's table, the raps came and were distinctly heard throughout the audience, and not only were the raps intelligent, but the medium, after having the questions answered by the table, would describe the spirits around the questioner. The seance was delightfully received. Miss Clara Stowell spoke of the evil in spirit world, and gave her version of it. Mrs. Durand then gave a few messages. Mrs. Hattie C. Mason spoke beautifully of the experiences of life, and said that she truly believed that all our experiences, whether good or bad, were for our good. Mr. Weeks, an aged veteran, then came to the platform and asked the spirits to rap replies on his cane so all could hear, and they answered very clearly to all.

This will have to answer for news from Onset for this issue. All here send greetings to the editor of The Progressive Thinker, and all here would be pleased to greet him and his genial wife, to good old Onset.

OUR CHILDREN.

Hints From Practical Experience for Parents and Teachers.—By Paul Carus.

In this little book "Our Children," Paul Carus offers a unique contribution to pedagogical literature. Without any theoretical pretensions it is a strong defense for the rights of the child, dealing with the responsibilities of parenthood, and with the first inculcation of fundamental ethics in the child mind and the true principles of correction and guidance. Each detail is forcefully illustrated by informal incidents from the author's experience with his own children, and his suggestions will prove of the greatest possible value to young mothers and kindergartners. Hints as to the first acquaintance with all branches of knowledge are touched upon—mathematics, natural sciences, foreign languages, etc.—and practical wisdom in regard to the treatment of money, hygiene and similar problems. 207 Pages. Price, cloth, $1.00.

A Sketch of Hallelujah Sam

A Highly Interesting and Impressive Sketch from Real Life, by Mrs. Ida Lewis Bentley, of Garvanza, Cal.

Samuel Peters was a sinner. His acquaintances were agreed upon that point, from the stern old Calvinist minister to the children that went to Sunday school and learned about Sampson, and Jonah, and Heaven and Hell. Taught from their infancy to believe all men born sinners, Sam, as he was familiarly called, was set apart as having been born a more pronounced sinner than is often the case. This opinion hinged upon the fact that Sam at a very early age informed his stern and very orthodox father that he would not love a god who put little babies into hell and burned them forever.

For this, then heretical opinion, he received a severe flogging, which served to close the young sinner's mouth, but plainly wrought no change of heart, for as soon as he arrived of age he flatly refused to attend church or family prayers any more. For this offense his father turned him out doors and refused him any further admission, in spite of the tears and pleadings of his loving and long-suffering mother. In this respect Sam's father was very god-like, according to his barbarous ideas of God, a fact Sam was not slow in recognizing.

A few years later Sam married, and in due course of time three little ones came to gladden his home, but not for long, for when the two older children were eight and six years old they were stricken with fever and died in one night. The parents were nearly wild with grief, and at first Sam stubbornly refused to permit any clergyman to officiate at the funeral, but when his aged mother came to him and joined her entreaties with those of his wife, he yielded insomuch as to allow a Universalist minister to be engaged.

Soon after the loss of her children, Sam's wife professed "conversion," was baptized and joined the church. She wanted to make sure she escaped the "wrath to come," and, as the minister told her, join her little ones in glory.

As for Sam, tears, prayers and arguments failed to move him, and to their exhortations he turned a deaf ear. Of a sunny, social disposition he now grew sad and reserved. Alone at work on his farm he would often pause for minutes and gaze mutely up at at the silent sky as if in agonized pleading that it would in some way solve for him the problems of life and death; but his mental processes were unknown to any save himself and the unseen, for never once did he confide in anyone or ask for aid or sympathy.

For many months his wife pleaded with him to accept her religion, and one day after an unusually tearful interview, Sam said to her: "It is no use, Mariann, for you to spend your time and strength in this way, for I much rather go to hell and burn forever than worship the fiend who put me there."

After that Mariann posed before her church associates as a semi-martyr, for was it not dreadful to have such a sinner for a husband?

Unbeknown to himself, Sam was a man with high ideals, and he believed that true religion, whatever that might be, ought to work some change for good in a person's daily life, and the closest observation revealed to him no change in his wife other than she went to church regularly and deposited certain sums in the collection, and, as the months went by, it grew more and more certain that her religion had taken none of the sharpness from her tongue.

Some two years after Mariann's "conversion," Sam was returning home from "town," as the little country village was called, and passing a back-road school-house he was surprised to find it brightly lighted.

Sam was in the habit of making his trips for groceries in the evening during the hot-weather months, but never before had he seen the old school-house lighted, so out of curiosity he stopped and listened to see if he could solve the mystery. The night was dark and damp, threatening rain. The air was sweet with the odor of new-mown hay and green ferns growing on the moist banks under the willows and alders that lined the roadway, and fireflies glowed and sparkled, flitting here and there. For a moment or two the only sound that broke the stillness was the champing and stamping of the horses tied to the rail fence back of the school-house; then, through the open window, Sam saw a tall, angular, strong-featured, elderly man come forward with an open Bible in his hand and announce his text: "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" The words struck Sam sharply and he listened to what followed. The preacher was eloquent in a simple way, as one always is who speaks from strong conviction. With great earnestness he said: "God is a merciful God, my friends, and not the fiend he is depicted in the church creeds. God is love, and therefore will never destroy a man for his sins, but he will destroy the sinner in mercy with the brightness of his coming at the last great day, when the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, and this earth, swept by purifying flames, shall bloom again in Eden beauty, the future home of the saints."

For an hour the preacher went on, pounding the churches for their cruel creeds teaching "endless torment" for the sinner, and praising his own theory, which he claimed was kind and just and beautiful.

The deep voice of the preacher thrilled the listening Sam with a strange power. A merciful God who in love destroyed the sinner instantly! Sam did not stop to think or reason beyond the preacher's words.

Evolution is a slow process, and each individual arrives at certain truths through preliminary experiences, varying according to individual character and temperament. The next evening Sam knelt among the "penitents before the altar"—the altar in this case being a much-defaced wooden box known as "the teacher's desk." After about an hour of exhortation and prayer by the preacher of the previous evening, Sam sprang to his feet shouting, "I am saved—hallelujah!"

Then it came to Sam that he must go out into the world and preach his new-found religion, and prove the fallacy of the terrible church creeds which taught the endless torment of the wicked. Mariann objected to this course, with many arguments and tears, "for," she said, "this is an unpopular religion, and not half the money in it there is in farming;" but her words fell on deaf ears, and for many years Sam went from town to town preaching his ideas of a loving God, and so enthusiastic was he that he was soon well known as "Hallelujah Sam."

In the course of time Sam's heart was made glad by the "conversion" of his son, who immediately began to preach, but with less enthusiasm than his father.

So the years sped onward, and something occurred that broke the evenness of life for "Hallelujah Sam," and shattered the peace of mind he had so long believed would last forever. Little Mollie, his youngest grandchild, and the one object on earth upon which he lavished all the pent-up love in his great, strong nature, was stricken with scarlet fever and passed away. Many a time Hallelujah Sam had stood by the coffin that contained all that was mortal of somebody's darling and calmly told the weeping parents, if it was a young child, that God would raise their little one up at the last great day and they, if faithful, should have it again. If an older child lay in the coffin, and he had misgivings about its future, he would tell the mourners to have no fear, but trust their dead to the care of a loving Father who would do just right, and thinking of what seemed to him such love and mercy on God's part, he would often shout "hallelujah" by an open grave! No hallelujahs welled from his heart as he stood by little Mollie's grave. For some occult reason he could not seem to trust in God and rest in peace regarding her. He wanted to know what God was going to do with her.

Sam was an honest man, and he knew very well that if Mollie had been a neighbor's child he would have had "misgivings," and he was too candid to think she would be "saved" because she was his beloved.

Mollie was ten years old, winsome and willful, the most wayward of all the family, and Hallelujah Sam groaned in agony as he sat alone in his desolate home, thinking of the possibilities. The deeper he thought, the more disturbed he grew. He got his Bible and turned its pages restlessly, but he could not find anything that seemed to hit his case. Was he never to see her again?

"O Mollie, my darling," he sobbed, "how can I lose you? How can I have it so? I have not an enemy in all this world that I would deprive of one he loved. Is God less merciful than I?"

The thought startled him, as did many other thoughts that would keep crowding his mind. Feeling that he could not endure his darling's absence from his home, Sam took his wife and went to visit an aged aunt who lived on a lonely farm far off, among the mountains of his native State.

Alas for those who think by change of environment to find peace or happiness! A man is himself with all his doubts, fears, griefs and longings, whether he is in Greenland or Japan, Paris or New York. Trouble may change its form, but its life comes from within the one that recognizes it, therefore it is only within the heart of the individual that it can be annihilated. Silent and sad Sam wandered over the fields and through the cool, ferny forests, or hoed diligently in the little garden patch.

Mariann remembered that her husband had appeared about the same way after the death of their little girl, and she could not understand, for no doubt regarding Mollie's future entered her mind. Was she not her grandchild? Would God turn one of her flesh and blood into hell?

Never!

One day, after an unusually hard tramp and still harder thinking, Sam went to bed, but not to sleep. Hour after hour he lay awake praying that some new light would come to him. Suddenly he was startled by a voice saying softly, but plainly, "Sam!" He lifted his head and gazed about the room. The moon was nearly full and its light poured through the curtainless windows, making every article of furniture plainly discernible, and there, standing but a few feet from the bed, stood a female figure clad in light, fleecy robes. A soft light, brighter than the moonlight, surrounded her, and her features were clearly revealed.

"Mother."

The word broke from Sam's lips involuntarily.

The figure drew close to the bed, and in the old, familiar voice, so dear to the listening man, said:

"THERE IS NO DEATH, MY SON. WHAT MEN CALL DEATH IS ONLY THE LAYING ASIDE OF THE MATERIAL BODY FOR THE SPIRITUAL. YOU DO NOT READ YOUR BIBLE ARIGHT."

She was gone, and Sam lay lost in wonderment, too dazed to question what it all might mean. As soon as it was light the next morning Sam arose and took his Bible and began to read in a desultory way. He was much surprised at the number of instances angels manifested themselves to mortals in the days of old. He had never thought about it before, and he began to question, but the doctrines he had preached so many years were not to be outgrown in a day, and the more he studied the more confused he became, and the more contradictory the Bible seemed, and he felt wholly at sea, without any means of guidance.

For several weeks the struggle kept up, and then he began to doubt the evidence of his senses, so new and strange and unsupported was that one night's experience. Many nights, when worn out with his ceaseless, hungry groping after the truth, he would pray earnestly that if it was really true that his mother came to him that night, she would come again, but his prayers were not answered. The days swept onward into weeks, and Sam settled into a hopeless apathy from which he was again aroused.

Again the moonlight flooded the little room where Sam lay wide awake beside his sleeping companion, and again he was aroused by hearing an audible voice speak his name, and there beside his bed stood his mother—and little Mollie with her!

"Mother!" cried Sam. "Mollie! O, thank God! Hallelujah!"

His mother smiled and said:

"WE ARE ALL CHILDREN OF GOD. WE CANNOT DIE. WE CANNOT WANDER AWAY FROM A LOVING FATHER'S CARE. NEVER DOUBT AGAIN, MY SON.

Mollie waved her hand to him in farewell just as he had taught her to do in her infancy, and they were both gone.

At Sam's "Hallelujah" Mariann awoke, and a little later demanded to know what all the talking was about, but Sam refused to tell her. The next day she renewed her request, and her husband told her the whole story; in fact he was so happy he could scarce refrain from going out into the highway and telling to the passers-by.

Mariann listened in amazement, and at the conclusion of her husband's story exclaimed fiercely: "Sam Peters, I am astonished at you! Have you forgotten what the Bible says about lying spirits going forth to deceive the elect? What you have seen is all of the devil—every bit of it!"

Sam replied calmly: "If God will permit the devil or any other power to come here and personate my mother and little Mollie, and deceive me, I will have nothing more to do with him forever!"

"O Sam," wailed his wife, "how can you say such awful things, and you a minister, too? Why, don't you know this is Spiritualism?"

She spoke the last word in a hushed tone, and glanced about her fearfully as if expecting some fiend would appear at the mention of it. Sam squared his shoulders resolutely as he replied: "It is no use for you to talk to me in this way, Mariann, for I shall accept the truth as fast as it comes to me, and if what has come to me lately is Spiritualism, then blessed is Spiritualism."

The next day Sam, in company with his wife, returned to his own home, for there was to be a conference held by his denomination in his town. Sam had received a letter from the president of the Conference Association, asking him to preach the last day, when the largest number of people might be expected. To this request Sam replied: "I can never again preach for you in my former way, for a great light has shone upon me. I wish to withdraw from the Conference; but before I go I must tell you why I go." So it was arranged by those in authority that Hallelujah Sam should tell his story behind closed doors, with only the "elect" to hear, for they were afraid lest "modern heresy" in some form had led him astray.

With his massive head erect and his kindly face lighted with joy, Sam told his former associates his wonderful experiences, but he had hardly finished before he was overwhelmed with exclamations and denunciations, and he caught the words, "infidelity," "evil spirits," "devil," "delusion," "insane," coming with violence from the lips of his former friends. Sam looked about him calmly and said quietly, "Brothers, good-bye; I prefer truth to theory."

Sam's son had, unnoticed by his father, been sitting quietly at the father's side of the hall. He now arose and came to his father's side and laid his hand gently upon his shoulder. "Brothers," he said, huskily, "I know my father, therefore I know every word he has spoken is true. Where my father goes, there I will go. Good-bye."

The two walked together out into the sunlight where the birds were singing gleefully, unfettered by doctrines, theories and superstitions, therefore free to express themselves in their own way. Unconsciously the two gazed up into the blue depths above them, and drew a long, free breath. Within the hall they had just left the people were singing,

"Shall such a sinful worm as I,
Who sometimes am afraid to die,
Be found at thy right hand?"

Many a time Sam had lent his powerful voice to the singing of that hymn, but now the words struck him oddly, and it seemed to him an immeasurable depth yawned between him and his former brethren—a depth which he had just crossed upon the only bridge possible, namely: Truth.

Six weeks later Sam lay dying. As he struggled for breath his son lifted him into a sitting posture, when he suddenly opened his eyes, and a look of joy illumined his face. Stretching his arms out toward the empty (?) air, he said: "Mollie! Mother! It is true! Hallelujah!"

The last word rang through the room with a thrill of triumph inexpressible; it was a shout of victory coming from the lips of one who saw doubts and fears forever swallowed up in knowledge. The son laid his father gently down and closed his eyes, then he passed out into the closed and empty hall, and a breath of cool air swept past him and a voice whispered, "Tell the truth, my son; the dead still live."

IDA LEWIS BENTLEY.

Immortal Personality.

A Characteristic and Thoughtful Essay From the Facile Pen of the California Philosopher, Charles Dawbarn.

A correspondent complains that in my recent article entitled "Our Own Future," I "shatter the fundamental teachings of Spiritualism." "which," he asserts, "is the continuance into the next state of one's personality." He defines "personality" as "one's personal, mental and moral make-up," which he thinks should remain unchanged throughout eternity. I cannot believe that older Spiritualists hold any such impossible belief, but for the benefit of youth, and theological ignorance, I will once again make it a study from the standpoint of science.

There are certain obvious objections to such a belief that even a child can grasp. For instance, my correspondent has a friend born a cripple. Is he to remain a crippled personality "over there?" Another has been crippled mentally; is weak-minded and a laughing-stock. If his personality is to be changed into that of bright intelligence, how is he to be recognized? A child dies. Must it refuse to grow into manhood for fear of changing its personality? But if it grows, how is it to be recognized by the newcomer into spirit life? And from the spirit side we may ask how is the loving husband who died in early manhood, to recognize as his darling the old grandmother who crosses "the divide" half a century later, if the personality of earth-life is to be continued? These are surface questions that should startle my correspondent into beginning to change his own "mental" personality, even at the risk of being unrecognized "over there."

Now let us broaden our theme, and examine for a moment the personality of form, which is really at the foundation of my correspondent's trouble.

Intermingled with all questions of heredity, size and shape are planetary conditions. If man, as we know him, could exist on other planets he would be 50 feet high on Jupiter, and perhaps 24 inches on Mercury. That would be the outer casing of his personality which my correspondent wishes to retain. But our mental personality depends on the shape and quality of our brain, and could not be the same on two planets. But my correspondent is demanding that the giant and the dwarf shall remain unchanged as a necessity of "personal" recognition. Such facts are also "surface facts," familiar to every student in Natural History, though they may become theologically distorted.

But if personality is to be our theme, let us begin at the beginning, or as near the beginning as mortal man has been able to creep.

My correspondent and all the rest of us, started from a speck of protoplasm in a cell. We do not say that life commenced in that speck of protoplasm, but we do say that organic life takes its start there. That one speck out of which the planet was to be peopled, could split itself into a number of spooks, each like itself. This process of multiplication is called "parthenogenesis," and results in the offspring being just like the parent. Such dull monotony would leave life without any possibility of progress, so the Universal Intelligence tried the experiment of progeny multiplied by two, instead of being evolved by only one. Under this process "variation" became the law of life. The mating couple each had its share in making the child, but the four grandparents are there too, and back of them the myriad ancestors of the newborn child of to-day. So that by change from one parent to two we have the wondrous influence of heredity forced upon every living form. That is one point for the reader to remember, for we shall presently see its bearing upon the "personality" my correspondent is so anxious to perpetuate.

This propagation by two parents instead of one changed each parent physically and mentally from the old ancester who was two in one. Let us see what that means. In this cell or egg of the female is deposited yolk food that will be needed by the unborn offspring. That means that the female will be differently shaped, and comparatively clumsy. The male will now seek his mate. He moves actively, his one object being to fertilize the female. He fights for possession and protection, and his sex is thus differentiated. We thus have male and female because without that distinction there would be no variety in life. The parents become specialized. The mother lives for her child. Without her care it dies. She will fight for her child, right or wrong. She knows nothing of justice. She is a born partisan, and her whole mentality is thus shaped by her motherhood. The same influence of heredity shapes the woman unafflicted with a husband. She is the mother of eggs, although they may be unfertilized.

Woman is not an undeveloped man, nor his inferior. They are each shaped by Nature for the part they must play in propagating the species. A manly woman and a womanly man are monstrosities, mental hermaphrodites. This is not to be an essay upon evolution. I am pointing out these proved facts because of their bearing upon life after death. The mother must, and will be home-maker. It follows as a natural consequence from her being the egg-producer. She can never shine as a legislator or a fighter. The few who attempt it are, as I have said, monstrosities. On the other hand everything that makes home the happiest spot on earth is her province. The man must struggle to provide for both himself and his family. The man who will not do this is, in his turn, a monstrosity.

The whole fabric of society is founded on these distinctions of sex. The student of natural history accepts these statements as proved by scientific research. We might elaborate these consequences of sex into an essay upon natural history. But that is not our object.

The first point to notice is that sex is a dominant factor in personality. My correspondent does not dream of finding a female friend of his posing as a male in the next life. He wants his wife, mother, sister over there. His father and his dear old friends are to be men as in days of yore. Nothing short of that will satisfy him for he is sobbing at the bare possibility of any change in one's personality in the next life. I certainly agree with him so far. Science has never yet discovered either male or female changing sex in this life. Sex is the rule of Nature by which a world is to be peopled in endless variety, but without the destruction of species.

The conditions under which life manifests in this planet demand sex. And the necessity of sex compels a difference mentally and physically in the egg-bearing partner or female from the personality of the active father of the family. But this difference, this distinction first appeared, and has since been evolved by the necessities of mortal life on this planet. But form of every kind, from the giant sun to the microscopic spermatozoon, some day falls to pieces. And the personality necessarily also disappears, for personality is always associated with form.

It happens that experience has demonstrated to many folks, and to a few scientists, that something exists in man, or in most men, however it got there, which remains after the material form has gone to pieces. A few striking experiences seem to almost prove that some of the higher animals have also received or evolved this "something" which death of the form cannot destroy. We presume, though we do not KNOW, that mankind as a whole, have attained or received this magnificent embodiment of intelligence and energy which is not dependent upon what we call "personality" for expression. That is what we mean when we talk about "immortality." But here we come to a startling truth.

Human immortality is to-day as much a proved scientific fact as human mortality. But spirit return is so embedded in imagination, and so colored by mortal sense and experience, that the scientist who accepts immortality as a fact can only take spirit-return in homeopathic doses of very high dilution. In other words, the personality beyond this life, which theology teaches, and which my correspondent craves, is contradicted by the fact that the personality by which we know each other here is entirely dependent upon conditions of life in this little planet of ours, and like conditions of the hereafter to which we are all hastening.

It is an axiom of science that any organ which is not useful and active will presently shrink, and at last disappear. Man's form, and especially woman's, has a number of such relics of the past; some of which, like the third eyelid, are already almost out of sight. They were evolved at a certain period in the history of ancestral necessity. When no longer needed that eyelid had to cease to be a part of the human personality. Suppose we apply this fact to personality in the next life. Here lies the form of the woman I loved. Its physical personality is dropping to pieces. So much is a fact that mortal sense accepts. But her mentality is still alive, and is proved by spirit return. That mentality is supposed to have all ready for it a form shaped like the old one. So my darling is wearing a new form which encloses the old mentality. Such is the conception and teachings of both the theologian and the Spiritualist. But form is always a matter of necessity, and adaptation to environment. And that conception of the revival of the old personality is opposed to the facts as we now know them. I do not assert that children are not born in the next life, but not even a whisper comes from the unseen but denies it. Here it is a necessity of our planet life, and both form and personality, as we know them, are the result. But if there are no children born in that life after death, then sex itself becomes unnecessary, and even impossible. There can be neither egg sustainer nor egg fertilizer requiring a specialized form "over there," nor specialized organs to make up the physical and mental personality we know and love here.

When clairvoyants, and revealers of mysteries tell me that the new personality is a copy of the old one I will not deny it. But I can assert from all human experience that it could not remain so, for its shape, its every organ, and its mentality were adapted only to the life in this world, and not to any other.

Even the tyro in spirit-return presently discovers there are difficulties in the way of mental intercourse. He cannot go to one medium and continue the conversation he had with his old friend through another. There is an evident attempt to tell him things in terms of his everyday mortal experiences, for he can understand no other, so that the result is usually a hash of truth and absurdity that renders spirit-return useless, and often dangerous to the mortal, save for its proof of immortality. It must be so, for, as we have seen, the old individuality may be there, and we occasionally get proof that it is, but it is now encased in a new personality of form, and therefore a new expression of the old intelligence. His experience proves this to every careful student.

His loved one passed over twenty years ago, yet she appears, or impresses herself on his mentality as at the same age, and with the same form. Or it may be his old mother who left in the feebleness of old age. She returns so that he identifies her, and magnifies the test, as proof that she is still his dear old mother. Apart from the fact that she will appear to other friends according to their memories of her personality of form there is, as we have seen, the absolute certainty that both her form and her consequent mentality must be very different from what they were in earth life, although her individuality and its memories may remain unchanged.

Of course the old Spiritualist, whose belief has been founded on his phenomena will be startled at these assertions, and his first impulse will be to deny them. But if he will study any good work on biology, and apply its facts to his present belief in spirit return he will discover why so many talented scientists who accept his facts draw such different inferences and conclusions, and declare that spirit return fails of scientific demonstration.

Let us study the law of heredity. Heredity is the expression of ancestral force and mentality. Such an expression of earth life influences is, as we have seen, impossible in another life. Just as impossible as that the form should remain the same when motherhood and fatherhood have ceased to be compelling forces.

What the form and its resultant mentality may be for the advancing spirit the present writer does not know, nor pretend to guess. He knows he cannot be the same, and perforce waits till experience shall teach him its lesson "over there." Environment is another factor in the problem. In earth life we are each shaped exactly by his environment. Our new mental expression will be necessarily as different as our new environment. So that, on the whole, my unfortunate correspondent, who bewails the coming loss of his present personality, will be left like Charles Lamb, who complained bitterly that Universalist teaching had taken away his "dear devil."

In conclusion I would say to every like-minded reader, that however much he may bemoan the destruction of his old belief in a continued personality, the responsibility rests upon Nature, and what is called "natural law." All that the present writer has done is to accept the fact, and endeavor to learn its lesson.

Brought Back to Life.

To the Editor:—In the summer of 1855, at the early and tender age of eight years, I was violently thrown from a vicious horse and instantly killed—so thought my mother and younger brother, as the horse appeared at the farm-yard gate riderless. After nearly an hour's search my lifeless body (to them) was found.

My experience was this: My horse vaulted in the air and a huge rock lying on the ground came in contact with my physical body. There was a momentary blank, and then I leaped to my feet, joyous at the thought of being released. I looked around me in wonder, not knowing what had happened.

I spoke in as loud voice as I could, but my mother heard me not. I had no pain, no remorse, no fears; but my mother kept up a vigorous massage of my apparently dead body, and when she, as a last resort, filled her hands with water, dashed it into my face, I grew weak, trembled all over, and in a moment I disappeared, I don't know how—right into my other self. Then awful physical pains followed. I told mother all she did, all she said, and all her movements.

This, of course, mother never understood, but the incident made her and myself Spiritualists, though nearly one-half century has gone since then, I still remember I learned my duality, and my exemption from the grave G. W. MEEKS.

The Transition of a Prominent Spiritualist.

Mrs Charlotte Lewis passed away at Providence, R. I., July 17. She was born at Windsor, Ct., November 25, 1832. In her early life she was a devout member of the Methodist Church, but she began to think upon the great problem of life and to investigate as to the life beyond Finally she became convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, but to be convinced meant for her to become identified with the cause and to work for its interest.

Spiritualists all over this country who have known that gifted blind lecturer, Mr. Tisdale, will remember this quiet woman who traveled with and cared for him as a mother for her child. After Mr. Tisdale gave up lecturing, Mrs. Lewis made a home for herself at Providence, but she did not cease to work for Spiritualism. Nearly every week she secured some medium for one or more seances where seekers could investigate without money and without price. The greater part of the summer of 1906 was spent at Niantic, Ct. and although not well, she did not dream of a fatal illness. During all her hard sickness, she remained cheerful, and surprised her friends by the preparations she made for her journey, as she said, all her affairs were attended to so that no trouble should come afterwards. Every plan was made for her funeral that it might be just as she wanted it. It was not a day to dread when she should say, "Good-bye," but as one prepares for a pleasant journey to old friends, so she prepared for her going, anxious to greet the dear ones whom she knew would meet her at the "Gates of the Morning," to welcome her home.

During the last months of her sickness, she was tenderly and lovingly cared for in the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Prouty, who ministered to her every want day and night. When the last hour came she passed peacefully away like a tired child, finding rest in sleep. Her very dear friend, Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding officiated at the funeral which was held July 18. Mrs. Helen Green sang the song and Mrs. Ida Whitlock read the poems she had selected weeks before her transition. The body was taken to Forest Hills for cremation, the ashes to be buried beside Mrs. Harding's mother at Mt. Auburn.

Why a Spiritualist Organization?

A Highly Interesting, Suggestive and Impressive Lecture Delivered by Hon. H. W. Richardson, President of the New York State Association of Spiritualists, at Lily Dale Camp Meeting.

THE LANGUAGE OF THE SPIRIT IS THOUGHT, AND THOUGHTS ARE VISIBLE TO THOSE LIVING IN THE SPIRIT WORLD, CONSEQUENTLY ALL THIS GREAT BEAUTIFUL WORLD OF SPIRIT, KNOWS HOW OPPORTUNITIES HAVE BEEN IMPROVED, AND HOW CHARACTER HAS BEEN DEVELOPED. ARE WE WILLING THAT THE SPIRIT WORLD SHOULD KNOW OUR EVERY THOUGHT, AND WITNESS OUR EVERY ACT WITH THE MOTIVES BEHIND IT? THIS IS A FACT, WHETHER WE WOULD HAVE IT SO OR NOT. AND FURTHERMORE IN THE SPIRIT LIFE, EACH INDIVIDUAL SPIRIT WILL BE DRAWN INTO THAT CONDITION, AND INTO THAT SOCIETY FOR WHICH HE OR SHE IS FITTED. IT MAY BE AMONG THE SELFISH AND IGNORANT, WITH STRANGERS IN DARKNESS AND SORROW, DEPENDING UPON THE LIVES WE LIVE HERE ON EARTH.

This question comes to me from a gentleman who is a devoted churchman, a man whom I believe to be an honest searcher for truth, consequently the inquiry deserves a candid, straightforward reply.

In answering I would say, first, because Spiritualism comes with an important message which other religious movements are not giving to the people.

The professed Christian teachers neglect, or refuse to acquaint themselves and their congregations with spiritual gifts, as St. Paul instructed them to do in Corinthians 12th chapter, consequently they are not prepared to prove continuity of life after transition.

These teachers ask us to accept the Bible record filled with the mediumship of 1900 years ago, but ignore the real living proofs coming through the same channels to-day; and then wonder why there is so much doubt and unbelief, why so many are denying a future existence and drifting away from the church

The Christian teachers of to-day seem to have lost sight of the fact that the only tangible proof of a future life that has ever come to the children of this earth came through manifestations of mediumship in some of its varied forms. Mediumship has ever been the channel of communications and manifestations, which prove that the spirit of man continues to live after casting aside the physical body.

Look where you will. Study history, ancient and modern; study the Christian Bible, and, with the exception of those Psychic or Spiritual manifestations of which the manifestations of to-day are a counterpart) you will find no tangible proof of the continued life of the soul.

All religions had their Spiritual manifestations at their inception; and the primitive Christian movement was no exception to this general rule, and whatever other qualities we attribute to the man of Nazareth, he was highly gifted in psychic powers.

He demonstrated his clairvoyant powers in that interview with the woman of Samaria at the well, to whom, a stranger though he was, he told her the history of her past life in a manner possible to those whose clairvoyant perception is awakened. The woman called him a prophet, which is only another name for a medium or psychic.

Again, on the Mount of Transfiguration, Jesus, James and John held that wonderful spiritual seance and conversed with Moses and Elias who, died (so-called) hundreds of years before, and who appeared in spirit and conversed with these living men, thus demonstrating that the spirit (the real man) continues to live and can communicate with mortals on earth.

Jesus also healed the sick and did many wonderful things, and he said, "He that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do."

But where are the prophets and the inspired teachers of to-day? Where are the followers of the Man of Nazareth, who are demonstrating these things to the people through this, the only channel whereby such proofs can be had? What church is teaching and demonstrating these greater works, as Jesus said his followers would do?

The correspondence between the spiritual manifestations attending modern Spiritualism, to those which attended primitive Christianity as recorded in the Bible, clearly indicates that they were identical in character, and the only rational conclusion is, that they were of similar origin and were from spiritual beings.

St. Paul was entranced while he prayed, just as many Spiritualist lecturers and mediums of to-day are entranced while they pray, and while they speak; and there is nothing miraculous about this. It is simply one mind acting upon another.

The hypnotist in the body, through his mental powers, entrances (or hypnotizes) another person in the body, and causes the hypnotized subject to say things he wills him or her to say. This being a mental power it is not unreasonable to suppose that when the hypnotist enters the spirit world, he retains all his mental powers, and can hypnotize, entrance or influence a person still living in the physical body and cause that person to express the thoughts he wills to be expressed.

Now, this is just what happened to St. Paul, and this is just what happens to our Spiritualist speakers and mediums to-day. They are entranced or impressed through the mental powers of some disembodied spirit. In either case they express the thought of the controlling intelligence.

At the age of twelve, Jesus taught the wise men, giving forth ideas which were so far beyond the capacity of a child of his years, that it was thought to be a miracle.

Under Modern Spiritualism instances similar to this are of frequent occurrence. Young children have given the most profound discourses, times almost without number, and the controlling intelligences when questioned as a rule, claim to be disembodied spirits who once lived on this earth, but who are now dwellers in the spirit world.

The doctrine of Guardian angels or guardian spirits, (for the words angel and spirit are many times used interchangeably in the Bible referring to the same personality) was one of the teachings of primitive Christianity. And we to-day speak of these guardians as spirit guides, in conveying the same thought as guardian spirits or angels. (For are they not all ministering spirits sent to minister unto them who shall be heirs unto salvation, Heb. 1st, 14th.)

Communications from spiritual beings were as frequent among the primitive Christians as they are to-day among Spiritualists. John, the Revelator, conversed with spiritual beings, calling them angels, and when he fell down to worship the angel that showed him the wonderful things recorded in the book of Revelations, he was reproved for so doing, and the angel said to John, "I am thy fellow-servant and of thy brethren, the prophets. Worship God."

In this instance one of the old prophets conversed with John, as did Moses and Elias converse with Jesus and his disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration.

That the exercise of mediumship or psychic powers constituted an important feature of the primitive Christian movement in their religious work, is unquestionably true not only in the instances above mentioned, but in a great many others recorded throughout the Bible.

Now, I ask concerning these things, If Spiritual manifestations were important then, when did they cease to be an important part of Christianity? If God placed these gifts in the churches, as St. Paul said in Corinthians, 12th chapter, when did God remove them from the churches, or has man removed them without God's sanction?

The Spiritualist believes these spiritual manifestations recorded in the Bible did occur, and were a part of the primitive Christian movement.

He believes they are natural now, and were natural then, and that there is no such thing as a miracle now, nor has there ever been, in the sense that the overruling power eminent in this Universe suspends natural law.

When the people have in the past read of occurrences of 1900 years ago which they could not explain, they were called miracles; to-day we are discovering natural laws, and the age of miracles is passing; and with the passing of the miraculous and the recognition of the natural in religion, a long step forward toward the establishment of truth will have been taken.

And when the Christian teachers are ready to add knowledge to their faith, and are prepared to dispense the bread of life, by demonstrating through mediumship that there is a future existence, as did Jesus and the primitive Christians, then there may be less need of a Spiritualist organization than there is to-day.

But do not for one moment suppose that the manifestations constitute the whole of Spiritualism. They are only the foundation, and as such are a part of the house itself. With the foundation lacking or faulty, the structure cannot permanently endure. And yet the Christian churches have eliminated mediumship and spiritual manifestations, which was the foundation of primitive Christianity, and now are wondering why people are losing interest in their doctrines.

Spirit communion has opened the doorway, and higher spiritual intelligences have spoken to the children of earth through the various phases of mediumship, and have given much information concerning conditions in the spiritual world.

And although there are sometimes seeming contradictions (which is not strange, coming as the communications do from spirits of different experiences, of different degrees of advancement, and transmitted through imperfect instruments, many times under unfavorable conditions), yet taken as a whole and analyzed under the clear light of reason and common sense, we are enabled to form conclusions concerning the spiritual world and the conditions under which the disembodied continue to live and act.

For nearly sixty years such communications have been coming in untold numbers. They have come through many phases of mediumship to persons of all temperaments, and in all walks of life. Hundreds of volumes have been written upon the subject, and conclusions have been reached and expressed from almost every conceivable standpoint.

Through this mass of information there are certain well defined principles cropping out all along the lines, the same general ideas being expressed over and over again, with seldom a conflicting thought. In this way many experiences of the spirit immediately following transition, and further along in the journey of spirit life, have been repeated so frequently, and from such reliable sources that we cease to question their authenticity.

So that there are some things concerning the future life which the Spiritualists claim to know, and from this knowledge we draw our conclusion and predicate our teachings.

We have learned that there is but one life for each individual soul. That life is one continuous whole, that life in the spirit realm is but a continuation of life on the physical plane, minus the physical body. We have learned that death (so-called) is only a natural event in the larger life of the spirit.

That this earthly existence is a preparatory course for the advanced department of life's school in the spiritual world and that the individual spirit of man at the moment of separating from the body, is identically the same, has the same ideas, the same knowledge, the same ties, and possesses the same spirit that he had a moment before.

That progress, growth and development are the heritage of all for continued life means continued activity, since there is no more stagnation in the spirit world than here. Death does not immediately add to character, nor detract from it.

That progress and evolution have never stopped and never will stop, and that the inhabitants of the spirit world work on and on acquiring understanding and perfection in those fields of labor for which they are best fitted. They know the pleasure that comes from time well spent.

We learn also that the earthly life of many people is one great masquerade. Their lives are covered by the mask of material, and they are never really known by their associates on this earth; but in the spirit world we appear as we really are.

Suppose that here and now the secret thoughts, motives, selfishness, greed and desires of men could be protographed; and character made visible, how startled the world would be. How many would hide? At transition the mask falls from the face. On entering the spirit world men are seen for the first time in the Mirror of Nature. They see themselves as they really are. Even now we hide nothing from spirits.

On entering the spirit world we will know and fully realize that our lives have always been an open book. Here there is hypocrisy and deceit; there, hypocrisy is unknown, and deceit is impossible.

The language of the spirit is thought, and thoughts are visible to those living in the spirit world, consequently all this great, beautiful world or spirit, knows how opportunities have been improved, and how character has been developed.

Are we willing that the spirit world should know our every thought, and witness our every act, with the motives behind it?

This is a fact, whether we would have it so or not. And furthermore, in the spirit life, each individual spirit will be drawn into that condition, and into that society for which he or she is fitted.

It may be among beautiful characters, in happy homes, surrounded by the loved ones who have gone before; it may be among the selfish and ignorant, with strangers in darkness and sorrow, depending upon the lives we live here on earth.

The spirit homes can be made beautiful, for everyone is his or her own architect. Every act of charity, kindness, tenderness and love adds to the beauty and comfort of our spirit homes, while every act of selfishness, cruelty and oppression, casts a shadow. So that when we enter our spirit homes, we face the deeds of the earth life.

The walls are hung with mental pictures, depicting the record made from day to day by the thoughts and deeds of our daily life. Little acts of kindness, a word of sympathy, a tender touch, are reproduced and framed in harmony.

Selfishness, unkindness, immorality, wickedness and dishonor, are pictured and hung on the walls of that home, there to remain until individual restitution shall cover, or remove them.

Transition.

Under the olden teaching we had been told that death was an awful thing; a thing to be dreaded and feared; a journey to that country from whose bourne no traveler ever returns.

We know that these teachings were erroneous. The man has returned from that country. The gateway to the spirit world has swung open. We have heard from the man whom we supposed was dead, and he tells us he is more alive than ever. We have heard from the man (the spirit man) who had never experienced the Christian religion and who should, according to the olden teachings, be in eternal torment. But this man tells us there is no literal hell as taught by the church; that hell is a mental condition commencing right here on the earth and continuing until one outgrows his errors and rights the wrongs he had done his fellows, and that for a time after entering the spirit world, at least a part of his labors will be devoted to the righting of these wrongs.

We have heard from Christian men and women after their transition and they tell us they were disappointed in not meeting their Savior. That whereas they supposed through confessing Him their sins would be wiped away through the atoning blood, they now find they must work out their own salvation. They must right the wrongs they have done their fellows; they must seek forgiveness of those whom they have injured, and, when this is done and not before, they can move forward in their soul's progression.

We have learned that death is not an awful calamity, as had been taught, but simply a moving out—a vacating of the earthly habitation, a separation of the spirit from the body, a natural incident which is painless, sometimes conscious, but more frequently unconscious, and the awakening is like the coming from a bewildered sleep.

We were the same last night, before sleep as we are this morning, and we have the same surroundings. We shall be the same after dissolution as before, and probably we shall be in the same place. Where would you go, except to the home you have made, except to those whom you love?—to those who, because they are ignorant of your presence, mourn your absence.

Death is like birth, with this exception: in death one takes with him the knowledge and development acquired in this material existence, which, we are told, is a period of preparation for eternity. There is no break; there is only progression to greater possibilities. If, then, this stage was intended for preparation and development, what effort has been made to understand the laws of life? What spiritual understanding has come to the people generally? One has labored here for the accumulation of money for old age, but what wealth has he accumulated for his support and maintenance down the pathway of eternity? How is he prepared to journey into the spirit world? Who is to blame for the ignorance of the world concerning these vital questions?

We are taught that individual spirit is conscious visible thought—soul-life freed from the confines of the physical body; that spirit appears to spirit as material as does man appear to man.

Assuming that he passes over consciously, he may stand beside his body in the same room, see and feel himself as in life, move his arms, walk, talk, think and act, just as before. His old body is before him. He may see the falling tears of the loved ones, hear their cries and feel the anguish that fills their hearts. He speaks, they do not hear. He cries aloud that he is not dead. His arms are about them; but they cannot feel. Then a great fear falls upon him. Why don't they hear? Why don't they answer? What has happened? This cannot be death. He is still at home, though his body lies in the winding sheet, calm and still.

What an experience for a newborn soul, just graduating into a higher department of life's school without having learned the simplest lesson in relation to the change.

Would you take a day's journey without preparation and thought of your needs and requirements? What, then, of this journey into the beyond? Is it not infinitely more important?

The Future of Spiritualism.

Spiritualism is a progressive movement. Almost sixty years of cooperation between advanced teachers in higher spheres and conscientious men and women on the earth plane have borne its fruit and made a marked impress upon human thought and contributed largely to the world's advancement, intellectually, physically and spiritually.

The foundation for this progressive movement is the proof of continuity of life, together with the fact of spirit intercommunion.

Through the one the prevailing materialism of fifty years ago has been practically wiped out, while through the other many useful and beautiful lessons have been revealed from master minds in the spirit world, which has changed the whole modern conception of the future life, and of the universe.

It has removed the sting of death by showing that it is a natural and beautiful event, a welcome visitor to the matured soul whose labors on earth are finished; and who through this change graduates into a higher department of life's great school.

It immensely enlarges man's conception of the universe, and of an all-pervading intelligence called God; and confirms the poetic ideal that

"This universe is one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the Soul."

So that to-day science is forced to recognize the all-pervading life force pulsating in every atom of a Spiritual Universe, of which this material world is only an infinitesimal part.

Mediumship in its varied forms is an important agency in this work, without which the higher forces could not act upon the human mind. Thought force is an instrumentality used by the higher intelligences to convey the messages and impress the sensitive brain of the mediumistic individuals. And Spiritualism is the one religious movement which encourages and defends mediumship.

The time will undoubtedly come when through intuition (or impressional mediumship, which is a phase of clairvoyance) each individual will be directly inspired by higher intelligences and co-operation between the two worlds will become a generally recognized fact. But that is for the future, and we must be practical, for we are dealing with present conditions.

The Religion of Spiritualism.

The religion of Spiritualism is a natural religion, because its every tenet is in perfect harmony with natural law.

It is a progressive religion because it recognizes the fact that evolution, growth and progress, come through the processes of Nature and are the legitimate heritage of all mankind in all spheres of existence, both in the now and in the hereafter.

It is a humanitarian religion because it recognizes the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; or the solidarity of the races.

Furthermore, the ethical standard of Modern Spiritualism is not surpassed by that of any other system of religion or philosophy. It recognizes the Golden Rule as the highest expression of justice, and the Sermon on the Mount as in perfect accord with the lofty ideals which the inspired teachers of to-day are giving for our guidance.

Spiritualism stands for truth, justice, and equality of opportunity for every man, woman and child.

It recognizes the fact that Brotherhood in its practical application to everyday life is the ideal of to-day; but that sometime it is to become a living reality right here on this earth, and I should feel that I was recreant to my duty if I failed to do my humble part toward liberating the people from the present thraldom of commercialism and establishing in its stead a system of justice and brotherhood.

In Conclusion.

A great spiritual thought current is now sweeping over the civilized world. Men and women are not content to remain in ignorance. They are seeking to solve this mystery of life and death. They are hungering for knowledge. They want to know what of the future; to know where and under what conditions those they love and hold most dear live and labor. To such inquiring minds Spiritualism demonstrates that there is no death. Those who have lived their time on this earth, and have passed from sight, still live and love and labor in fields of everlasting life. Make the conditions that nature requires and they will speak to you and greet you as of old. The laws governing spirit communion are simple and natural! Knowledge of these laws does not necessarily require the labor of the scientist, who are generally materialists only dealing with material things, having no comprehension of the laws that govern life in spirit. The understanding is within the grasp of the family of almost any household, and from this source, knowledge concerning spiritual things can come.

To be sure there are many great problems which cannot be solved by mortals, but the primary truth of continuity of life beyond the physical condition and environment may be learned by almost any household in the world to-day by developing the psychic forces in that home.

And the doorway once opened, and loving messages of greeting exchanged, the experiences of the disembodied, and the lessons of life which they may impart to those remaining on the earth plane, will be a guide and lamp to our feet as we travel the rugged pathway of this earthly pilgrimage.

The thought of a universal religion is a beautiful ideal, and will, we trust, some day become a living reality.

Such a religion will embrace the good, the true, and the noble in every religion the world has known.

It will take truth for authority instead of authority for truth.

It will be natural in every sense of the word, and most emphatically liberal in its interpretations of the great lessons of life, as relates both to the now and to the hereafter.

It will recognize the fact that inspiration is for all people and for all ages, and that the lofty ideals of master minds in the spiritual world are now, as they ever have been, the incentive to better living, better thinking, and a larger soul development here on the earth plane.

Such a religion must be humanitarian, and deal with the vital questions which confront the people on the physical plane in a way that will make for justice, equality and brotherhood. When such a religion is once established in the hearts of the people, we may well question the need of a Spiritualist organization.

THE COMPETITIVE SYSTEM.

Its Exemplification as Outwrought in the Career of John D. Rockefeller—As Depicted From the Standpoint of a Socialist.

There must be somebody at the very height, the top pinnace—the oil king whose name heads this article is now in the world the crowning success of a system.

With a singleness of life purpose, John D. Rockefeller has followed that system, has put his very soul into it, has exemplified it. He is to-day the most powerful creature on the face of the earth, the most conspicuous, in such exemplifications.

It has always been a precept running through the much advice that is offered people, that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well. Is there anyone among all the votaries of the system who feels qualified to give unto John D. Rockefeller yet more direct showing as to how he might and ought to have dominion over all the earth by this time, instead of what he has already accomplished? In view of history and the facts thereof, it may well be doubted whether the subject of these remarks needs advisers in his special line, or whether there are those qualified to impart to him knowledge of what he does not himself know about his business.

It seems that it may well be conceded that John D. Rockefeller holds the sceper by virtue of his own powers, and that he is able to hold it against the world.

So much to show he is the great head of the system.

This is not the system Tom Lawson has been prating about these many months and years. His system is but a twig of the great System Tree which is meant herein.

What is the distinct designation of the system of which Rockefeller is the crowning exemplification? It is the COMPETITIVE SYSTEM.

The term which we now so unconsciously roll our tongues about and concerning which so much sophistry is given by the system's temporary beneficiaries is but a sugar coating of what was formerly known as MIGHT IS RIGHT, REGARDLESS OF THE WELFARE OF ALL OTHER FELLOW CREATURES—this and nothing more!

The Knights of Industry understand this quite thoroughly, and no one can truly say they are not consistently living up to their convictions.

Who begat the competitive system? Did Rockefeller? Absurd proposition!

The Get-All-You-Can System, Regardless of Whether You Deprive All Others in the World, is at least as old as the present civilization, and to blame Rockefeller and his compeers for the sowing of a seed thousands of years ago, which, under natural law could culminate in but what it is as a fruitage of which they are only the more fore-handed, eager and willing harvesters, is as illogical as it is unavailing. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap."

Humanity has been sowing this seed for thousands of years, and has built up nations, empires and mighty hosts on the Principle. Thousands still believe the principle is correct, and yet this very day they cry out as loudly as any against the inevitable and logical carrying out thereof the legitimate conclusions as exemplified by Standard Oil, Steel and other great trusts and combines in our country.

Oh, Consistency, thou art a jewel.

All the earsplitting noise and lamentation now heard directed against the chief beneficiaries of an iniquitous system comes in the main from the many smaller pigs now crowded away by these beautifully full-grown hogs who monopolize the trough.

This may not be an elegant simile, but it seems to fit the subject.

Of all the people in the world that defend the system, it seems to me the orthodox Christians, the professed followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, are the most singularly obtuse or hypocritical (as the case may be), of any, and yet the writer knows people of high and respectable standing in the church and who get horrified at any suggestion leading from rock-ribbed, deep-rooted Churchianity to which they are wedded, who can see no wrong in it, and whose only answer to the whole question is: "You would do the same thing if you only had the chance."

Imagine the sardonic grin that must come to the ample mouth of old John, he himself being such a pillar in the church, when he hears his brothers and sisters in Christ thus express themselves to those who condemn the system!

The grim irony of it ought to make old Beelzebub chortle.

Joking aside, our body politic is in quite a serious condition as a consequence, and the only words of consolation that can seemingly be offered are: "Cheer up, for the worst is yet to come!"

True, we now have an eminent physician who is giving ailing Uncle Sam some of his earnest medical attendance—Dr. Roosevelt of Washington, D. C. He has discovered the Rockefeller cancer menacing breaking out. He is applying Trust-Busting Salves in hopes that new skin may heal over the sores. Will this cure the evil now in fact so deep-rooted in the blood, the bone and the marrow thereof?

Certainly not. Until the Competitive System, now in its fruitage, has been discovered by true diagnosis to be in fact the old robber system of Might and Right, has been banished, and in place Rational Co-operativeness, aye, a mild Paternalism, has been substituted, perhaps fairly well exemplified in New Zealand at the present day, and in the City of Glasgow, there seems but little hope for anything but palliative prolongation of the National life.

We are aware that a doctrine such as this is as obnoxious to the money-chasing Yank, as was the Christ doctrine to the Jewish money-changers that Jesus drove from the temples, but what of that?

If the doctrine be TRUE, however, what matters it what anyone says against it?

Truth is mighty and will prevail, and, religiously speaking, THERE IS NO RELIGION HIGHER THAN TRUTH.

We must waken up to the true situation. To do this we must call to aid all the philosophy, all power to grasp the occult forces, all the inner lights that we can command, and bow obediently to Divine Law, the great counterpoise and balancer of all conditions in the Universe.

The observant student who reads, compares, who seeks to arrive at a knowledge in unbiased way, of the trend of higher thought, cannot but be much impressed with a unanimity of opinion, expressed by philosophical writers of high standing, of Theosophy, of Oahspe, of Spiritualism, and other organized occult thought-expression, and which is, that the world is on the verge of mighty changes—in government, socially, individually, and religiously. That, cyrcyly, evolutionary, and as a natural ripenment of the earth and all that it contains, with all thereon subsisting, new light, higher conceptions, the sway of Justice to All, will come as a sweet and refreshing rain to a parched land; that a move forward and upward will be made, and that the shackles of ignorance and superstition will be sundered, and oppression by the strong of the weak cease—

"For time at last sets all things right,
And if we do but bide the hour,
There never yet was human power
That could evade, if unforgiven,
The patient search and vigil long
Of him who treasures up a wrong."

FEEBLE-MINDED CHILDREN.

Some Wonderful Results of Giving Them Sound Training.

A despatch from the daily papers says that the Iowa State institution for feeble-minded children, located at Glenwood, has several "idiot savants" who are regarded as remarkable. One inmate is used as a calendar and date record, another is utilized as a dictionary, another is employed as a ready rapid calculator, and others show the marvelous but unexplainable traits of the "learned idiots."

Dr. A. R. Schier, assistant superintendent of the institution, has just made his report, as required by the Iowa law. The most astonishing case he reports is that of John S., taken into the institution when he was 12 years of age and who has been there twenty-three years. He is the mental book-keeper of the home. When the date of any occurrence about the institution is desired as information, John S. gives it. He recalls without error the date of the employment of any new hand or the entrance or discharge of any inmate.

If he has seen a visitor at the home he can recall the exact date of the visit, the condition of the weather at that time and some of the incidents connected therewith, even though it occurred years before any question is asked him concerning it. If given the day of the month, the month and year of any occurrence as far back as thirty-five years, John S. will, without hesitation, tell upon what day of the week the date fell. Asked how he does it he replies that he does not know.

Marvelous ability is shown by a boy inmate about 16 years of age. He can neither read nor write, yet he can readily spell any word given him, and as Dr. Schier says: "He has has been tried with uncommon words time and time again and never fails to spell them correctly. He is constantly called upon to settle spelling disputes, and is as reliable as a dictionary." Both his parents were insane.

G. F. H., aged 18 years, of Danish descent, can multiply three figures by three figures as rapidly as they can be written down. He never fails in his multiplication feats, but his addition, subtraction and division are not correct.

A 17-year-old boy, R. G. L., without education, is able to mould the forms of animals with almost miraculous perfection. Other figures he cannot make. He was found one day mixing saliva with dust and moulding the figures of animals, which, from his first attempt, were perfect in almost every detail.

TIMELY ADVICE.

Don't Send Your Children to Sunday School.

To the Editor:—In number 920 of The Progressive Thinker is a short article under the above title from the pen of Eleanor K. Eager, who is well known to lyceum workers and pupils as E. K. E. This one little article is laden with so much important meaning, filled with so much soul-food, that it alone is worth far more than the yearly subscription price of the paper, and it needs careful consideration. It should be read and re-read, and well pondered by every Spiritualist in our ranks, especially those who are parents.

Our children are jewels, whose untold worth is above rubies, gold or precious stones.

Error can never eradicate ignorance, but instead will only pile the rubbish higher and sink the truth farther out of sight, and make it harder to find when sought for.

We who are Spiritualists indeed realize with E. K. E. that the teachings of real Spiritualism are diametrically opposed to the mental bondage and creedal, dogmatic superstitions of churchianity, of which the Sunday-schools are the hot-houses, in which the minds of children are bent in favor of the church's teachings.

Surely all thinking persons know that every church looks to its Sunday-schools for the recruits which, sooner or later, must fill its ranks and carry forward its movement.

If the fundamental teachings of Spiritualism are right, it naturally follows that the fundamental teachings of the churches are wrong, for surely the East is not farther from the West than are fundamental principles of Spiritualism and churchism.

Truth does not spring forth from the seeds of error.

We need not expect to reap a harvest of love by having others plant the seeds of hate in the minds of our children for our religion; neither need we expect our children to become Spiritualists if we allow the Sunday-schools to direct their religious training while young.

I have two little boys, but Sunday-schools will never taint their minds. I was raised there myself, and at fifty I am still unloading the errors that my youth and middle life was wasted in learning. "As the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined."

WORLD MAKING A scientific explanation of the Birth, Growth and Death of Worlds. by Samuel Phelps Leland Ph. D., LL. D., Emeritus Professor of Astronomy and lecturer on science in Charles City College. A Work of intense interest, by a scientist and profound thinker. Cloth, price, 75 cts.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?
The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP
with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those intersted in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

IN RETROSPECT.

With an Intensely Practical Bearing on a Far-reaching Prospective.

Looking over a file of papers written by myself under spirit control, one dated in 1882 impressed me. It was headed by the following in quotation marks:

"Everyone is serving, both by word and deed,
All mankind is growing either wheat or cheat;
And as is this sowing will the harvest be—
Words and deeds are growing for eternity."

"Ye who are searching for truth and sowing the good seeds of truth, love and kindness, will find a harvest of golden sheaves and grain stored for you in the eternal granaries of wisdom and truth, which alone is true wealth, for in accordance therewith all external possessions are freely given to all who have provided for themselves heavenly, eternal riches."

Here a change of diction came under the caption of "An Electrical Demonstration," referring to the pentecostal demonstration as recorded in the second chapter of Acts, that was well and carefully prepared—for occasion. The disciples were trained so that they were with one accord in one place awaiting something in keeping with previous promises, when suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind. It filled all the house where they were sitting and there appeared unto them cloven tongues, as of fire, and it sat upon each of them, etc.

This occurrence should in these days receive closest study and attention, not only by all mediums and psychics, but by the scientific students, especially those endeavoring to become more closely acquainted with the wonders of that queen of all sciences—electricity.

Note how the demonstration referred to resembled forked lightning. The preparations for that event made it possible that the chemical and electrical masters in spirit could induct all grades of electricity and energy in humanity, and in a certain sense the life. It was due to this that all assembled were adressed by those under this electrical stimulus, in their native language, proving that all are included in these wonderful works of regeneration and redemption from their crudities, ignorance and vices due to their undeveloped mental states and true spiritual perceptions; that all peoples on earth, even those afar off, should in time be stirred to true action by the spirit of God in accordance with their unfoldment. Yes; even in that degree wherein they are found on the planes of externalized life in human forms.

In those days of the demonstration referred to, nothing was really known of the wonders of electricity. Gradually only, in these latter days, it is being brought forth in its power and utility. Much is in store awaiting to be brought forth for various uses and to give it its rightful place in its highest office as universal energy. The crude processes of generating electricity as for motive and lighting use will be proofs of how cosmic processes from remotest beginnings were conducted; but the time comes when these processes can be and will be dispensed with, when student can grasp the ideas of how to evolve the earth electricities and supplement them with that of the elements to so prove grades and qualities, and the strengths of said electrical grades and qualities, which later will be supplemented with the earth's and elemental magnetisms, which then will produce a variegated mellow light superior to any the world ever has had and which will be a true curative agency for all human ills.

But all this goes by progressive stages, step by step. It cannot be otherwise, as all these processes are supremely governed.

The time is ripe for greater electrical and spiritual demonstrations than the world has ever yet witnessed. This spiritual outpouring of the present spiritual era was to be largely attended by powerful demonstrations of electrical energy and spiritual wisdom and truth. It fails for a time owing to the worldly spirit, or rather the sordid, covetous desires for worldly gains will be, are, in reality, a hindrance and bar to keep back purposed demonstrations; but in time they will burst forth nevertheless. Tests and the voices of undeveloped spirits which have thronged back those greater works—and will do so for a season—fill a niche to mark the spirit rampant in general in this age of the world, but otherwise confer no real benefit upon humanity.

This is truth and will so prove itself.

I think, Mr. Editor, this needs to be given to your readers now.

THE POWER OF LOVE.

Love will bind us, cement us and make us one mighty whole,
For 'tis the most precious food with which to feed the soul,
All other kinds being useless, simply creating a thirst,
Therefore 'tis plainly our duty to partake of this kind first,
In fact no other attribute so completely transforms man
As love in all its fulness, and nothing possibly can.
Then let us feed our souls upon pure and holy love,
Such as satisfies the hunger of those darling ones above,
Then harmony will prevail in place of selfishness and hate,
And for all our earthly sacrifices true love will compensate,
Thus filling each and every soul with satisfying food,
Purifying and transforming us; thus making each one good.
Jealousy, hate and discord, are forever breeders of strife
And make the world miserable in all the walks of life,
And such attributes as these will not satisfy the soul,
Nor make your lives happy, nor lead you to that goal
Where life with all its changes will end in perfect bliss,
And if such a happy ending in this manner you should miss,
Do not lay the blame on others, nor on Nature's laws,
But yourselves, and you alone, have truly been the cause.

"Continuity of Life a Cosmic Truth." By Prof. Wm. M. Lockwood. The work of a strong, logical thinker, on a deeply important subject. Price, cloth, $1.00.

Impersonation Carefully Considered.

"Aspasia" and the Part She Has Taken in Deception.

An impressive lecture by Charles W. Kee, of Washington, to the readers of The Progressive Thinker, in which he presents some important thoughts on the above subject, for their careful consideration. He refers to the spirit Aspasia, the reputed gifted mistress of Pericles, illustrating the necessity of great care being exercised in determining the identity of the spirit. Any amount of fraud has been practiced under the name of "Aspasia," as she figured so conspicuously in the past. Spirit return is a fixed fact, but what is communicated by spirits should be carefully weighed in the balance of Common Sense.

The astonishing familiarity with the stock terms and phrases heard in the seance room on the part of those who have entered spirit life, and who, in many instances, were never particularly endowed with the faculty of discrimination in matters appertaining to the relative values of mind force, affords a striking intimation that such influences are not in all cases identical with the entities represented, and savors strongly of the interposition or infusion of a foreign intellect, either for the purpose of relieving the embarrassment of the mortal who longingly entertains the hope of communicating with some favored one, or to boldly assume a role under a name of greater or less note for the purpose of emphasizing the value of the communication given, or the quality of the operating influence.

The theory of deliberate deception, however illogical or odious, is not in all cases untenable, and it would be proper to accord to the excarnate entity the same latitude and benefits of arising doubts as we would expect to entertain in passing on the veracity of a statement issuing from mortal lips.

This suggestion presupposes the hypothesis of impersonation in a large percentage of cases of physical and independent voice manifestations, the scope of which is probably much larger than will be readily admitted by the more enthusiastic devotees of the theory of the infallibility of spirit communion; and however disparagingly this argument may affect the cherished hopes of a communicant in the conviction of personal identity, it is none the less true that instances of genuine evidence of spirit return, free from the intervening and shaping influence of the forces noted in the atmosphere of the psychic, are rare, indeed.

It will be observed that too much caution cannot be taken with respect ot disclosing information in the presence of the psychic.

Not so much is this caution directed toward an honest psychic, as to the fact that the immediate surroundings are permeated with an afflatus prepared to imbibe and reflect the impressions and characteristics of the sensitive to such an extent that, in many cases, the efforts of spiritual forces to impart information with the suggestive aid of the sitter are quite valueless, and are particularly noted as being commensurate with the limitations and qualifications of the sensitive, even to inaccuracies in personal diction.

With rare exceptions the personal likes and dislikes of the sensitive are strongly reflected.

No communication may be regarded as complete, as far as the question of identity is concerned, unless the same can be eliminated in every conceivable way from the sphere of influence of the medium, or the peculiar atmosphere surrounding his personality.

This must be fully established in order that the communication may be further segregated from the mentality of the recipient.

These precautions are often disregarded by the enthusiastic who frequently suggest a plausible reply in every question, or charitably frame the conversation that the desired responses are easily anticipated.

Such manifestations are of little value, and are interesting only to the extent of gratifying a selfish desire to hear from favored sources, or to seek advices which encourage personal bickerings between man and man.

Indeed, it is unblushingly and openly admitted in some quarters if the unseen influences cannot aid us in our machinations and schemes against our fellow men, and if they are not willing to retrograde to the level of the crafty mortal, inspired with an insidious desire to foist stratagem upon the unwary, they can be of little use to us; and the mere fact of spirit return, reluctantly admitted in a quasi skeptical tone, is, in itself, a matter of minor importance to them.

The value of the bare truth has a most economical influence upon them, and it is hardly sufficient to cope with the more sentimental and all-absorbing interests incident to an era in which the spirit of commercialism predominates, and pervades the very interstices of present-day activities.

A spirit medium, or control, appears to be as necessary, in so many instances, for the transmission of intelligence on the part of the various spirit forces, as is the more material medium to the mortal; and it appears conclusive that the controlling influence of a sensitive, spirit or mortal, is master of the situation, and the fact of such control is tantamount to the degree of potency which controls absolutely the passivity and trance state of the sensitive, and may modify, receive or reject any or all manifestations between spirit and mortal.

Instances are not few where they have been known to co-operate with the mercenary motives of unprincipled mediums.

Data of this character afford further evidence of the continuity of personal characteristics. Frequent statements coming from spirit forces convey assurances that death is not a process of purification through which the individual becomes immediately changed into a being of infinite goodness.

Evidences of the frequent return of the spirit forces clothed with all the grandeur and nobleness of character indicative of an ideal mortal existence, and displaying capabilities and loftiness of sentiment far beyond the powers of the medium under the most favored conditions, are by no means rare.

An instance is here recalled of the appearance of a form in a room sufficiently well lighted to enable one to distinguish every person present, giving the name of a woman, and who permitted her form to be touched by those present. The form appeared as solid as that of any mortal.

She stated that conditions on this occasion were unusually poor, and that it was not customary for her to appear, but she had decided to do so on this occasion.

Up to this time she had been quite jovial, but finally asked that some subject be given her that she might spin a rhyme.

This being done, she instantly began in a tone which, for loftiness and divine beauty was a most marvelous production.

This was done some three or four times with consummate facility, skill and grace. The subjects were given at random by different persons present, and each one calling for the exercise of an intellectuality directed along distinctive channels, and all equally applicable to the encouragement of human endeavor.

The power to perform this was by no means ordinary, and the faculty to improvise in this manner is not found in the common walks of life. The medium was incapable of such a production, and, with all due respect to those who were present, it is safe to say that not one was the proud possessor of such a faculty. Whose form this was I am not prepared to say, but the intellectuality was assuredly not that of any one present. That it would be possible for one to exhibit a power akin to this on occasion is quite possible, but the faculty to issue an extemporaneous effusion, apropos, lofty and pure, is the production of genius.

In other instances, displays of sordid personality and petty limitations emphasize as great disparagement in the qualifications and status of spirit life as can be found before this state is reached in the course of evolution, and clearly indicated that many phases of spirit life are quite inferior to certain developed conditions found on the mortal plane.

The hypothesis of consequent progression incident to every stage and form of life is temporarily estopped to dispose of the question of the apparent retrogression to the conditions analogous to the lowest forms of mortal life, as a link in the long chain of unfoldment, or may we assume that the necessary endowments are evolved on the spirit side of life through countless ages of ethereal existence?

Information on this question from spirit sources is as diversified and unsatisfactory as any conclusions resulting from the sophistry of the logician.

The confusion sometimes displayed by the returning spirit involves no little study, and is particularly difficult of clarification on account of the ex parte character of the study, and the peculiar conditions, making only certain manifestations possible, and the intricate maze it is conceivable may surround an entity of mediocre intellectuality, as noted in mortal life.

It would, therefore, seem gratuitous to offer explanations beyond a recital of individual experiences, and the definitions of the manifesting entities in the ratio of their applicability to our rules of logic.

The realism of the new life is designated as so striking that the fact of mortal demise is frequently but imperfectly understood.

The occasional simulation of doubt to emphasize this striking situation is not modified by the fact that the most labored effort is frequently necessary to effect evidence of recognition on the part of the manifesting entity, which, when accomplished, awakens the most ardent gratitude and contentment over the realization of a situation which was but imperfectly comprehended.

The question of impersonation is quite impossible of satisfactory determination, since even the most valuable test information may be conveyed to the sitter through an influence unknown to the recipient. I refer to the experience of a gentleman known to me who was constantly receiving communications from a noted historical character, Aspasia—the reputed gifted mistress of Pericles.

At materializing seances forms would appear to him giving the name of this noted woman, and at other seances little messages purporting to come from the same person would be handed to him, as would likewise appear, what was claimed by his spirit friends, her photograph on his plate, as a beautiful spirit identifying herself by the star on her forehead. Her spiritual presence was indicated to him in all conceivable ways, and her visits were so regular that her absence became a matter of remark; and by reason of the intellectuality she is reported to have possessed, those present considered themselves especially honored by her visits to one who never would have been able to participate in the associations honored by the recognition of this noted woman. Her visits became the subject of comment on account of the reputed genius and attainments of the spirit during her mortal career in Athens, where her house was the rendesvous of the savants where her house was the rendezvous of the savants of the age in which she lived, and the insignificance of her new acquaintance.

Were these two persons to be considered in the light of contemporaneous characters, there would be found nothing which would suggest the slightest sympathy or kinship between them.

These visits by the alleged Aspasia continued until the gentleman suddenly died. It was then supposed that he had at last found Aspasia, and would enlighten us at the earliest opportunity.

Much to the surprise of those who knew him best he failed to visit the seances most frequented by him during his lifetime, and not until six or seven months afterwards did he appear at another place where he was but little known. To his most intimate associates in the investigation of psychic phenomena he has rarely appeared.

He was asked if he had finally found happiness in the realization of his spiritual association with his famous friend Aspasia.

He replied plainly and deliberately that in this respect he was most unhappy. He had not, he stated, met Aspasia, as he expected. He said he had discovered he had never met nor spoken to Aspasia, and that all such representations by someone representing her were impositions, and from what he had learned, he had despaired of ever seeing her.

When asked if the imposition was due to mortal agencies, he stated that the deceptions were those of spirit forces, and such being the case, stated that he would not know Aspasia if he should meet her, nor would he know how to govern himself with reference to any representations made to him concerning her. We could offer no relief from this predicament, and, as a consequence, his disappointment was very noticeable.

Presently, however, another spirit appeared to come to the rescue, and stated that the visits of Aspasia had always been through one or more spirit mediums, and that on account of her exalted condition in the spirit realms it had been impossible to descend to the coarse level of the mortal plane to meet her friends.

This information seems never to have been vouchsafed during the two years the party believed he was communicating with the identical Aspasia.

It will thus be seen that the field of impersonation embraces every phase of spirit manifestation, and that the question of identity is ever present for determination before any communication may logically and conclusively be accepted.

TIMELY THOUGHTS.

For the Consideration of Spiritualists and Delegates to the Next N. S. A. Convention.

Many months have passed since my return from the N. S. A. Convention held in your city October last, the memory of which is still fresh as the dew in early morn. From the numerous articles that have appeared of late pro and con in the spiritual press and many other advanced publications, and church pamphlets, one can see there is a deep interest being manifested concerning important features in our movement. Our "Convention" should be on the alert and "lend an eye and an ear" to the problems that confront us; also to the important questions laid over, referred to committees to report on in 1907. These questions should find an easy solution, considering such solution will make or mar our cause in the future. Let us hope that sufficient interest and time may be allotted to solve these important questions, that definite plans and purposes may be set forth, that workers in our cause, from the greatest to the least, may know where we stand; that we may have some definite knowledge as to the part our N. S. A. is to take in directing State associations, chartered societies, and specially what protection to the medium speaker and message bearer.

As mediums, what are our rights? To whom shall we look for counsel and protection pending this country's license laws, which are growing more stringent day by day?

Is our National Spiritual Association able, as a body, to protect its children?

A workman is worthy of his hire. We must be sustained, and we should have in our great "National" sufficient prestige to help make these laws that affect our welfare.

We have a "National," but are we organized? In almost every city throughout our land your spiritual medium is forced to pay a license that has actually forced many out of the work, or induced unjust work on the public, that the daily bread may be had.

We have a fair amount of brain among our people; let us use it for a while, and give our hobby a rest. Men and women who think, find there is something to do, if we would get somewhere.

Our cause, which is the "Light of the World," through the tolerance of slack methods of conducting services, with little or no recognition or observance of spiritual rules, has robbed the name of Spiritualism of its sweeter attraction and left nothing but chaff in many hamlets throughout our land.

The N. S. A., with all of its corps of workers, can do but little with such slack co-operation as seems to prevail.

People are becoming more interested every day, and seek information from "Authority," some source, other than "Any Old Rag Time" or "As you like it" piece.

One can scarcely help seeing (unless it be a crime to think) that our Spiritualist ranks are ready in need of "discipline," for without system, well disciplined, it will be impossible, as well as improbable, to disguise the approaching cloud that seems inevitable. Or shall we find, when too late, that we have tried to cover up, smoothe over, the very condition we should stand united in eradicating.

The outside world knows more of "Spiritual Spiritualism" than the most of our Spiritualists of forty years standing.

Brother Barrett is to be commended. He has opened a few of its pages, that all may read who will. Don't let us forget that even in these few pages rests a mighty truth—a truth too mighty to be overlooked. This is not a one-sided question to be discussed by a few who hold office, but a subject far-reaching. There is a deeper problem, a greater danger confronting us than that implied in the words "Commercial Mediumship." Not to you and to me alone, but to our cause, as a movement. Who has a better or larger opportunity to behold "the mote" and "the beam" than our president, with fourteen years of summing up of experience?

Every effort should be made to put Spiritualism on a respectable basis, where spiritually cultured men and women need not shrink when addressed as Spiritualists, for fear of being classed with a lot of immoral, thieving grafters, many of these whose advertisements cover columns of our daily papers, headed "Spiritualism." In many cases their "Diplomas" hang on the wall, and it is these that are supported by our Spiritualists, who shout their superiority, until "bunkoed" out of large sums of money; then "Poor Spiritualism" gets "a black eye," and with a venomous whimpering they hie themselves to some "back-woods" and wear a "fake" countenance forevermore.

It is such who shine under our light, but never enter its flame.

It is high time we ask: "Whither are we tending?"

In Sunday Oregonian, June 16, a lengthy article appeared suggesting remedies for protection to our citizens against fortune telling. That means you and me.

No, my friends, we have not yet gained a stand where the problem will be solved that will bring about full protection to mediumship. The world is waiting for an answer—a plain definition:

What is Spiritualism?

What does it include, and what does it embrace?

Is Spiritualism a religion? On what are its religious doctrines based?

As a Spiritualist body, are we a creedless, irreligious people? If so, why ordain ministers to preach in a cause with no religious or Christian principles?

As Spiritualists are we a religious body, or are we scientists with collected evidence?

By what means can we gain sufficient acquiescence of authority to force our knowledge, our religion, our science, into a respectable and popular acceptance or following? We must unite in some spiritual religion or there will be a worse scattering between the "sheep with wolves' clothing."

A prominent minister in our city, pastor of Trinity Church, Rev. A. A. Morrison, writes in Trinity Chimes, "No one can be a Christian and not be a Spiritualist."

My friends, can one be a Spiritualist and not be a Christian? The prophets of old, with the teachings of Jesus, as recorded in the Bible, give me a clear, clean-cut Spiritualism, with God, the legions of angels, and the Voice, all accepted, not rejected.

Wise men of ancient day told us what the spirit said. Wise men of these days tell us what the spirit may say. Now then, my friends, let us find what part, if any, mediumship plays in this great religious spiritual Spiritualism. If mediumship, during its undeveloped unfoldment, has been forced to sell itself for a "mess of pottage" to suit the demand of the sitter, who is the greater spiritual sufferer, think ye? The person who seeks the highest spiritual messages doesn't patronize advertisements that tell names after they have passed through either a "charcoal" or a "chalk," or "candled" pad, then burned before your very eyes, so the "dear spirits" can read your ashes.

Awake, ye "blind bats," if ye would get somewhere. This is not an age of darkness, but of light; this is not an age of demand of unseen forces, such balderdash. Just so long as you seek wisdom in the slums, just so long will our papers be filled with "exposures" of another faker who spreads himself and tells you he is a "medium." It is time we awake to the need of progressive mind. Spirits come to bring light, not darkness. When we awake from our long sleep we will find there is something to do beside "wait for a hunch."

As for spirits of the departed burying themselves in the shoddy of this earth's greediness and its gains to suit the whims of selfish mortal, it is something I do not encourage nor approve. Riches are gained only in the light of the soul. That is the light angels ever strive to bring to us, when they come.

Great care is taken of the unborn babe during its gestative period that nothing may disturb or retard its progress or growth. Similar care, and even greater precaution, should be observed in the "birth" after death. When we are willing to listen to the "still, small voice," and accept its teachings, we shall learn more of what Spiritualism means to the children of earth.

When we have found a response from our own soul, we won't be looking after and forcing mediums to fake, just to gratify base appetites and cause some hideous monster to appear. Cultivate a little "Spiritual Science," "Christian Science," "Mental Science," then Theosophical science, and see how far you have got in "self."

Think ye that Harrison D. Barrett is the only one that has made discoveries? Many others may have learned that "discretion is the better part of valor," and others have rested in belief that silence was golden.

It is about time that we had men and women who are not afraid to follow to the end their logical conclusions, and who feel free to give to the world the clearest light of their reasoning. Many valuable suggestions could be advanced along these lines, but time and space in our papers are limited, and one must speak briefly. Already I have encroached on our paper.

In our last Progressive Thinker some mention was made by our N. S. A. of the approaching Convention. Would our delegates be better prepared to act if our President's Message could appear in all of our spiritual papers before the Convention, instead of after? The delegate that will serve the best is the one that fully understands that his or her voice and vote count for more during the hours of the Convention and its session than after. We should all be deeply interested in any fixed law that will mete out, in every State, recognition and respectable protection to every honest worker, and it is up to you delegates to do it.

TALKING WITH THE MASTER.

I've been talking with the Master, and my heart grew light and free,
For I heard His loving whisper when
He said, "Come unto Me."
All day long I had been troubled, and
His promise was of rest;
If I'd bring to Him my burdens, He would make my spirit blest.

Then I said, "I'll try, dear Master,
but I'm not sure of the way,
Thou must keep me kindly near Thee, give me of Thy strength each day."
Soft and low I heard the answer in the silence of the night:
"Fear thou not, I will watch o'er thee, thou art never from My sight."

Then a vision bright was shown me—in its midst a golden star,
As if bidding me look upward toward the pearly gates ajar.
Calmly then my soul seemed resting,
and I sank to sweetest sleep,
Trusting in that loving promise that
He would my spirit keep.

Silently some loved ones enter from their home beyond the sky,
Proving to us by their presence that the soul can never die;
If we'd only listen often, we might hear the gentle voice
Of the Master, or our dear ones, that would make our hearts rejoice.

Peace; that blessed gift from Heaven, how it stills the throbbing heart
When 'tis crushed by earthly trials, for each one must bear a part;
But the Master's voice can soften every care, whate'er it be,
If we'll heed His invitation when He says "Come unto Me."

Reason the Most Trusty Guide.

Is it not possible the world has been misled by that word prophet, which to the English reader always seems to suggest "one inspired of God to reveal the future." The word itself comes to us through the Greek "prophetes," and is equivalent to "one who declares things; one who foretells future events; a predicter."

Cowper, in his Table Talks, says:

"In a Roman mouth the graceful name
Of prophet and of poet was the same."

Our word clairvoyant, coming to us from the French, defined as "discerning objects not perceptible by the natural senses," is, possibly, a good rendering of the word prophet.

In every period of human existence there have been sensitives who possessed this power of clear vision. It was as common to pagan nations as to Hebrews and modern Christians. History confirms the opinion that the ancient soothsayer and the modern clairvoyant are identical.

The Jews claimed their prophets were inspired of God, just as many clairvoyants assume they are inspired by spirits; but is it not probable both powers were derived from a common source, and that source an abnormal condition of the nervous system? The starveling and the invalid nearing death seem to possess these powers in a pre-eminent degree. The vestal virgins, whose mission it was to watch and keep alive the sacred fires in pagan temples; whose habits of life were regulated by law, and who were generally faultless in character, seem to have frequently been clairvoyant.

Whilst there are many well-marked cases of truthful revelation of future events by clairvoyants, can they be always trusted? In attempts to locate valuable mines, have they not been more frequently at fault than otherwise? Many persons claim to have been financially wrecked by acting on this class of information.

As reason was given to man for his guidance, we venture the opinion that he who lays it aside and allows himself to be wholly directed by prophets, priests or even mediums, are trusting doubtful guides who are liable to mislead both in material and spiritual affairs.

A Practical Religion.

Col. Ingersoll's idea of religion, as expressed in an address to the Unitarian Club in New York, January 15, 1892, was of a practical nature, and a good thing. Responding to his own inquiry, "What is Religion?" the Colonel said:

"Religion is all here in this world, right here. All our duties are right here to our fellow-men. The man who builds a home, marries the girl he loves, takes good care of her, likes the family, stays home nights as a general thing, pays his debts, learns all he can, gets all the beautiful ideas in his mind his brain can hold, has a host of paintings and statuary in his gallery of fine arts, has a niche devoted to music—a magnificent dome fitted with winged notes that rise to glory, and gets all he can from the great ones dead, swaps all thoughts possible with those who are alive, is true to the ideal he has here in his own brain—he is what I call a religious man, because he makes the world better, happier. He puts the dimples of joy in the cheeks of the one he loves, and lets the gods run heaven to suit themselves. I am not saying he is right; I don't know. But that is all the religion I have, which is to make somebody else happy if I can."

Who wants or has need of a better religion? Here and now is the place for a practical religion.

An Interesting Colloquy.

The tourist frequently meets with incidents in travel that awaken thought, which, reported, may be of service to others.

It was the fortune of the writer to recently find himself on a railway car with a seatmate of a gentleman of 19, a sophomore in a Western university. The young man possessed large conversational qualities, and seemed confident of his ability to entertain and instruct his aged companion. He said he was giving special attention in the university to the sciences. In two more years he would gain the B. A. degree, then he was to commence a theologic course, and fit himself for the Christian ministry.

"Of course you will give special attention to astronomy while studying the natural sciences," we suggested.

"Yes, that is in our curriculum, and I mean to be thorough in that study."

"Geology and astronomy seem to me to be the most useful of the sciences to the theologian. Geology gives him a just conception of the earth, its wondrous history as revealed in the rock; of the eternity of matter, and the impossibility of its destruction; while astronomy widens knowledge of the Infinite, and elevates him from merely the creation of a little earth, with a sun to illuminate it by day, and moon and stars to give light by night, into the majestic ruler of a boundless universe, with more than a hundred millions of suns, each larger than ours and the center of solar systems, all wheeling in space obedient to a common law, of which the Supreme Intelligence is conceded to be the Master Mind."

Our colloquist had, no doubt, a knowledge of astronomy would be useful to a preacher; but "God has given us a revelation of himself in the Bible, the most instructive and valuable of all books, containing all it is desirable for man to know along the lines it imparts instruction."

Our friend was all aflame at once. That dear book, the Bible, was the civilizer of the world. Without it we have no knowledge of the beginning; no assurance of the future. Our laws were borrowed from it; society derived its maxims from it; and they who are not acquainted with it are but rude barbarians, and the only hope of the reclamation of the world is through the Bible and the missionary.

By this time the dear fellow's voice had swollen until it equaled that of a Methodist exhorter of seventy-five years ago, while a goodly number of kindred faith with him were adding chinking to fill up chasms in his logic. The roar of a hundred wheels rushing forward at thirty miles an hour over steel rails was lost in the eloquence of the "soph" as he took up the subject of the junior God, who died on a cross for the world's salvation.

We could only crowd in the inquiry: "Do you really think the creator of a hundred millions of solar systems overshadowed a Jewish peasant girl and became the parent of Jesus? And did that son declare: 'Unless you hate father and mother, brothers and sisters, wife and children, yea, your own life, you can't be my disciple?'"

Our place of separation reached, the last we heard of our whilom friend he was declaring: "God is capable of anything, and the Bible says he was the father of Jesus, and that book is more trusty than human reason."

But a train of thought was aroused that will bear fruit a few years later, mark that.

Only Error Stands Still.

Sixty hours from New York to Liverpool by means of a gliding craft that is to skim along the surface of the water without penetrating it, is the promise of a French engineer, who has already successfully tested his invention with a twenty-seven-foot boat, which made thirty-eight miles an hour.

If religious thought would keep abreast with scientific advancement, the church would not be clutching at old-time creeds that teach how to placate the anger of jealous and repentant gods.

Successful as an Organizer.

The Supreme Court of New Hampshire has appointed a master to determine the competency of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Christian Science fame, to manage her financial affairs. He is to report September 30.

Whether competent or otherwise, in a business point of view, Mrs. Eddy has led all other founders of new religions in the number of devotees she has enlisted in her service in a given time.

The Thoughts of a Scholar.

To those who have emerged from the narrow teachings of the church—survivals of barbaric thought transmitted to modern times through a long succession of ignorant ancestors—how joyous to become acquainted with the productions of the great scholars who have been educated in Nature's lore, who have dared to think and write as become Heaven's noblemen. Tied back to no school of ancient thought, but ever delving to know the truth revealed by science, when their productions are read we feel much nearer the Infinite.

Prof. Goldwin Smith, of Montreal, is a thinker and teacher, whose pen productions bear the impress of an enlarged mind always in pursuit of knowledge, and never afraid to declare his honest convictions.

A late writer in the New York Sun has caught the ennobling sentiments of Prof. Smith, and in a review gave expression to his own advanced convictions, which are good to read while sectarians are trying to bolster decaying creeds, only useful to caverned bats and benighted priests whose best thoughts had their birth before science dawned on the world.

But to the extract:

"There is a sentiment, delicate and profound, so sacred that it lives for the most part in silence, yet finds utterances sometimes through a poet. It is the inspiration of Dante; it is the theme of "In Memoriam;" it is part of the message which makes Browning dear; it has been whispered by many a seer and saint. It is that the beloved dead may be realized as living, and sometimes in closest communion with us—a reality too profound for word or thought, but an incomparable source of energy and peace, of hope and joy. By this, as an emerging fact of human experience, we may interpret that resurrection story to which Christianity so fondly clings; we may divest the story of its miracle and legend and believe that not once alone, but always, and everywhere it is from love and sorrow that the immortal hope and the undying love emerge.

"Other phases of mankind's new spiritual development crowd upon the pen. There is no effort to conceive and realize daily toil not as slavery or drudgery, but as education, as character building force, as social service. There is that sympathy with all sentient life which takes even the brute creation into fellowship. We need not prolong the depiction.

"Our outlook upon the world is by right incomparably more cheerful than that of our fathers. We have learned that growth is a law of the universe. The Divine Energy is recognized as working in and through ourselves. 'With the great girdle of God go and encompass the earth." We see that evil, however perplexing to the intellect, is a perpetual challenge to the will. The combat exacts a heavy price, but offers great prizes—fortitude, sympathy, tenderness, spiritual victory. In a world so friendly as ours we are not afraid to laugh. We accept humor as an essential trait of manhood. When the hero's battle cry has led to triumph we are glad. He should be at ease and his lungs should crow like chanticleer's.

"These elements, old and new, of the religion visibly dawning among men—is it strange that in their wealth and variety they have not compressed and formulated into neat little verbal symbols? And shall we be impatient that the instrumentalities for their practical expression take time in the evolving—when even in busiest New York, and under the shadow of the Vatican, we can see the new life moulding its organs? Already, chaotic as the times may seem, the loyal will and aspiring soul can find ample soil and genial climate. Already, though across decades or centuries, we can see the universal religion into which the older creeds dissolve—'as morning drinks the morning star.'"

Even Catholics Think.

A telegram from Rome of date July 18, represents the Pope issued the day before a syllabus correcting sixty-five propositions of leading Catholics in regard to dogmas which do not meet his approbation. It is to prevent the acceptance of these errors that the syllabus was issued. Those "errors" seem identical with the great truths Protestantism is contending with; but the latter lack a general head to silence opposition regardless of the truth.

It is a pleasure to note that Catholic thinkers, according to this allocution, repudiate the infallibility of the "holy scriptures." They claim the bodily resurrection of Jesus is not a historical fact. And then they deny that the Roman Catholic Church became the head of all Christian churches by divine ordinances, but maintain that end was obtained by political circumstances, which properly interpreted would mean gross usurpations.

These enemies of the church the Pope combats, teach the church is the enemy of the natural sciences; that Christian doctrine was first Judaic, then Paulinic, later Grecian, then universal; and that the principal articles of the Apostles' Creed had not the same significance to primitive Christians as to those of the present time.

It is apprehended that men of brains will not change their opinions on the subjects mentioned because of papal dictation. And as inquisitional fires have lost their efficacy, division in the church must widen with expanding knowledge, probably ultimate in another reformation later on.

AN ALARM SIGNAL!

A Grave Crisis!

There is a GRAVE CRISIS rising in the ranks of Spiritualism. The very foundation of our beloved Cause is being THREATENED with destruction. The tendency everywhere in the large towns and cities is to IMPOSE a heavy license fee on mediums, they being linked with fortune-tellers, palmists, clairvoyants and unscrupulous tricksters.

A WAVE in that direction HAS SET IN, and a LICENSE long ago would have been placed on mediums in this city had it not been for the efficient service of the Illinois State Association of Spiritualists, headed by Dr. G. B. Warne.

All this serious trouble has arisen from the simple fact that so many tricksters and charlatans HAVE INVADED OUR BANKS, carrying on their nefarious work, swindling the public generally.

We have continually warned Spiritualists that unless they took action in the matter, and separated genuine Spiritualism from the spurious, that a WAVE OF OPPOSITION would start against our Cause, resulting in no end of trouble.

The Progressive Thinker has been the only Spiritualist paper that has sounded THE ALARM!

For several years it has presented incontrovertible evidence that our Cause has been infested with the WORST SET OF VILLAINS that ever disgraced any sect or cult, and while the result has been MOST EXCELLENT in many respects, yet the good work has not yet been carried on to completion.

In fact, The Progressive Thinker has LED THE WAY for a pure Spiritualism, while other Spiritualist papers "looked on," without participating in the struggle, resulting, during the past few months, in the death of the Banner of Light, the Religio-Philosophical Journal, the Light of Truth, and the Occidental Mystic, leaving The Progressive Thinker almost alone to carry out the great work of advancing our Cause to a higher plane.

There can be no greater agent to advance our Cause than The Progressive Thinker.

It stands at the head!

How would you have known, throughout our ranks, of the arrest of Mrs. Noyes had it not been for this paper?

How can you keep POSTED as to passing events without it?

How can you REALIZE the exact status of our Cause without reading it weekly?

We should have at least 100,000 subscribers! Read Mr. Dryden's article carefully, and you will realize that a grave crisis is at hand, and you will see the necessity of adding additional support to The Progressive Thinker. NOW is the time to commence.

Every camp meeting should have AN AGENT to solicit subscribers for this paper.

A GRAVE CRISIS.

It Has Risen in the Ranks of Spiritualism, and Threatens the Very Liberty of Mediums—Letter from a Prominent Lawyer of Los Angeles, Cal., Giving an Account of the Arrest and Conviction of a Most Excellent Medium, Mrs. Cora B. Noyes, for Using Her God-Given Gifts Without a License.

Los Angeles., Cal.,
July 26, 1907.

To the Editor:—At the request of Rev. W. B. Noyes, I send you herewith a brief account of the prosecution of his wife, Mrs. Cora B. Noyes, a Spiritualist medium and public worker, and having acted as her attorney in the matter, I gladly comply with the request, not merely for the purpose of furnishing you a news item, but for the further purpose of enabling the public generally, and Spiritualist mediums in particular, to see upon what flimsy pretexts and by what unjustifiable methods Spiritualist workers are being deprived of personal liberty and denied the exercise of their constitutional rights.

The trial took place in Santa Barbara, Cal., where Mr. and Mrs. Noyes have been laboring for a short time. The city ordinance under which the prosecution was held, requires all palmists, hypnotists, card readers, clairvoyants, fortune tellers, etc., to first obtain a license at the rate of $15 per month, under penalty of not more than $200 for failure to do so.

In addition to the occupations or avocations above cited, the ordinance contained one not usually found in such instruments, viz., "life reading," and this was the offense charged against Mrs. Noyes in the Complaint. The language used in the Complaint was, that at a certain time and place she did "profess to practice the art of life reading without first obtaining license therefor," etc.

We moved to quash the complaint upon two grounds:—

First, that it did not charge the commission of any offense at all; only that she PROFESSED TO BE ABLE to do so.

Second, even had there been an express allegation, the charge would be insufficient because there is no such offense known to the laws of this State, or of this country, as "life reading," nor is there any certain definition of the term to be found in any standard dictionary or encyclopedia; and therefore the offense charged, and the method of its commission, were not sufficient upon which to base a conviction.

But the court and the prosecuting attorney, both belonging to the orthodox class, and keyed up to "high C" in the determination to convict, saw no legal bone whatever in the points raised, and decided, in effect, that a locality council is abundantly able to declare any act criminal within the scope of the license power, whether the laws of the land recognize such act as being criminal or not. As a result, nearly every objection offered, or favor requested, no matter how clearly within the scope of legitimate practice, were promptly refused.

Both of the witnesses for the prosecution testified that neither by word of mouth, nor by newspaper advertisement, nor in any other way, had she "professed" to be a "life reader," nor did she profess to be anything, nor do anything except as a Spiritualist medium. The door sign was simply "Spiritualist Medium." Both men testified that they asked, first: "Are you a palmist?" "Are you a fortune teller?" "No, I am a Spiritual medium," and both testified to the kind of spirit messages usually given under such conditions. These were held to come clearly within the scope of "Life Reading," as contemplated by the city council, and the accused was promptly found guilty, and a fine of $35 imposed.

An effort was made to introduce a letter from President Barrett and from officers of the Wisconsin, Montana and Washington State Associations, endorsing her work, etc., but all were promptly refused, and in the absence of any regular ordination certificate, would have been of but little value anyway, under the circumstances; and because of the absence of such official authorization, and for other reasons, it was decided not best to make a test case of it, and no appeal was taken.

In conclusion, and by way of suggestion, whether it may meet the approval of the readers of The Progressive Thinker or not, in my opinion, Spiritualism, as an organic religious movement, is facing a very grave crisis. What is commonly known as the "Police Power" of a government, or the taxing power, the power under which municipalities, counties, etc., are authorized to impose taxes upon property, franchises, professions, etc., for revenue purposes, is practically an unlimited power; and the only reason doctors, priests, preachers, and such professions, are not taxed, is because the power behind the throne is the man who operates the ballot judiciously. And until Spiritualists generate enough common sense to get together and secure representation in the law-making and law-executing functions, they may expect the burden of public restrictions to grow heavier and heavier. It is easier and not one-half so expensive and humiliating to gain exemption from an ordinance while it is being passed, than it is to evade its provisions on the plea of religious liberty after it becomes a law.

J. L. DRYDEN.

SIGNIFICANCE OF COLORS

Some Trenchant Thoughts in Regard to Them.

I received a thought about color, as to which are the strongest. Just now it is summer time. Green is the strongest color at present. It is the color of youth, hope and joy. We live on the green fields. Why? For instance, the whole world is green.

We get our bread from the fields. Our chickens live off the green, and if they do not have grass to eat, their eggs are poor. Our milk and our meat we get from the green fields.

Most of our fruits are green, and our eyes we protect with a green shade. Now, why do I say green is the most powerful color in the whole world? You may study it as you like.

Next, take red. Red is the fire color, symbolic of passion, power and riches. Powerful rulers wore robes of red. Men of cruelty, executioners, and members of the inquisition were clothed in red.

Blue is for fidelity, tenderness, spotless reputation—the true blue, you know. It used to be that yellow stood for glory and fortune. Yellow being the color of gold; but since the Christian era it has changed in meaning, for during the middle ages the Jews were forced to wear yellow, and the doors of traitors were smeared with the yellow of eggs.

Black, which is the absence of all color, means sadness and mourning.

Pink is for health, and orange stands for inspiration and poetry. It is also the color for brides.

It is rather interesting to know about these colors, and when we wear colors of any kind I believe our lives are guided by them. This explains why one person likes one color and another person likes another.

In winter the earth is covered over with beautiful white snow. White, I say, is the prettiest color. It is the symbol of purity and good, and is most becoming to brides. It shines outward and penetrates the spirit powers of Christ, of love and of truth.

Gideon's Band.

Bible history narrates many peculiar—not to say funny—episodes, whether taken as statements of real facts, or as "just talk."

A case in point is the narration about Gideon and his exploits, the veracious chronicle of which may be found in the book of Judges. It is an interesting story, and does not purport to have been written by an uninspired historian.

The Midianites and Amalekites had gathered an immense army, which "lay along in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude; and their camels were without number, as the sand by the seaside for multitude." The Lord appeared to Gideon, and promised by him to smite the hosts of Midian.

Gideon gathered an army, small by comparison with the enemy, but the Lord told him there were too many, "lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, mine own hand hath saved me.

"Now, therefore, go to, proclaim in the ears of the people, saying: Whosoever is fearful and afraid, let him return and depart early. And there returned twenty and two thousand, and there remained ten thousand.

"And the Lord said unto Gideon, the people are yet too many; bring them down unto the water, and I will try them for thee there. * * Every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue, as a dog lappeth, shalt thou set by himself. * * And the number of them that lapped were three hundred men. And the Lord said unto Gideon: By the three hundred that lapped will I save you."

The singular thing in this is that three hundred thirsty men lapped water with their tongues "like a dog." In all the history of the world since man has walked erect on two feet, aside from this infallible account, was it ever known that a thirsty man lapped water with his tongue, like a dog? And that three hundred men should do it, on one occasion; seems indeed a—a miracle. Rather it was three hundred miracles joined in one. Three hundred men lapping water with their tongues, like a dog—reader, in your mind's eye, just look at 'em.

But that was not the only miracle. Gideon divided the three hundred into three companies. Each man carried an "empty pitcher" and "lamps within the pitchers," and a trumpet.

"And the three companies blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers, and held the lamps in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withal; and they cried: The sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

This occurred at night.

The outcome finally was "there fell an hundred and twenty thousand men (Midianites) that drew sword." They slew one another, mostly.

We make no comments. The story speaks for itself.

THE GOD IDEA.

It Is Completely Settled at Last!

To the Editor:— In your issue of July 13, 1907, we are favored with a short article of M. Severance of North Charleston, N. H., entitled "Waste of Brain Force."

The world's people, even at this day, must now certainly owe Brother Severance a debt of gratitude for the prompt warning given as to all this waste.

In harmony with Nature's Law of conservation of force, he has manfully stepped to the breach, and has called a ringing halt to this hitherto endless, and, as he deems it, useless pouring out of brain power in the quest of a God.

Ever since human beings first came on Earth then, the millions upon millions of human brains have been carried away by a delusion. All the tons upon tons of tomes devoted to the subject are therefore, worthless, aye, worse, for they are "waste," says Brother Severance. From the lowest form of savage up to and including Shakspeare, Lowell, Milton, Dryden, Tupper, and thousands of others of world-noted thought-capacity, including Pope, with his immortal lines—

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is and God the Soul"—

all have been seeking to deal with "something that only exists in the noddle of man," as Brother Severance puts it. How did this idea come to enter so many "noddles," and in what fortunate manner did Brother Severance escape such impregnation of thought in HIS brain?

It is true that Brother Severance does not define what he means with the term God, further than to say, "a God, any God;" nor does he state any of the evidence upon which he bases his positively expressed conclusion, neither of which he could in his article of not more than 20 lines.

The only thing to be inferred, then, is that Brother Severance, as a great discoverer, has simply announced in the concrete, in the few lines with which he favors us on the subject, a disproval, startling, and reaching back through all time, necessitating an absolute reversal of the world's conception up to now, of the entire God-idea.

Naturally, and we might say, fairly, in a matter so far-reaching throughout all thought and mind conceptions of the past, and because of the fact that Brother Severance so far as yet to be inferred, alone possesses the proof positive in establishment of his contention, his conclusive evidence that there is not "a God, any God," will be laid before a now startled and hitherto deceived world.

SOUL SUBSTANCE.

It is Not Absurd to Suppose It Has Weight.

The hypothesis of Drs. Mcdougal and Sproule, after weighing the bodies of men immediately before and after death, which has moved some people to ridicule soul weight, is not their definite conclusion. They have not undertaken to establish a ridiculous proposition by scientific experiment. How have some of the wise people determined that this unaccountable loss of weight must be attributed to something else than the flight of soul? Have they performed any experiment to disprove it?

They are either materialists or have some ill-defined belief in Christian theology. They evidently believe in some vague, intangible, immaterial soul. They ask: How could a soul escape so easily, and where could it go?"

An intangible, immaterial soul would have no difficulty in getting loose from anything. It would go either to an imaginary heaven or a fictitious hell.

If it is immaterial, it is nothing and does not exist. If a soul exists, it must be composed of something. We should not assume to say how big it is nor how much it should weigh. To assume that a soul weighs something is a reasonable inference and not absurd. De Lanne and other scientific Spiritualists argue for a fourth state of matter, forming an invisible organism within the body, and called the peri-sprit, because containing the soul or spirit. They furnish an immense array of evidence for the existence of this organism. They claim it is the organism seen by clairvoyants and mediums and forming what are known as ghosts or apparitions. They have not assumed it to have any weight, but it may have. A man once described to the writer how he saw this organism roll or ooze out of the body of a dying child.

A spiritual body may live in a spiritual, ethereal, or met-ethereal world, and having no terrestrial attraction, therefore no weight. It may be as real as radium, or other things which have always existed but are only recently discovered. The ancient Brahmin and the modern scientific doctrine of interpenetrating spheres are based on the analogy of the interpenetration of gases, liquids and solids, they in turn permeated by the universal ether. The interpenetration of sound and light, electric and Hertzian waves, X-rays, and other vibrations, do not interfere with each other's domain. The etheric vibrations which cause light and heat, plunge through the absolute zero abysses of inter-stellar space, black, cold and invisible. Only when they strike refracting substances do they change into what we know as light and heat. It is not strange, then, if a soul has weight and escapes into a world as real as our own.

The description of the escape of the spirit of the dying child was given to me by an old negro by the name of Dave, a former slave. I found him to be a psychic, or sensitive, and had him relate several of his experiences.

At the time of this occurrence he was living a free man in southern Ohio. Another old negro, by the name of Tom, came to him one day and said: "Dave, you know that my brothers were sold in slavery and I never knew what became of them; I do not know whether they are dead or living. I dreamed last night that I was going up to a big, fine house. I saw into a very fine dining-room, where everything was mighty fine on the table and my brothers were in there, setting the table. They said to me, 'Tom, you came mighty near being too late.' Now, Dave, I would like to know what this dream means."

Dave said to him: "Tom, those were your brothers that you saw in there. They are all dead and they are getting ready for you. You are not going to live much longer, and if you have any business to settle up, you had better do it and get ready, as you do not have much longer to live."

So this advice was taken, and as a fact Tom did die a few months later. Some months after that a little girl, a grandchild of Tom's, took very sick and Dave was sent for to visit the child, as he had the reputation of being skilled in treating the sick. The girl grew rapidly worse and in a few days was evidently past hope. Dave came in one day and saw that the child was dying. He stood at the bedside, watching the death struggle. After a time, another child, identical in appearance, seemed to be coming out of the little girl. It seemed to roll out, or ooze from every pore; the feet and lower limbs appearing first. Soon a complete child lay on the bed, a perfect counterpart of the corpse. At this time the mother brought her apron to her face, crying out, "O, my child is gone." The grandmother, who was sitting in another part of the room, also began to cry. The spirit child stepped down on the floor and went over to the grandmother and tried to attract her attention; but the grandmother paid no attention, as, of course, she could not see the spirit. Then, at this time, the spirit of the grandfather came in through the door and seemed to call the child, who went to him and they both went out through the door.

This is evidence of the existence of a psychic body or spirit, such as is described by A. J. Davis and other seers. We presume it is the same thing that is claimed to be seen by mediums and called a spirit, or a ghost, when seen by others not mediums. De Lanne and others argue for the existence of such a body, sometimes caled the peri-sprit, and supposed to be formed of matter in a different state from what we know as matter. Who knows but what this is the body or organism which makes the slight difference in weight noticed by Drs. McDougal and Sproule in weighing the bodies of the dying in their series of recent experiments?

WHEN AGE COMES ON.

Love has no age; 'tis always young;
Brows may be marred and heads bent down;
Gray hairs may come to gleam among
The locks that once were soft and brown,
But not till love forsakes the heart
Does age arrive or youth depart.

Love laughs at years which dim the eyes,
And mocks the ruthless lines that mar;
Love sees no skies but rosy skies,
And ne'er from childhood wanders far;
'Tis only after love is gone
That youth departs and age comes on.

Religion and Literature.

As Graphically Portrayed by that Eminent Thinker and Careful Student of History, Judge Parish B. Ladd, Alameda, Cal.

From out the depths of archeological time when reason had not been born; when conception was in embryo, primordial man dreamed, speculated and promulgated crude theories and drew on the unknowable for materials out of which to construct an ideal pantheon of divinities. Countless ages flitted on the sunbeams of the meridian and cast their shadows behind them, while this homo theorized on the unknown past, the unrealized present and dreaded future.

Out of the chaos of this muddled brain was born the magical germs, which in after years were destined to sway the world. The sun, moon, stars, the heavens, the earth, the oceans and all other visible phenomena were so many living beings. Thus this troglodyte created a phantasmagoria for illuminating the pathway of life here and hereafter. Out of this pantheon of divinities arose an hierarchal embodiment of divine wisdom to pilot the denizens of earth from the land of sorrow to the elysian fields where dwells immortal life. The numerous religions, each in its time, became the predominating factor in its day. All to-day move in the world's dreams. The older ones, dead and gone, live only in history. Some of the living ones sport on the pinnacle of fame. All are mortal; birth, life and death, are the fate of all that is mortal.

But, says science, there is no life nor death; eternal change is nature's decree. With all the theories and speculations of the past concerning the source of life, its continuance beyond the grave, and of the existence of an intelligence above that of man, the world is just as wise to-day, as when primordial man first sat down to theorize and speculate on the unknowable. More time, study and discussion have been given to this subject than to all others, and whole libraries of books have been written thereon. Written history comes down to our time loaded down with theories, speculations, doctrines, dogmas, dissensions, quarrels, persecutions, tortures, violent deaths, wars and desolation, all growing out of conflicting opinions on religion, the field of Christianity more prolific in these terrible crimes than all others combined. Nor is the end yet, or soon to be, unless the helping hand of reason and humanity intervene to stay the conflict.

Is it not time that the world, the Christian world, commenced to think, reason on religious matters, to give and take, agree to disagree, each to entertain his own opinion, cease quarreling about religious matters, and come to a realizing sense that the thinking world is moving?

Evolution in thought, as never before, is dominating the world, nor can the feeble efforts of the clergy, however earnest, stop the progress of modern thought. The cleric who refuses to move along this new line must take his old worn-out ox-cart from the track or be run over or thrown into the ditch from whence there is no exit.

Let us agree to be humanitarians, to cherish and respect the opinions of all who differ from us; live virtuous lives, not only for our own comfort and happiness, but that our posterity may follow our lead and say, when we are no more, that the world is better because of our lives.

In life's early morn, man, in his savage state, turned his first thoughts to the various phenomena around him, and therefrom constructed a crude religion. This was his first step in advance of the living world below him; the dim light of physical nature forced him to ask himself: "Why all these numerous phenomena?" But a step above the brute creation, he commenced to speculate on animate and inanimate nature; the product was a religion.

From that day down through the long vista of time, has man continued to theorize and speculate. Centuries and countless ages have come and gone, and we ask: Is man to-day any nearer the final goal than when a child of the long time ago? Does he know the whence and why of his religious sentiments?

A dead silence is the answer! Nature still holds her secrets. Would that all writers on the religions of the world, especially an Christianity, were honest, but the overpowering interest of the cleric to maintain his place forbids such a hope. Give us real historical facts and let the consequences be as they may, should be every writer's motto. Such is the rule with all honest men. The writer who starts out to write a book or otherwise for the purpose of supporting preconceived notions or opinions, cannot, as a rule, be honest, unless such opinions have been formed after a full and fair investigation of all the facts. Such writers too often devote their time to concealing and covering up the truth; to do which they are ever on the alert to twist and bend real facts to support preconceived opinions.

All we know of the past and the real life of the living religious systems of the world, comes down to us in tradition and living history. Much of this history comes to us from monumental inscriptions, largely from Egypt and from the cuneiform writings found on tablets among the ruins of the cities of Chaldea and Babylonia. To this, ancient India has contributed her records. Science and criticism have, in late years, come to our aid in clearing up much of the mystery which for long ages hung over the religious world.

The world of to-day is flooded with books, and the tide of literature continues to flow on. Few books are of value; many are without merit. A book which does not, in some way, instruct, is worthless—a detriment to mankind. Nine-tenths of all books deserve cremation, that good may result. So says the prospective author who sits down to add one more to swell the tide. But the field of instructive literature has not been deluged; there is still new ground to be explored, and even some old fields may be profitably re-worked. With all the present literary float, the great mass of mankind is groping its way along the old blind trails of error, ignorance and superstition; such people prefer to idle away their time and journey in their old ox-carts while others ride in palace cars.

The religious area has been flooded—much of it laid waste with writings of almost every conceivable kind, the larger part of which is dull, some extremely stupid, not a little of it mere empty, meaningless jargon; much being used in vain attempts to explain the contradictions, confusions and nonsense of the Bible; some on the extant writings of the church Fathers, some still floating on tradition. A few people think; a far less number reason—especially on religious matters; hence errors and groundless beliefs hold the fort. Many books on religious matters are written by timid men who attempt to hide their real opinions behind the veil of obscure terms and circumlocution. It is this style which dominates the most of our more intelligent clerics of to-day, who have outgrown the old fabric but are holding on to secure their rations. Such books are worse than useless, as their effect is to throw dirt into the eyes of the reader.

Some men write books more to exhibit their style of language than to instruct. Many of such books are valuable as arts of composition, and for their rhetoric and logic; many of these books are filled with beautiful words and rounded-off sentences—sometimes at the expense of substance. The smallest number of men possess clear, well-defined ideas. Such men are the light of the world; they give us facts and opinions in clear, concise and direct language, so that all may understand them; ambiguity and circumlocution are no part of their makeup. Such men are not only our best writers, but they produce about the only books worth reading, especially in this age when the reader has no time to idle away over an unnecessary array of words.

On going through our large libraries, how few books do we find that could not have been written on one-tenth of their space and thereby have been made more intelligible. No one has realized this fact more than I in being compelled to read an almost endless number of volumes to obtain material for my writings. It is the hope of the writer that he has been able in his extensive researches to collect, condense and put into numerous writings about all that is requisite for most readers to know concerning the birth and early life of the great religions of the world, more especially the Hebrew and Christian systems. Fortunately or unfortunately, depending on whether the world wants facts or fiction, I have had the time, patience and will to do this work. The most of book students weary in going over so much for so little in value. The student who is seeking for facts only, soon learns by a few superficial glances over the pages of a book what is of value and what is mere verbiage. The greater number of the frequenters of our libraries find their affinities in books of fiction, when the book and the reader are of the same makeup. Among what are known as popular works, there are some of value, but of a limited kind, as lessons in rhetoric, style, ethics, composition. Then we have works of art, science and history, whose patrons are real students, but few in number; they are the world's guides; i. e., in the field of thought; their aim is to benefit mankind; their writings are beacons of light for all who possess the ability to think and the courage to act. Religious books, with which our libraries abound, are, as a rule, written by men whose business it is to believe and to dogmatically command others to believe.

These men, if reasoners, too often silence their reasoning faculties from motives of interest, and pretend to rely on faith. Faith has no use for reason. It is blind obedience to the dogmatist, or faith in a book which the believer, if a Catholic, is commanded not to read; if a Protestant, he seldom takes the trouble to read it, but relies on his teacher to interpret its meaning; this interpretation is too often the result of self-interest at the expense of truth.

Such writers seldom use their faculties, other than in the attempt to twist and warp history and science to suit their wishes. Such men were born, or taught to believe—to have faith—not to doubt; doubt to them is a crime; but this does not deprive doubt of its genius, for the civilization of the world owes its all to doubt—to the embryotic child of genius. Had there not arisen men who doubted, the world of to-day would have been sleeping away its time in the cradle of primordial ignorance. All of our great discoveries in the arts and sciences, and of archeological history, owe their existence to doubt—of the current beliefs and opinions. Had not Copernicus, Galileo, Bruno, Newton, Kepler, the Herschells, et al., doubted, all christendom of to-day would have believed the earth to be a flat surface, and that the sun, moon and stars were made to revolve around it.

Religious works, next to fiction, seemingly command the most attention. Yet, on religious matters, especially as to the origin of religion, its infancy and childhood, most people are profoundly ignorant; they have never doubted the words of their teachers. In far too many cases it is the blind leading the blind. In the cradle of blind faith these people have slept away their lives, unmindful of the inroads which are everywhere being made on old opinions by archeological history, science and criticism. They never progress, but live in the long ago—in the dead past—in the primordial simplicity of their remotest ancestors. Even most of clergymen of to-day know no more of the source of their religion than a church mouse does of Greek, much less do they know of the older religious systems.

Max Muller, one of our greatest scholars and most profound thinkers, of any age, rightfully says: "He who knows but one religion knows no religion." He further says: "To understand the Christian religion one must know its source—the great religions of Babylon, India, Egypt, Greece, Rome, et al."

Knowledge is only had by comparison; one must know the past in order to understand the present, for the present is but the result of past evolution. This applies to religion, language, writing, thought, in short to all that goes to make up our civilization.

The Christian who claims that his religion is something new; that it is different from all others, simply puts his own ignorance on exhibition. The layman, as a rule, relies on his clergyman; the cleric speaks from his Bible; the Bible is his infallible guide; but he has no knowledge of who were its authors, when or where, or under what circumstances it was written; he, by often repeating it, has acquired the habit of saying it is inspired, i. e., written under the guidance of some supernatural power; but of that power, or being, as he calls it, he has no more knowledge than the day-fly, whose birth, life and death are of but a single day; nor can he give us the slightest idea of the specific location, form, habits, attributes, or else, of this supernatural being; nor does his Bible help him out of this dilemma.

Like the other habit, he has learned to say many idle and foolish things about this supernatural being. If it, he or she, has form, thinks, reasons, has the power, is just and humane, why all the crime, misery and suffering in the world? If the devotee will go to his Bible, more especially to the Old Testament, he will there find his god to be an overgrown man possessed of all the attributes, good, bad and indifferent, which have ever characterized the human race. In short, he is pictured as a demon, a saint, a cruel savage, a kind and humane father, a tyrant, a friend, a murderer, a humanitarian, a peace-maker, a lover of war, etc., ad infinitum.

It has been with the hope of throwing some new light (new to some) on the origin of the numerous books and other writings of the Bible; of their authorship and times, with numerous other things of a religious nature, that the writer was induced to enter the field as an iconoclast, not in the sense of breaking down true theories, but as a truth-seeker after the manner of those who pull down old fabrics that new and better structures may be erected on their old sites.

Let us have the truth, which is at all times at harmony with itself. It is only error which quarrels; the more and the greater the errors the more severe the conflict, which has been exemplified during the whole life of Christianity. The numerous and bloody conflicts which have from time to time marred the harmony are the result of errors and crimes, which for more than a thousand years hung like a nocturnal demon over the face of all christendom, blotting out every vestige of humanity and civilization.

It has been estimated by the most competent authorities that more than 200,000,000 of human lives were blotted out in these disgraceful conflicts, all to appease the wrath and satiate the thirst of the church for power and dominion. All claimed to be in obedience to the precepts and teachings of the Bible, a book which no two readers have ever been able to understand alike, which has produced opinions as diverse and numerous as the pebbles tossed by the rolling deep, cannot be of preternatural or of divine origin, nor the work of intelligent, clear-minded men.

As we now know it is a book written by men whose devotion to religion far excelled their intelligence, and written by unknown men when religion was deemed of all-importance; a book of slow growth, extending over a period of some fourteen hundred years—a thousand for the Old Testament and four hundred for the New Testament. That this great diversity of opinion is not the fault of the readers, but of the incongruous nature of the contents of the book itself, which is so apparent on the face of the text. It is the incomprehensibleness of that book which charms the weak-minded reader.

The sooner we understand the true history of the Bible, the better for truth, justice and humanity. Let us come together, greet each other in friendship; agree to disagree. Then, and only then, may the world live in harmony, with truth, peace and humanity as its motto.

History and the higher criticism make the Bible the vacillating child of ages. Its accretions and denudations were the work of time and of numerous writers; first largely from tradition, to which was added scraps of writings of unknown authors; followed by numerous changes, edited, revised, enlarged, curtailed and redacted by numerous other unknown writers, who left but few footprints on their work.

These writers lived in times when ignorance, credulity, piety and superstition held the world in their nocturnal shadows. They believed, not in natural law, but in divine revelation—in dreams and omens. They were not reasoners; ignorance, passion and prejudice were their guides. How could such a book, written by such men, and in such times, over so long a period, and with so many changes, be made to harmonize? The impossible cannot by any amount of inspiration be made to harmonize.

All of the substance of the Bible is traceable directly back to older religious systems, in which the sun-god of old paganisms, under diverse names, occupied the head of the great pantheon of the world's divinities, and this, our great solar orb of to-day, is but the Jehovah of the Hebrews, and the first god in rank of the Christians. The Christians may theorize that they are worshoping a real supreme being, but who is none other than our great luminary, our bright, material, non-intelligent sun, which gives us light by day and hides its face at night.

Most of the Old Testament comes from Chaldeo-Babylonia, the home of the disk worshipers, while the New Testament is but the revision of the older systems, Jewish and pagan, sifted through Neo-Platonism. The original source was oral tradition, supplemented by scraps of writing, gathered here and there over the Roman empire, and deposited among the archives of the three original branches of the church, East, South and West. All these original writings were without times, places or names. This is also true of the Old Testament. When the books and other writings of the Bible were, after centuries, finally divided and entitled, names other than the purported authors were ascribed thereto.

Let us look at the Bible in its true light. Whatever merit, if any, any religion possesses cannot be harmed by investigation. There can be no greater error than to think any one religion is all true, and all the others false. Nevertheless, all of the religions, past and present, have erroneously attempted to maintain such a position. The old pagan systems, conceding the right of all others to maintain their own, moved in harmony, side by side. Not so with the Christians, who maintained that their systems came from heaven, and that that all others were not only false but pernicious, so they made unrelenting war, not only on all other systems, but on all unbelievers in their particular religion. Hence the long dark night of a thousand years, of poverty, piety and crimes untold.

The materials for my numerous writings on religion have been drawn from archaeological researches, ancient history, the sciences, the higher criticism, the writings of the church Fathers and other authentic sources. As an appeal to honest men, let it be said, no degree of difference of opinion should ever be made the pretext for quarrel. He who is seeking the truth has nothing to fear from investigation. The more discussion, the brighter the truth will appear. It is only error, and he who is seeking to perpetuate the wrong, that want no investigation. Truth may be crushed for a time, as in the dark ages by the church, when torture, murder and desolation swept over the fairest portion of our earth, but it will again return to pay, not only the debt, but the interest thereon.

The great mass of Hebrews and Christians, and not a few Rabbis and clerics, know nothing of the great stream of light which, in the last few years, has flowed in on the two systems from the records of ancient Egypt, Chaldeo-Babylonia and India. These records, with the aid of the higher criticism, have revolutionized the religious world, more especially the literary part of it. Intelligent men and women no longer believe the things which they were taught were of divine origin. Hence Christianity, at least Protestantism, is rapidly passing away, nor will its demise fail to plant the seeds of death along the pathway of Catholicity and Judaism, for the stern decrees of fate guided by inexorable laws of evolution move on unmindful of all obstacles, nor will the puny efforts of man impede their onward course.

And now on this 24th of December I close this article, commemorative of the time when the sun-god, the deus primus of all the religious peoples of the world, past and present, is in his grave. He died and was buried on the 22d; to-morrow, on the 25th, after three days in the grave of winter, he will come forth, rise from the grave to gladden the hearts of all christendom, as in the long past he did to the joy of paganism. Our Christians, as did the pagans, will make it a day of festivities. The good things, among which the lamb, fish, fig and wine will adorn the table. Let all remember this Pago-Christian sol novis deus.

SPIRIT VISITATION.

Two Remarkable Cases as Related by That Great Daily, the New York World, Illustrating the Great Interest in Occult Subjects.

In the fall of 1885 I was cook and general handy man, or rather boy, on the antiquated, unseaworthy brick schooner Despatch. The old vessel at the time was skippered by Captain Tommy Butler, of Northport, L. I., and was engaged in freighting brick from the yards at West Neck to various points on the Sound as far east as Providence, R. I.

On the night the visitation I am about to record appeared to me we had taken on our cargo during the day and were towed out to anchor in the harbor a mile off shore.

We were to sail at 4 a. m. the next morning, taking advantage of the flood tide running at that hour. The captain, with the other two members of the crew, Joe Lillis and Bob Donohue, had gone ashore, taking the yawl, leaving me alone on board. The fact of my being left alone gave me no concern, as this had occurred times without number before this time.

Intending not to turn in until their return, I amused myself with such books as I had until about 11 o'clock. The cabin lamp was burning and I was wide awake, when something caused me to look upward to the top of the cabin stairs. The slide of the cabin house was open, as the weather was still moderately warm. There I saw, with his elbows leaning on either side of the hatchway, and his face in clear relief, owing to the lamp rays, an old acquaintance, Gene Thompson.

He was bareheaded and looked straight down at me. Gene was a rather wild young fellow, whom I had not seen for over six months, and I seemed to remember, as I looked at him, that it had been vaguely rumored that he had been drowned since his disappearance from West Neck.

What surprised me was how he got aboard without my hearing the sound of his boat grating against the schooner's side.

I greeted him and invited him into the cabin. He made no immediate reply, only shaking his head from side to side in what struck me as a decidedly mournful way. As I looked closer his appearance struck me as peculiar, not to say uncanny.

I still had no thought of fear, and repeated my invitation. He still declined with the same sorrowful shake of the head. At last he spoke, low and clear.

"Get off this boat and keep off," were the words he uttered, and then vanished.

I ran quickly up the stairs, but I could see no boat leaving the schooner, nor any within hail. The nearest vessel was anchored half a mile away.

Free from superstition, I was more puzzled than terrified. While I was still wrestling with fear and curiosity, the captain and the two men returned. I, of course, recounted the circumstance above related, only to be greeted by unbelief and laughter. Then for the first time I learned that "Gene's" death had been proven; he had been lost from a three-master off the Mine coast four months before.

I turned in that night trying to figure how I could get off that boat without sacrificing my boyish vanity or being accused of cowardice, for I must confess I began to feel a sensation bordering on panic. The men tried to convince me that I had fallen asleep and dreamed. It is scarcely necessary to say that I was never more wide awake in my life.

The wind came out strong from the northwest in the morning; being near to a gale, and made sailing on schedule time an impossibility. This was a reprieve for me, but a reprieve only, as I still lacked the moral courage to openly quit.

My chance came though when, about 9 a. m., the captain sent me ashore to procure some stores that had been forgotten.

At the store I met a boy with a message from my father almost imploring me to remain at home this one trip and assist him with some work.

Ordinarily the request would have had little weight with me, but on this occasion my filial duty, assisted by my fear, was strong within me. Much to Captain Butler's disgust I informed him that my presence was needed badly at home.

They sailed at noon without me, the wind having moderated slightly.

The vessel sailed safely out of Cold Spring harbor into the Sound and steered east. At dusk off Eaton's Neck, in sight of the life saving station, the old Despatch capsized in a sudden squall and went to the bottom almost instantly with her heavy load of brick, carrying the unfortunate men with her. Not one of the three was saved, although all were good swimmers. In my own mind the thing explains itself. I ask no other explanation.

JOHN REDINGTON, JR.
119 Third Place, Brooklyn.

Saw a Spirit in the Dark.

In the winter of 1867 I was employed on the London (Ont.) Daily Prototype, working nights, and boarding with a Mrs. Gunn, on Wellington street.

I had been living there about two months when Mr. Brown, Mrs. Gunn's father, died. I had never seen him in life, and not even heard of him. He lived about two miles from Mrs. Gunn's, but on account of better accommodations she had the funeral at her house.

The body was brought over and placed in the parlor. My bedroom was off that room, and that night when I got home two daughters of Mrs. Gunn and Mrs. Merrill, her sister, besides two boarders, were "sitting up" with the corpse.

As I passed through the parlor Mrs. Merrill asked me if I would like to look at the body, but I declined. I then went into my room and closed the door, but did not lock it.

I had not been long asleep before I awoke with a start. I was lying on my right side facing the outside of the bed, and right in front of me and almost on a line with my pillow was the figure of an aged man. Although the room was dark, I could see it as plain as day.

I looked at it probably a minute, and then said to myself:

"If there is such a thing as a ghost this is surely one," and again: "If it is, I am not scared of it."

I lay and looked at it a little longer. Pretty soon, however, I began to feel a little agitated. I started to turn my face to the "inside" of the bed, when "it" began to move toward the foot. I stopped turning and it stopped moving. By this time the cold perspiration stood on my forehead in drops, and I turned my face quickly toward the wall.

As I did so "it" seemed to go around the foot of the bed, when I turned my face to the front of the bed again and called, or rather screamed, to the folks in the parlor.

They all came in, one of them carrying the table lamp. I told them that I had had a rather unpleasant visitor and described what I had seen. As I got through my description the elder Miss Gunn said:

"Why, Mr. Ferguson, that was grandpa; get up and take a look at him in the coffin."

I said: "No, thank you; if that was your grandpa, I have seen all of him that I want to see this night."

Someone suggested I had been dreaming, but when I told them that while I looked at "grandpa" I heard Mrs. Merrill telling a story, they were satisfied I was awake.

They remained in the room until I partly got back my nerve, but it was near daylight before I again got to sleep. The next morning they were on the lookout for me, as they were anxious to know how the corpse in looks compared with the "ghost." I went over to the coffin and took at the body, and what I saw at my bedside was a counterpart of what I was looking at in the coffin, to the minutest detail.

What I tell here is as true as gospel; but whether I saw a "ghost" or not, I will leave it to your readers and the committee of scientific men to determine.

The Water Witch Question.

In regard to the question of "water witching," which seems to bob up occasionally in your paper, I would like to add my testimony to that of your Oregon correspondent in a late number of The Progressive Thinker.

I have not only seen the stick twisted nearly off in another person's hands, but I have held it myself so firmly that the ends did not move and the bark was split and the stick nearly broken at the point where it bent.

I have walked blindfolded over the spot, not knowing where it was, with the same results. So whatever the cause may be, it cannot be laid to any conscious or unconscious action of the muscles in the fingers. Whether it was water or mineral that was indicated I do not know, for I never saw it tested. I only know the hazel fork which we generally used would bend only at certain points. I have heard that a willow or peach-tree fork would answer just as well.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the most famous woman author in America, says of this book: "It contains a fortune in value if you practice the simple exercises given. The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Mrs James Riley writes from Morcellus, Mich.: "Mr. Riley is in very good health, and is still in the work, having good success with his seances; but his work is cheerfully confined to his home, where he entertains from far and near, seekers after light and truth, and many are gladdened and refreshed, full of hope and joy, and who return to their homes leaving a blessing for "Farmer Riley."

S. S. Ervet would like to have a genuine materializing medium visit his town. Address him at Goldfield, Nev., P. O. Box 393.

George A. Letford, a "drummer" who covers the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida in the interests of a Chicago house, arrived last Saturday for a long visit. He will give messages after the lecture every afternoon next week.—Grand Ledge Independent.

The Racine Daily Journal of July 29, in discussing the closing address deelivered by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen at the Chautauqua, there on Sunday evening, the 28th ult., says: "Mrs. Fixen preached possibly the strongest sermon ever delivered from this platform, if we take into consideration the essential elements of a really great sermon."

G. H. Brooks has been appointed delegate to the National Convention in Washington. He desires to make engagements for the last two Sundays in October, somewhere in the east, and would also like to have his time all taken during the last week of October. Write him and secure his services. Address him at No. 253 So. Charles St., Wauwatosa,, Wis. Mr. Brooks passed through Chicago last week, on his way to Lily Dale, N. Y., where he will deliver three lectures, beginning Sunday, August 4.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague are reported as doing excellent work at the Chesterfield Camp, which, under the efficient management of its present officials, is doing finely. This week they will be at the Wonewoc camp, and then on to Clinton.

G. H. Brooks, President of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, writes: "We held a very successful board meeting of the State Society at the Wonewoc, camp, July 23 and 24. Important business was transacted. The debt is slowly being reduced, and I am happy to state that Mrs. McFarlin was paid the money due her for services rendered at Waukesha camp five years ago. We are still in debt, but in time we hope to get it all paid, and then go on in a work through the State that is very much needed. On the 24th was State Day at the camp, which was most successful. Mrs. McFarlin was there and assisted, and gave the principal address in the afternoon, followed by Mr. Erwood in the evening. A seance was held for the benefit of the State, in which all the mediums on the ground assisted. Members of the board present: Miss L. Loebel, secretary, Milwaukee; W. E. Bristol, treasurer, Oakfield; Mrs. McFarlin, Plainview, Minn; D. E. Frost, Almond, Dr. Sunderland, La Crosse. It was decided to hold the next annual Convention in Portage, next April, and it is to be desired there will be a large attendance."

Minnie Eastman Harvey writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritual Society meets every Sunday night at 378 S. Western Ave., in Star Lodge Hall. Speaker for Sunday night, August 4, Nellie Kusserow. Services at 8 p. m. Watch for notice of mass meeting."

Mrs. A. A. Averill writes from Lynn, Mass.: "Rev. Vanderbilt, formerly Mrs. May S. Pepper, of Brooklyn, N. Y., lectured and exercised her wonderful gift of mediumship at Unity Camp, Saugus, Mass., on Sunday, July 28. The lectures given were masterpieces of eloquence and the message work was a remarkable demonstration of the wonderful gift possessed by Mrs. Vanderbilt, who although daily annoyed and harassed by lawyers, experts and reporters, showed no signs in her work of the strain under which she has been living for the past months, showing conclusively the power and helpfulness of her spirit guides. The largest audiences that were ever at this camp were present at the several services, the large auditorium being completely filled and hundreds were not able to obtain admittance, but were not debarred from enjoying the exercises as Mrs. Vanderbilt could be heard distinctly at quite a distance from the building. Vocal solos were rendered by William Boomhover. W.A.Robbins, and cornet solos by W. H. Thomas. A very successful bazaar was held by the Association on July 25, 26 and 27, in the auditorium. A dance was held on the evening of the 26th. Although the weather was quite unpropitious, a goodly sum was realized."

A worker writes from Indianapolis, Indiana: "The Children's Lyceum of the Progressive Spiritualist Church of Indianapolis, Ind., has had a most pleasant and profitable year's work since the opening of the season in September, 1906. There were but 8 children in attendance. Now the roll call numbers seventy. Of course this is not the average, but the attendance has been very good. The program for each Sunday was divided into three parts—spiritual, mental and physical culture. For the spiritual part a lesson was chosen, and the children were given selections to read concerning the lesson. The roll was then called, and the children answered by giving questions from different good authors. The mental part consisted of recitations, talks and music. The physical part was taught by marches, dumbbell work, Delsarte. During the winter five entertainments were given by the children who were well trained by their efficient and intelligent conductor, Mrs. Flora B. Fesler, for their parts, thus giving them the advantage of appearing at ease before the public. The proceeds of the entertainments paid all expenses, including pianist, the conductor and a balance of nine dollars in the treasury for future work. On the roll of honor for the best attendance are the names of several. Mrs. Fesler has taken charge of the Lyceum work at Camp Chesterfield. The association has been fortunate in securing the services of this faithful and talented worker.'

Mrs. Rose L. Bushnell Donnelly writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "I want to tell you how we all appreciate the last two issues of The Progressive Thinker (but all the Progressive Thinkers are appreciated), and the truth shines clear to us all. The world would look dark to many should The Progressive Thinker discontinue. Who could have stemmed a tide of floodwood like your paper —a tide of falsehoods and fraud? Who could have found the grains of golden truth therein, and placed them before the world—I will say, almost free of charge; clean and bright, having passed through the fire and purged of dross."

Mrs. Emma Ellis, Secretary, writes: "The Band of Harmony which met at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery had a most delightful and interesting session. The afternoon was given over to the mediums, there being several of Chicago's well known mediums present who gave messages and related experiences. The evening was well filled in by music and recitations, a poem being read by Mr. Goodrich, a beautiful story by Mrs. Goodrich, a violin solo by a young boy and sister. Mrs. Fravil gave from her store, so the day passed most enjoyably. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Druliner, 93 Bowen Avenue.

The afternoon will be given over to teacup reading by the mediums; the evening to progressive euchre, some beautiful prizes being given. Bring lunch.

Take Indiana and 43d Street car, or Halsted Street car, to Root Street; there take 43d Street car to Ellis Avenue; walk two blocks north to 93 Bowen Avenue.

Ferd. C. Suhrer writes: "Although the services of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists have been discontinued during the heated term to allow our members and friends a short breathing spell, our mediums and speakers are not quite so fortunate, as there is not one but who is filling an engagement in the city and neighboring towns. Bro. Chas. A. Thompson has been doing remarkable work on the South and West sides for different societies. Bro. Wm. Traver has returned from Elgin, where a special service of the Psychic Research society of that city was called Saturday evening, July 20, to give their members an opportunity to receive tidings from their loved ones through the brother, who also took part in the following Sunday services at the home of Bro. S. B. West. Sister Henrietta Lichtig is filling an engagement at Wonewoc camp, Wisconsin. Sister A. W. Bloom is heard from at Chesterfield camp, Indiana, and is also on the program at Grand Ledge camp, Michigan. Sister Barbara Hilbert is making arrangements to fill an engagement at Chesterfield and other camps. Sister Alice Sexsmith is on the official program of the National Convention, which convenes in Washington, D. C., in October. Mrs. Dr. Caird will leave shortly for Chesterfield camp, and also Grand Ledge. Sister M. A. Helyett will also be at Chesterfield, returning the latter part of August. There is a constant and growing demand for mediums and speakers who are reliable, and it is with pardonable pride and satisfaction we note the fact that when any of our workers attend a meeting in any part of the city they are recognized and pressed into service. He speaks well for the worker and well for the Fraternal Order. The Fraternal Daughters are also busy and their next tea party and social occurs at the home of Sister Rickert, 117 Rice Street, near the corner of Chicago Avenue and Robey Street, on Wednesday, August 7, commencing at 2:30 and ending somewhere near midnight. Make your preparations now to attend. Miss Elizabeth Harlow's lecture in our hall, 406 Ogden Avenue, corner Robey Street, August 28, She has a host of friends here and you will have to come early to secure good seats."

Dr. and Mrs. Alexander Caird go to the Chesterfield camp this week. The Doctor will give excellent advice and treatment to those who are ill physically, while Mrs. Caird will give genuine messages from the spirit side of life.

Wm. Richmond writes from Lily Dale, N. Y., under date of August 2: "We landed in Philadelphia last Monday, where we spent a few days visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Richmond, arriving here this morning. Mrs. Richmond commences her work here next Sunday afternoon. Clegg Wright speaks here this afternoon."

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Noyes will remain in Los Angeles, Cal., until October 1, and then go to Galveston, Texas, until January 1, working for the Temple Society in that city. Mr. Noyes has a permit to practice mediumship there.

On the evening of August 1, Georgia Gladys Cooley closed her engagemend with the Meadville, Pa., society. In closing her lecture there she said: "It is not easy for any soul that begins to reform to tell why it started to lead a better life, but often it is due to some psychic experience. In testimonies given in the churches, we are told that some familiar voices, as if a mother or father calling to them, was the cause of many beginning to lead religious lives. A mother suddenly appearing to a drunken son and seeming to dash the cup of liquor from his hands, has given him power to at length master this evil habit. Boys often successfully hide some of their evil deeds from their mothers in the body, but when they are separated by death, the mother can know everything her boy does. Let us all, then, as true Spiritualists, set an example of high and noble living before the world, and thus prepare ourselves for a truly successful life, here and hereafter."

Vicksburg (Mich.) Camp.

The Vicksburg Spiritualist Camp began its annual camp meeting July 28. Miss Jeanette Fraser, an ever faithful worker for the Cause of Spiritualism, is again in charge of the work begun twenty-four years ago.

Will J. Erwood, a very able exponent of Spiritualism, began the meetings with two forceful addresses. His lectures were marked with an earnest appeal to his hearers to live their religion.

God and religion are within, and when we live in harmony we are living near to God. Let us make our present lives pure and grand, that when the transition comes we need not fear. Learn to live, not to die.

Miss Emma Gibbs of Grand Rapids is spending the first week at the Camp, assisting in the work by acting as chair-lady; by cheering words and helpful deeds making the place brighter and better by her being present.

Mrs. A. E. Kibby of Newport, Ky., addresses the audience Saturday afternoon, and assists in the work during the remainder of the season.

Mrs. Cora Morrell, one of our well known Michigan speakers, of Grand Rapids, will be at the camp during the second week.

The conference each morning is found to be a school, instructive and entertaining; each and every camper adding their might to the great whole.

The evenings are made pleasant by fireside circles, practice in the open air, camp dances and entertainments.

RENA CHAPMAN MYERS, Sec.

Clinton Day at Mount Pleasant Park.

"Difficulties are things to be overcome," says some wise man; and that is the motto of the local society here. If every Spiritualist would but emulate the Clinton Spiritualists, and especially their chief and pastor, in their tireless persistency in overcoming difficulties, then the present apathy which hangs over organized Spiritualism like a cloud over a glorious mountain, would soon be dispelled and the mountain stand revealed before the world in all its spiritual splendor and magnificence.

Hitherto, at the annual encampments here, the local society has not been represented, but it was resolved this year to set a day apart especially for the local society, and to call it Clinton Day, and the results prove the wisdom of the step.

By the exercise we have gained an infusion of new life and enthusiasm; and we earnestly hope to be allowed to perpetuate Clinton Day as something to look forward to, not only as our annual anniversary, but as a perpetuation of Spiritualism in this vicinity.

It is unnecessary to go into the details of the full and successful day, but one rather remarkable incident is quite worthy of note. The subject of the day was "Woman and Her Place in the World," and it was generally conceded, even by the ladies, thet women had held an inferior place, compared to men, in the past. But after all our intellects had been exhausted on the subject, lo and behold, an angelic child stepped to the platform and, under inspiration, told us wiseacres that woman had, because of her love and more spiritual qualities, been the peer of man in all the past. Verily, I thought, "a child doth lead us."

Success to future Clinton Days!

FAITH LANDS MAN IN CELL.

Jail Sentence for Parent of Girl Who Died from Neglect—Blow to Prayer Healing—First Conviction of the Kind in New York Affects Christian Science.

Charles W. Byrne, of New York, who failed to provide medical attendance for his six-year-old daughter, with the result that she died of pneumonia, must serve the thirty days in the city prison to which he was sentenced by the court of special sessions. After deliberating for several weeks, three justices of the court unanimously ruled against appeal for a new trial.

Byrne claimed that he was a Christian Scientist, although not an enrolled member of any church. His lawyer, however, asserted that Byrne was not a Christian Scientist.

Byrne's conviction and sentence to prison for this offense is the first on record in this city. Assistant District Attorney Robert J. Turnbull, who secured the conviction of Byrne, said nothing would deter the district attorney's office from fighting the case to a finish provided an appeal was taken.

Court's Opinion of Neglect.

The opinion in the case, read by Justice John B. McKean, says, in part:

"Defendant is guilty of violating section 288 of the penal code, which declares a person who wilfully omits to perform the duty imposed on him by law to furnish food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance to a minor, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Defendant excuses himself upon the plea he went to faith medical doctors, believing implicitly in the methods of Christian Science, which, in the healing of physical disorders relies solely upon the efficacy of prayer. On one occasion he called in a Christian Science healer, supposed to have greater efficacy by reason of special instruction, but during the rest of the time he similarly treated his child.

Illegal to Withhold Medical Aid.

"The sole question is whether omission to furnish medical attendance under the circumstances constitutes 'lawful excuse.' To answer that question in the affirmative by granting a motion to arrest judgment would establish a precedent that might be extremely vexatious in other directions.

"An individual of some other cult with equal plausibility and earnestness could plead disbelief in educational methods as an excuse for not sending children to school, and could withhold food, clothing, or shelter, leaving each as part of his religion to be furnished through a similar agency.

"A physician must be procured for children dangerously ill, and the parent who omits this imposed duty can find no legal excuse if the disease results fatally."—Chicago Tribune.

AN EARNEST APPEAL

To the Spiritualists of Wisconsin.

Having just returned from Wonewoc Camp Grounds, at Wonewoc, Wis., where a very successful State Day was spent on July 24th, in connection with an Executive Board meeting at which all members were present by only three being unable to attend, a goodly number of important business points were settled in favor of the good of the cause. One especially needs my mention. We were able at this meeting to pay the bill which has been due for a number of years to Mrs. Catherine McFarlin. The many friends throughout the State will undoubtedly be more than pleased to know this good and faithful worker has at last received compensation for work done so long ago.

Portage, Wisconsin was chosen for the next annual convention to be held April 18, 19 and 20, at which the committee appointed at last convention to revise the Constitution and By-Laws will be ready to report. All the friends having suggestions to offer will kindly forward the same to the secretary before January 31st, in order to be able to forward the same to the committee.

Our President, Geo. H. Brooks, has just completed a tour about the State in the interest of Spiritualism and the State Association; friends everywhere have responded royally to the call. We are happy to say the work in Wisconsin is growing, and the people are awakening to the realization of the necessity of the State Association, if Spiritualism is to have the recognition it should have everywhere.

Wonewoc is a most ideal spot for Camp Grounds, and if the people in the State knew how much they could derive by spending a few weeks in perfect harmony with nature and drink in the peace of spirit communion, I am sure the Camp Association would find it necessary to add many more tents upon their grounds.

Friends of Wisconsin, in behalf of your Association I come to you as your secretary with an earnest appeal for meetings to be held by your President, Geo. H. Brooks, in behalf of our grand and noble cause. Write me and I will arrange for meetings. If unable to have a hall, we are willing to come into your parlors, it matters not where the gospel of truth is given.

Our President has answered a call to Lily Dale, N. Y., and will return before September 1st, and be ready to come into your midst.

Kindly do not delay, but write soon, that I may arrange the route and all can be reached.

Yours sincerely, for Truth,

LOUISE G. LOEBEL.

Secretary Wisconsin State Association, 202 North Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

Freeville, N. Y., Camp.

The 12th Annual Camp Meeting here was opened in a most auspicious manner on Sunday, July 21. It was an ideal day. A fine audience gathered at 11 a. m., and with faces radiant with pleasure greeted Mr. W. W. Kelsey as he called them to order. A fine selection on the phonograph, used by Mr. Green, was rendered. Mr. W. W. Kelsey then welcomed all in a genial manner, and read an address of welcome. After a song by the audience, Mrs. Herrick presiding at the organ, Mrs. D. A. Morrill, of Grand Rapids, Mich., gave the invocation. Another song followed, when a perfect storm of applause greeted D. A. Herrick, of Akron, O., as he stepped forward to give the address of the morning.

Mrs. D. A. Morrill gave a grand lecture in the afternoon, followed by messages, and in her work during the week following has endeared herself to all who heard her this year. I regret that it is useless to try to give even an outline of the grand lectures given by each worker in turn, and only wish more of them could be seen in print.

A beautiful little cottage, built by Miss Marie Lewis, of Ithaca, was dedicated after the afternoon services by the singing of two songs and words from W. W. Kelsey, Herrick and Mrs. Morrill, and the naming of the cottage the "Pioneer Cottage."

The grounds were gotten in fine order by the few who are the bone and sinew of every camp grounds. The pleasures and lectures are enjoyed by the many, the work is always done by the few. Four rooms were built to accommodate the speakers, and as many others as possible, and we are snugly sheltered in one of these. A new seance room is a building to one room—18x18, and has been dedicated to the "Angel World," and where grand demonstrations have been enjoyed by the seekers after truth, who have been ever asking for evidence that Spiritualism is a truth, and which cannot be found anywhere only through the phenomena and mediumship.

In their turn came Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue, of Hartford, Conn., and Mrs. Mary T. Jennings, of Moravia, N. Y. Mrs. Russegue endeared herself to this people last year, and carries an audience with her until the last word of her lecture; a grand worker and one whose every word is wisdom and truth from higher spheres.

Mrs. Jennings is a prophet who is honored in her own country, thus contradicting the teachings of old; only the excuse might be made that that writing meant men, as women were not considered in those days.

So far, Freeville camp has been a success. The fee has been taken from the gates. The dining-room is in competent hands. Mr. Green is florist, and our grounds show his handiwork. Mr. and Mrs. Cooper and Mr. and Mrs. Fuller are are "hustlers" of the camp.

A gloom was cast over the entire community by the sudden going out of the daughter and little grandson of Brother and Sister Stone. Mrs. Genung and son were drowned by the disaster to the boat Fontenac on Cayuga Lake, N. Y., but we were impressed by our knowledge of Spiritualism, by the words from the mother, "I am just waiting for a word from her to know how she is." Oh, the comfort of it, but we extend our deepest sympathy and pray they may realize the presence of their darlings in their home, and receive words of love and greeting in the seance room to tell, "we are alive, and because we are, you shall be."

Mrs. E. Clark arrived from Rochester and gave her first lecture yesterday, which was splendid, and she is welcomed by all.

Mr. Herrick is called to McClain, Dryden, Locke, Elmira, Ithaca and Cortland for seances. So Godspeed the workers everywhere; you are all needed in the vineyard of Spiritualism. MRS. SADIE HERRICK.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following is a tribute to the heroic faith, patience and fortitude of the late Walter Scott Powell, of Washington, D. C., who, after many weeks of the most excruciating suffering, entered into life July 16, 1907:

We do not know, we cannot clearly see
Amid the turmoil of this mortal strife,
Looming above, within, and through material clay,
The mysteries of life, sweet life, that knows no death.
Ever around, about us everywhere
Resounds Love's triumph song,—
THERE IS NO DEATH.

Sorrow and change belong to outer form;
Courage, and all the beauteous attributes
Of soul, of mind, thrice purified, belong
To that within, that emulates and soars
Till it awakes in likeness of its source.

Peace, "Peace, Be Still," O ye that fear and fail
Of doubting heart, beside the silent grave;
What bliss eternal waits that inmost self,
Effulgent in the power of having overcome;
Lauded by angels in ecstatic joy—
LO! LO! REJOICE YE HOSTS OF EARTH AND HEAVEN, BEHOLD A SOUL VICTORIOUS;
ALL IS WELL!

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About 7 words constitute a line.]

Mrs. Prudence Wooster, wife of George B. Wooster, passed to the higher life from her home at Brodhead, Wis., July 20, after a long and tedious illness which she bore with sweet patience. She was a close follower of the Golden Rule and all who knew her can testify to her gentleness and purity of life, and we feel that the mantle of her great love falls like a benediction on the husband and four children, as well as grandchildren and friends, who will miss the physical presence of this grand woman. Abundance of flowers whispered their silent tribute of love from the many friends who filled the home at the transition service, which was conducted by

GEORGIA GLADYS COOLEY.

In Meckling, S. D., on the morning of July 6, G. K. Edgerton passed quietly away, after 8 months of patient suffering. He was born in the town of Pompey, Onondaga Co., N. Y., August 19, 1824. He accepted the philosophy of Spiritualism in early manhood and was true to his convictions throughout his life. It was in accordance with his expressed wish thea the services of an Orthodox minister were dispensedwith at the funeral. As there was no Spiritualist in reach, a hymn was sung, then a short sketch of his life was read, another hymn sung, and the services at the home concluded. He was married in 1860 to Miss P. A. Baker, and in the fall of 1866 they removed to Michigan, finding a home in Ingham County where they lived 34 years. In 1900 another change was made, and Meckling, South Dakota, became their home. C.

Milton K. Howe, aged 79 years, and 10 months, passed to spirit life from Princeton, Mass., July 15, 1907. Mr. Howe was a consistent Spiritualist, a good citizen and an affectionate husband and father. He fearlessly approached the change of spheres. A large circle of friends and relatives attended the funeral service, which was conducted by the writer. There were many beautiful floral tributes.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

An Investigator:—Q. At times I sense a fragrance near me that others cannot perceive. Sweet, delicious, yet suffocating and oppressive at times, and usually lingers for hours. Entirely different from any earthly odor or perfume which I have tested for comparison. While it endures I sense a presence near me and I feel very happy and begin to feel faint, forgotten memories that have not transpired in this existence, coming forth in my mind.

A.—Catarrhal troubles often give rise to false sensations of odors, and the grippe has for one of its symptoms this illusion—if thus it may be called. It is really not an illusion, for it is produced by the lesion of the olfactory nerves, which falsely impress the brain.

But this explanation will not apply to "Investigator," for there is always the accompanying sensation of a presence and an intensification of the mind, even to the reviving of memories obliterated by many overlying experiences. This would show that the sensation of fragrance was secondary, and a result of the close contact of spiritual beings. If recipients of such favors desire to perfect their gift, they cannot do so by waiting chance occasions for its manifestations. They must gather a little circle of friends, and exercise their impressibility. They must learn how to enter the sensitive state when they desire to do so.

C. W. Jackson:—Q. Are the Sixth and Seventh Books of Moses reliable? What of the Apocryphal New Testament? Is it a part of the Catholic Bible?

A.—A very erroneous idea prevails as to the Catholic Bible. It really in many respects is superior to King James' version, reverenced by Protestants.

The Sixth and Seventh Books of Moses are gross frauds, without the least value.

The Apocryphal New Testament is valuable as giving a clear and startling view of the utter unreliability of the literature of the Christian centuries. The books of which it is composed were not added to the New Testament because they told too much. The most superstitious credulity would pause before accepting its stories of Christ, the Virgin and Apostles, which rival the Arabian Nights! No one can afford to not read the Apocryphal New Testament. It opens such a wide reach into the seething sea of those ages of ignorance, credulity and scheming selfishness.

George E. Corpe:—Q. I would like an explanation of the following: I have seen different persons take a hair and tie it to a plain gold ring and fill a common tumbler two-thirds full of water, set the tumbler on a table, place the elbows on the table and hold the hair so the ring is suspended in the center of the glass above the water. Presently the ring will begin to swing and strike the glass as many times as the owner of the hair is years old.

A.—This is an exceedingly ancient method of divination in high repute with the diviners of Greece and Rome, and introduced to them by the Egyptians.

A large, shallow bowl was used, around the margin of which the letters of the alphabet were arranged, and the ring swung successively to these letters, spelling words and sentences. It is perhaps the earliest instrument employed to give communications.

A fine thread is as serviceable as a hair, if freed from the tendency to twist and untwist. For this reason a hair is best, though there is shown to be nothing in the properties of the hair that a thread does not possess essential to the success of the experiment. The oscillation of the suspended ring has been accounted for by involuntary muscular action, which may cover experiments where the answers are known and expected by the experimenter, but it fails to explain those where the answer is unknown. The answer as to the age of the person owning the hair does not depend on the hair itself, and may be gained from a thread as well.

The experiment is easily made, and it is interesting from any and every point of view, and it is rather strange that it has not received more attention from psychic researchers, who have not even thought it worthy of mention. In the hands of a sensitive it may become a means of receiving messages of highest value as tests of spirit identity. The value of these is not changed, whether the movement is explained by direct spirit action or if from involuntary muscular action produced by spirits acting on the brain of the subject.

The character of the answers received determines the independence of the intelligence giving them. If they are outside and beyond the knowledge of the experimenter, it proves a direct and identified intelligence.

AN OPINION IN "REVUE SPIRITE."

"Mediumistic Force" or Spirit Power—Which?

In the 'Revue Spirite,' for July, the learned writer on psychic subjects who signs himself 'Rouxel,' takes up the latest views of scientific men on the nature of mediumship. His argument was summarized as follows in Light, London:

'Now that science has come to recognize the reality of the phenomena called spiritualistic, or at least of a large portion of them, it is engaged in attempting to explain them, to find out the cause of them, in order to upset the "spirit hypothesis." It blames Spiritists for wanting to theorize before having sufficiently observing the facts. Before going any farther we must remark that Spiritists have framed no hypothesis at all. They have accepted, after verification, the explanations given by the spirits themselves. The Fox girls did not SUPPOSE that it was a spirit that made the disturbing noises in their house; it was the invisible cause itself that told them who and what it was.

'Mediumship, according to the men of science, depends on a force latent in everyone, and especially developed in a few persons, which is subject to the will. Whose will? That of the medium or those of the sitters? If the supposition be true, the effects should be proportionate to the force of this will, or of these wills, which is negatived by a host of experiences. This attractive force put forward by men of science as the prime and sole cause of all spirit phenomena, is, therefore, nothing but pure hypothesis.

'The difficulty, in fact, is not to explain the production of physical phenomena, movements of tables, etc., but to account for their non-production when all the conditions appear to be favorable. At times, in spite of the greatest desire, the strongest will, to obtain movements, none are forthcoming. After good phenomena have been produced, and when more are hoped for, the word is given that all is over; then, in spite of the desire and will of the sitters and mediums, nothing more happens. What, then, is this "force," which is just as capable of doing nothing as of producing physical effects, whichever it chooses? In short, though the medium and sitters may assist in producing the FORCE, as a mechanical agency, they do not supply the WILL which controls it.

'Nor do the men of science come off any better as regards the phenomena which denote the intervention of an intelligent cause. They say that the results never exceed the degree of intelligence of the medium and sitters. This would prove nothing, even if it were true; the spirits being discarnate human souls, it is natural that they should be on the same average intellectual level as the living. But are the scientists sure that the spirits teach us nothing, and that they ONLY speak of trivial or common matters? Again, even if this last were true, it would merely be on a level with the gossip of drawing-rooms and tea-parties.

'Transmission of thought is regarded by scientific men as the whole secret of the intellectual phenomena of Spiritism. They admit, then, that thought can be transmitted without physical organs. This has long been proclaimed by Spiritualists and others, and was formerly denied by men of science, who held that nervous force, the instrument of thought, could not act outside the organism. Thought transmission really exists, but far from undermining the spirit theory, it confirms it, by proving the existence of the soul and its independence of the body. The soul is, therefore, separable from the body, and is not destroyed with it, but only liberated, by physical death, retaining all the activity which it ever possessed, and which naturally belongs to it. If thought transmission takes place between man and man, between one intelligence and another, without the aid of physical organs, it can also take place between man and the soul separated from the body; we have only to find out whether this does actually occur. Spiritualists say it does, and this is logical; men of science say it does not, and this is illogical, for they admit the transmission of thought between living men, and, what is more miraculous still, from the man to the table! Fancy a piece of wood receiving a thought, comprehending it and replying to it correctly! This is rather too much of a hypothesis, and reminds us of the savages who believe that their fetishes are as intelligent as themselves, and can reply to them! Men of science must, therefore, either give in to Spiritism or find another explanation of the admittedly real phenomena, to say nothing of those which they deny at present, and which we hope soon to force them to recognize as authentic.'

Lake Brady Camp.

Lake Brady Camp was favored on the 28th inst by the presence of Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, who gave both the morning and afternoon lectures. The morning lecture was on the topic, "From Darkness Into Light," prefaced by the poem, "The Better Time Coming." She compared the modern spiritual manifestations to those of Bible times:

"If the Bible is true, why are not all Christians and church-members Spiritualists?"

In the afternoon, after reading the poem, "Open the Windows," she gave a fine discourse on "Progress and Spiritualism," claiming a Spiritualistic origin for all great inventions and reforms throughout the world.

In the evening Mr. Oles, who is pastor of a Spiritualist society in Akron, O., gave a short talk, telling his experience in the work, followed by reading various articles, some being very accurate but as they were laid on each other some were mixed.

The rooming house is full, others are in cottages. More rooms and cottages are needed.

MARY L. BETTES.

Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Onset Camp-Meeting.

Thursday Miss Susie C. Clark was the speaker of the afternoon. After a vocal selection by Mr. A. J. Maxham, she read a poem entitled "Resolves," by Eva Best. She then took for her subject, "In Fetters of Desire I am not Bound." She said that away back of Florence, Italy, is a quiet sanctuary, a lodge of wise and devoted men, a school of prophets; they in the silence focus their thoughts upon human needs, in fact give absent treatment. Occasionally some of the brotherhood wander abroad, and I have had the pleasure of meeting one. Through his lips I have heard of the way they, to a certain extent, plan their work. They have a list of fetters that bind the people. Some obstacles are misconceptions of God; to set up our own standard of right and wrong, and judge others by it, etc. Her lecture was a masterly one. She spoke of each of these fetters and the best was to overcome them. Humility is the only true gateway to progress. Sacrifice of self is the most important remedy for these foibles.

Friday and Saturday we held conferences and they were enjoyed by all present, Miss Bartel introducing a new method of science of names and numbers, which was interesting to all.

The Lyceum at Onset under the auspices of Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn opened auspiciously on Wednesday. The children seem interested and on Friday afternoon many more children and adults were present. The outlook for the summer Lyceum is good. Mrs. Allyn is most energetic.

The seances by Mrs. Carrie F. Loring and Mrs. Alice Whall, have been appreciated by all receiving messages and the people are looking forward for others.

The dances in the Temple are well attended, and take it all together we are having a most prosperous camp this year. Many of the old Spiritualists are called for, and we extend an invitation to all to come and see dear old Onset sometime during the Summer.

Sunday, July 28, a large audience was in attendance. This morning Dr. Fuller, chairman, after giving the notice for the week, called upon Mr. A.J. Maxham, who opened the meeting with singing, after which Mrs. Johnson, of Milford, daughter of Moses Hull, was introduced and gave a fine reading. She is one of our best elocutionists, and it was a special favor to have her read for us to-day. After another selection by Mr. Maxham, Miss Amalia F. Pfenning of Brooklyn, N. Y., was introduced as a graduate of the Morris Pratt Institute, and took for her subject "the Philosophy of Spiritualism." It was a good address throughout.

At 2 p. m., another large audience was in attendance. The speaker for the afternoon was Mr. Thomas Cross of Fall River. He opened his address by reading a poem entitled, "St. Peter at the Gate," after which he took for his subject, "Speak to the Children of Israel That They Go Forward," and gave one of his best lectures and he has many. Mr. Cross is one of the most popular speakers in New England, and the great west should hear him. Only a verbatim report can do justice to the speaker, and space will not allow this. The readers of The Progressive Thinker should hear this speaker.

The meetings to-day were preceded by fine band concerts by the New Band. They also gave a concert at the close of the meeting.

At the close of Mr. Cross's address Mrs. Alice M. Whall gave a great many communications that were recognized by those receiving them. Mrs. Whall is one of our younger mediums and has a bright future before her.

Mrs. Whall held another seance in the Arcade in the evening before a good sized audience.

Monday was conference day, and among those taking part were Mrs. Hamilton Gill of Chicago and Dr. E. P. Jones of Millis, who told of his experiences, Mrs. Isherwood, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, and Mrs. Florence Johnson.

Mr. A. J. Maxham sang several selections.

Tuesday Mr. Thomas Cross of Fall River, was the speaker of the afternoon. Mr. A. J. Maxham sang one of his beautiful songs, after which Mr. Cross read a poem, "The Volunteer Organist." He took for his subject, "Which Shall It Be?"

1st. Spiritualism as a movement worthy of its cause, and the pioneers.

2nd. We can keep on merely existing, or,

3rd. We can go back into the church, and acknowledge we have been defeated. He said, to keep on just as we are, we are not representing Spiritualism as it really is. Which shall it be?—Shall we be smothered out of existence? Some say the battle ship of Spiritualism has run its course; if so, let us fill its guns to overflowing and burst the whole thing with a rousing send off. Rather than be a derelict to be dragged by the hand of orthodoxy, we will give of our best, and disband with honors and glory. But it is a disgrace that our warriors have to appeal to charity for a meal and a home. It is said the church has become tolerant and I know this is true, but they will hold you back because it has been its policy to tolerate what they cannot suppress. Religion is a personal matter—no one can interfere. The church as a social institution will live, as a place of worship it will die out.

Mr. Maxham sang and one of the finest meetings closed.

The Cause at Grand Rapids, Mich.

To the Editor:—I write to inform the many readers of The Progressive Thinker (may its light never grow dim) of the progress of Spiritualism in this city.

The New Thought Society opened its regular course of lectures October last, with Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit as speaker, followed by Mrs. D. A. Morrell, for November, and part of December; these being followed by Dr. Spinney, Mrs. Amanda Coffman and other good speakers, which kept the interest unabated during the winter months.

In March, the New Thought Society united their forces in a mass meeting, and reorganized under the name of the Psychical Research Society of Grand Rapids, electing as officers for one year, Mrs. Jennie Hoskins, president; Mr. J. C. Adrie, vice-president; Mrs. Lovina Wardy, secretary; and E. M. Stickney, treasurer.

It was voted to procure a charter from the State Society, and holding the anniversary meeting under the auspices of the New Society. Mrs. D. A. Morrell was procured as speaker and message bearer, and we had an old-fashioned love feast.

To wind up with we had with us for the last Sunday of May and the first first Sunday of June, Mrs. Helen Stuart Richings of Boston, who gave us two soul-inspiring lectures.

Not for many years, have the Spiritualists of this city been more united than at the present time, and the interest in the cause is on the rising tide. We will open our meetings in October with Mrs. Marian Carpenter as speaker, followed by Mrs. D. A. Morrell, for November, and we are negotiating with Mrs. Helen Stuart Richings for January, February and March, 1908. Should be pleased to hear from speakers for December and April. Address Mrs. Lovina Wardy, 184 Commerce St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

PREDICTS OWN DEATH; DIES.

Woman Says "I'll Take My Last Bath," Then Succumbs in Accordance With Premonition.

Egg Harbor City, N.J., August 1.—Mrs. A. Nichols, wife of a farmer near Germania, had a premonition several weeks ago of approaching death and told her husband that she would not live until August. Tuesday, after working in the field until late, she said: "My day's and life's work is done, but before I die I will take my last bath."

Her husband paid no attention to her remarks, but when he returned to the house he found her dead in bed. Physicians said she died from natural causes.

The woman was 60 years old and had always had good health.

GROVE MEETING.

The Psychic Research Society of Rockford, Ill., Holds a Splendid Meeting.

The Psychic Research Society of Rockford, Ill., the 28th of July, held a session in the grove—God's Spirit Temple, on the grounds of Mrs. B. F. Cunningham, south of the city, where some forty of its officers, friends and members assembled—by means of steam cars, carriages and on foot, where a bountiful repast was spread on its improvised tables, to which all were seated on chairs, stools, or on the grass, the relish of which was spiced with mirth, repartee and conversation, followed by a delightful social time, wandering in the adjacent pastures gathering wild flowers, and listening to the glad harmonies of the feathered songsters.

In the mid-afternoon the assembly was called to order by President D. C. McDougall, who gave a very excellent address, giving facts in the experiences of the Fox Sisters, in the early days when their opposers, together with earnest investigators, including learned scientists, visited them to learn the meaning of the tiny raps—if they had a meaning—and the decision that gave to the world the assurance that they were innocent of fraud.

Mr. Booth made some excellent remarks upon the practical needs of a society, and gave suggestions as to the means of supplying them—first, the essential power of finances and the talent to be engaged, both for the exposition of our philosophy and its demonstration by honest mediums.

Mr. Hammond alone gave a brief address and some messages.

Mr. Church, who has several times addressed the society, most acceptably gave a fine comparison of the various religions of the present day, noting the elements of success and of failure.

His stirring appeal for organization, brains and piety, or spirituality, as the essentials of success, was presented in an impressive and enthusiastic manner.

All expressed themselves with delight in the enjoyment of the hospitality of our hostess, and the ideal day, with its feast of reason and flow of soul."

The Transition of Charles F. Baade, of Detroit, Mich.

To the Editor:—With your kind permission, I will write regarding the funeral of the late Charles F. Baade, husband of Rev. Nellie S. Baade, Spiritualist speaker and medium of this city.

When Mr. Baade was taken ill last October, he realized he could not recover, and requested his wife to conduct the funeral services over his remains.

The parlors were packed to the doors, and hundreds of the friends who came to pay the last sad tribute of respect, blocked the street, and were unable to gain entrance.

The wonder was, how this little woman, who for months had scarcely left his bedside, like a ministering spirit anticipating his every wish as he had become helpless and speechless, and burdened down with anxiety and sorrow could fulfill his wish.

We almost doubted it, but when she, under the influence of the spirit, arose to speak, her face illuminated with ineffable sweetness, the vast audience sat spell-bound as the invisibles gave utterance to the loftiest sentiments and highest ideas it was ever our pleasure to listen to.

Many relatives and friends from their former home, Capac, Mich., were in attendance, some listening for the first time to a spiritual speaker, and afterwards declared it a masterly address, one never to be forgotten.

Every Spiritual society in the city was represented, and the floral offerings were many and beautiful, attesting the esteem in which Mr. Baade was held by the many friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Baade came to Detroit fifteen years ago, and started in business upon a comparatively small capital, but by earnest effort, honesty and integrity of character, they built up one of the finest businesses in this city, to be carried on in the future by their only son, Frank.

Thus ends the last chapter in the life of a man earnest in his convictions of right, and one of whom it can be said, he did his best.

The funeral was in charge of Ingersoll Encampment No. 29, I. O. O. F. The pall-bearers were selected from among the lodge members. Interment was at Woodmere cemetery, they conducting their service at the grave, after which Mrs. Baade followed with benediction.

Mrs. Baade will continue her spiritual work in the future as in the past, with the best wishes of her many friends here as elsewhere, knowing if faithful in the discharge of every duty there shall be a reunion of souls in the sweet sometime.

As a sincere friend of the family, we pay this last sad tribute of love and respect.

APPRECIATES THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

It Brings One in Touch With Occult Matters All Over the World.

To the Editor:—If you could know the keen disappointment I feel every Wednesday evening at 10 o'clock when the postman's ring no longer means that The Progressive Thinker is in the hall, you would change the address you now have on the mailing list to my own, and thereby give me the ever welcome paper on Wednesday instead of Saturday, as I get it now if it is forwarded.

The Progressive Thinker always brings a closer touch with the work of the cause everywhere, and Lily Dale keeps within our vision through Mrs. Fixen's admirably written articles. Even far-away Hague is almost at our doors, for it was my privilege to be five weeks there during the first Peace Conference, and to be one of the guests of the United States delegates when they celebrated the Fourth of July in Holland, July 4, 1899.

That day stands out pre-eminent in memory. To be present when 600 Hollanders sang in English, "My country, 'tis of Thee," and see the representatives of twenty-six nations do honor to the Star Spangled Banner, was indeed a privilege.

The paper of July 27, which came to hand last evening with its account of the doings at the Hague at the present time, brings it all back as if it were yesterday. Mr. Stead was there then, and every day was a day of education.

My letter is drifting far from home, yet the same issue tells of our home association. Reverently and tenderly the name, "First Association of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, the oldest society of Spiritualists, always is said by me. We are very proud to have at the helm again our dear Captain Keffer, the veteran, 82 years young. A pleasing reception was accorded at the Temple, June 9, 1907, to father B. B. Hill, 77 years of age, and before the echoes died away the rousing cheers reminded us that Capt. Keffer was 82 on June 27, so we made his heart glad. As for Mr. Thompson, no words can do justice to his work.

SPIRITS WARN HIM.

Ottawa Man Says He Had a Mysterious Call—"Go Home," the Spirit Said, and Then a Heavy Scaffolding Fell—Where He Had Recently Been Standing.

A strange Spiritualist outcry comes this week from the Methodist town of Baldwin. There lives in that town a retired preacher—Methodist, of course—whose brother is Ezra Carpenter, the prominent Spiritualist. The other day the Ottawa man went up to visit his preacher brother and the latter told him the story. Some days ago, according to the story told, the preacher was at a place where a new house was being built. He stood directly under a big heavy scaffolding. As he stood there he heard a voice saying to him in low tones, "Go home."

He was startled, and did not move. An instant later and the voice came quick and sharp, "Go home." He, startled though he was, started. He went fast, rather firm in the belief that something had happened, that his wife needed him or that the house was on fire, or that something of some nature was happening there that demanded his immediate presence. He rushed home and found everything all right. He went all around the premises and found nothing wrong. When he decided to go back to the scene of the building operations. When he got there he found that the great scaffolding had fallen and struck the spot where he stood. The fall occurred a minute after he left. When the Ottawa brother was about to leave, the Baldwin brother took him aside and stated that he believed the voice was that of a brother, who died a few years ago.—Ottawa, Kansas, Herald.

Mrs. Martha Woolsey in Philadelphia.

How time flies, here it is July 29, and still I'm sitting by the bedside of a sick husband. But thanks to the angel world for manifold blessings, he is on the way to recovery.

The Odd Fellows of Merchants Lodge have been very devoted in their attention, and we have been also well looked after by Threasea Rebekah Lodge, I. O. O. F. I have been staying with old friends who are staunch Episcopalians, and I hear nothing but creeds and long prayers. Oh! how my hungry soul longed for the beautiful spiritual philosophy.

I found out by the papers the location of the Temple, and attended the last service of the season, and oh, how I enjoyed the short time in that well-filled Temple, filled to overflowing on that warm Sunday evening. G. Tabor Thompson was the speaker, and he gave an able discourse. Mrs Holler was the medium, and she gave many beautiful messages, your humble servant included, and the song service was soul-inspiring. Songs were mostly written by G. Tabor Thompson, and singing led by him, in which all joined, and you could feel the spiritual influence all around you.

I have still great hopes of remaining here until after the Convention in Washington, and if Mr. Woolsey gets strong enough I shall remain, as he is anxious for me to stay while he goes home, if he is able to travel alone. This city is the wonder, there are so many historical places, Independence Hall, the principal one, where stands Liberty bell that pealed forth in sonorous tones that we were free. Having done its duty well, it still holds a place in the hearts of all true Americans, to be viewed year after year, in the same old place. Then next in age is Betsy Ross' home where the first American flag was made that has been bought, and will soon stand alone, a lasting memorial to her who, with deft fingers stitch by stitch made the beautiful stars and stripes, emblem of our liberty.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

LILY DALE CAMP.

A Vivacious Account of Various Doings at the Noted Eastern Camp.

If in the great final "round-up" any small soul should slip through the divine screen and be found out as chaff, let us not forget that chaff as well as wheat, is a component part in divine economy.

What is chaff, anyhow? Perhaps, after all, it fills as great a need and as fully its own place, as does the largest kernel of corn that ever went into the making of pork, johnny cake or whisky.

Even so, all at Lily Dale "belong," from John T. Lillie, our many-sided, suave chairman, very useful, very ornamental, very much beloved, who keeps us all in order, to Graham Turner, our Superintendent, who keeps our grounds in order, making the auditorium neater and the streets cleaner, than any of the 350 sister assemblies in the United States—indeed they come nearest in appearance to the streets of the celestial city, as described by the vivid imaginations of the most select and foreordained of ages past.

Our people are the jewels, and their kind words and kinder thoughts the milk and honey, overflowing our streets, making Lily Dale a true Heaven on earth, for those who remembered to take their Paradise right with them, when they packed up their baggage to come here.

The interest is daily increasing, with the attendance, each audience is larger than the previous one, and each lecture seems the best. There is a spirit of harmony and peace, which broods over the place, bespeaking blessings falling upon the individual such as man cannot give—nor take away.

We seem to be getting back to the old ideas in the minds of the founders of this famous spot, when they plodded and prayed and gave their utmost all, to make Lily Dale a centre where thousands of hungry souls might be fed, clearing away the mists, that the beautiful new day might begin in the lives of generations and generations to come, a long day without a twilight, reading beyond the veil—even forever.

As the child is the foundation for our hope for coming generations, and remembering that here we get our choicest recruits, we pay special attention to the work for the children.

Our Lyceum is our pride, and its leader one of our ablest workers. Mrs. Amelia Peterson of Grand Rapids, Mich., has for the best part of 12 years, conducted this branch of our work. Library Hall is set apart for their use. About 60 children meet here, at 10 o'clock in the morning, with seven teachers. The elementary teachings of Spiritualism are sown, after the fertile soil of the minds of little children has been spaded and raked by music and singing, ready to receive suitable seed. The Britton system of teaching is used, enlivened with suitable diversions in the way of exercises.

On Friday morning the Assembly belongs to the children. The Band plays for them, heading a procession of coming voters, as the boys and girls, decorated with badges and buttons, and carrying flags, parade the grounds, receiving the cheers of everybody on their way, as with waving of handkerchiefs and encouraging smiles, they finally enter the Auditorium, which is reserved for them for that morning, and here most interesting services occupy the time until noon.

During the season they give two evening entertainments which are always among the best patronized of the season; and on August 20, they have their masquerade, when they dance for two hours, after which the grown-ups are permitted to join, and trip the light fantastic to the music of the Orchestra or their own beating heart, whichever music they hear plainest, and dance best by.

The lectures are continuing of an unusual high order. Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Thomas Grimshaw and Tillie U. Reynolds gave us as fine addresses as have ever been heard from our platform.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow is with us now and her lectures are to the bulwark of prejudice, what rapid-firing guns are to-day as against the peppershots of the old-time flintlock gun of yesterday. She fires truth at you so rapidly, you catch and catch your breath, till you forget you are breathing at all, you are lost in the mystic maze of the possibilities of the future, when all men shall be on a higher plane, and when justice and equality shall take the place of money and oppression.

Miss Harlow is indeed the Joan D' Arc of justice in the economics of the nation. She depicts the gross injustice done the toilers of her own sex and pleads for the child in the factory to get a fair chance in life, not only because it is the humane thing to do to the individuals, but because as a nation it is the way to the prosperity and happiness of all its citizens.

The Hon. Wendell C. Warner came to us spick and span as to dress and address. His words were as flowery and his sentences as finished as would gladden the heart of any artist; they poured from him as smooth and easy as water from our ever-flowing fountain. We could but admire the softness of texture and beautiful finish, and while the logic of all might not be as sound as it will be when our friend is more seasoned in the fine art of hard thinking and unrefutable argument, he certainly did say many, very many beautiful things, and gave good counsel, enough to make all his hearers and their children and grandchildren happy, and make this world an ideal place to live, would they but follow his advice. After all, he greatly pleased the large majority of his hearers, as was testified by the generous applause he received.

Perhaps the best evidences of the advance in thought and greater harmony prevailing, is shown by the change in names and purposes of two "free for all" societies which for years have held sway in the porch of the MaplewoodHotel. On the extreme east corner men smoked and gossiped, and every puff was flavored with his opinion of his neighbor and neighboress. This corner, the terror of evil doers and everybody else, was called "The Knocker's Corner." On the west side gentle sisters with sharp tongues bored into the backs of their sisters until they drew pain and bad feelings. This corner was named "The Gossip Corner," by the men who never gossip themselves, heaven forbid, they simply talk.

This year the Knocker's Corner is changed to "The Philosopher's Corner," while the Gossip Corner is a thing of the past, and "The Ladies' Harmony Bunch," has pre-empted it and will prove up their claim.

Last week the Philosopher's Corner had their great ado. With bugle blast and loud noise they marched through the grounds to the Auditorium to hold their first great conclave. The subject, "Is the Universe a Result of Design?" was propounded by Eber Bond, the sage of Lake Helen, and Messrs. Grimshaw, Lockwood, J. Clegg Wright, Bond, Steerman and other philosophers exchanged wit and wisdom and incidentally the Debt Fund was reduced $34.50 by this meeting.

Of course The Ladies' Harmony Bunch must outshine the Philosophers, and on the following Monday in finest fur and feathers they sallied forth. What didn't they say and do—every foolish, nonsensical thing that ever shocked and gladdened the heart of a real Philosopher—as well as the unwashed.

Mrs. M. J. Stephens of Washington, and Mrs E. L. Nicholson of San Diego were found guilty of hatching out this "ugly duckling." The audience was bent with laughter, tears trickling down their cheeks over the 7 in the Rehearsal on the stage, who appeared not to see the audience, and talked and acted as if they were at home alone giving free opinions and dealing broad puns out at the expense of the elect—while Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds had arranged eleven girls of 12 and less, who, kneeling with a curtain reaching to their chins, recited, "Mary Had a Little Lamb," after which they lifted their arms, decked with stockings and shoes, high above their heads swinging them, until it looked as if it really were their—gracious me, I can't say it.

The audience was shocked dreadfully, and convulsed with laughter.

At the close of the entertainment, called the finest Lily Dale has had for 20 years, the 250 adjourned to the Maplewood, where the ladies served lunch.

The financial results tallied $54.25 to the good. And thus do we beguile the time this summer at Lily Dale.

LAURA G. FIXEN.

Central New York Camp.

The camp opened on July 19, with a goodly gathering. Sunday was a beautiful day, and the grove was delightful. Nature was at its best.

The morning service opened with an address of welcome by President, W. W. Kelsey.

After a song by Mrs. Herrick and Prof. Stevens, which was soul inspiring and an invocation by Mrs D. A. Morrill, and song by congregation, a lecture given by D. A. Herrick, which was grand.

After having dinner on ground, the afternoon lecture was given by Mrs. D. A. Morrill, which did the lady credit, concluding with tests, which were all recognized.

After the services we repaired to a new cottage and dedicated it to the Cause.

Evening.—A seance (trumpet) D. A. Herrick, medium, which was a success, in our new seance building. Everything went to make it a glorious day long to be remembered.

The coming Sunday, August 4, there will be a baptism after the morning lecture by D. A. Herrick, and afternoon lecture by Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue, with Messages. Lectures every day with tests, etc.

Come and visit our beautiful camp. Every honest investigator welcome.

MRS. JENNIE McNIEL.

Lake Pleasant, Mass., Camp.

The camp meeting is fairly under way, with most interesting conferences and lectures.

Vice-President Wm W. Lee is making a grand success of the conferences, and his enthusiasm is apparently contagious, for there is no lack of speakers or thought.

Hon. A. H. Dailey gave a splendid discourse on opening Sunday, and the singing of Miss Edna Shepard is a feature of the services.

The Lake Pleasant Quartette, composed of Wm. Critchley, Frank C. Bryant, Mrs. M. L. Sanger and Mrs. Wightman, also assist with vocal music.

Mrs. Lida Hart of Springfield, Mass., rendered two solos at the services Sunday, which were a treat for the music lovers. The lecture and message work of Nettie Holt Harding was good, and Mrs. Alice M. Whall gave excellent satisfaction as test medium. Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, who spoke and gave tests last Sunday morning, sustained her reputation as one of our ablest platform workers, and the lecture of the writer, delivered in the afternoon, pleased a large audience.

Whist parties, entertainments and dancing parties afford excellent opportunities of enjoyment in the social life of the camp.

The program of the Bryant concert given Friday evening was most excellent and highly entertaining.

The engagement of Geo. W. Kates and Mrs. Z. B. Kates commences next week, and will attract good attendance, as they are very popular here.

Mrs. May Pepper-Vanderbilt gives her first seance Sunday, August 11, and Edgar W. Emerson arrives the following week, working in conjunction with J. Clegg Wright.

Ample accommodations are afforded by the two hotels and numerous boarding houses for all who visit the camp.

Carrie E. S. Twing, Mr. and Mrs. Kates and May S. Pepper-Vanderbilt will occupy our platform during the week, commencing August 5.

Our Lyceum is being held regularly with George Cleveland as conductor.

ALBERT P. BLINN, Sec'y.

Chesterfield Camp Doing Finely.

To the Editor:—Chesterfield camp is in the best of condition, but one or two cottages unoccupied, and many people at the hotel. The President is stringent in enforcing his rules in regard to behavior, drinking, and management of business affairs.

Our election on the 29th of August, was as quiet as a Quaker meeting, Everyone elected by acclamation—no opposition!

The official board is as follows: President, Tom. O'Neil, Indianapolis; vice-president, Henry Bronnenberg, Chesterfield; secretary, Lemuel Waters, Hartford City; treasurer, Z. T. Mong, Muncie; trustees, W. D. Wattles, S. J. Loiso, G. W. Schepman, Joseph Keicher, Mrs. R. L. McKee, and Michael Bronnenberg.

All the old officers re-elected except two, who declined to serve longer.

The convention adjourned to meet again on the 30th of August, to hear reports of finance, also on revision of Constitution.

The two lectures of Mr. Thomas Grimshaw were well received and pleased the people. E. W. Sprague and wife are here doing excellent work.

I look forward to a successful pleasant and quiet camp meeting.

The leaven is beginning to work which will bring about a new system, and I believe a great meeting in the near future.

OUR CHILDREN.

Hints From Practical Experience for Parents and Teachers.—By Paul Carus.

In this little book "Our Children," Paul Carus offers a unique contribution to pedagogical literature. Without any theoretical pretensions it is a strong defense for the rights of the child, dealing with the responsibilities of parenthood, and with the first inculcation of fundamental ethics in the child mind and the true principles of correction and guidance. Each detail is forcefully illustrated by informal incidents from the author's experience with his own children, and his suggestions will prove of the greatest possible value to young mothers and kindergartners. Hints as to the first acquaintance with all branches of knowledge are touched upon—mathematics, natural sciences, foreign languages, etc.—and practical wisdom in regard to the treatment of money, hygiene and similar problems. 207 Pages. Journeys to the Planet Mars

Or, Our Mission to Ento (Mars)

A Narrative by Sara Weiss, Illustrated With Thirteen Original Drawings by the Authoress.

This strangely attractive narrative does not assume to be either scientific, philosophic, or as advancing any special religious creed. From the standpoint of Spiritualists this is a most interesting book, as Mrs. Weiss actually took these journeys in spirit and has given them in all sincerity, to the world. The book is uplifting and full of beautiful thoughts. 548 pages. Price $1.50.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 17, 1907 NO. 925

Items of Interest From Los Angeles, Cal.

The Progressive Thinker of the 29th of June arrived on this Sunday morning, and the first thing I turned to the article of Prof. Edgar Larkin, telling, incidentally, about a wonderful book—the most remarkable in the world; only one other book its equal—the New Testament.

I immediately rushed around to the address given to find that book—Mrs. Mary Oliver, 415 N. Fremont Street, Room 11, Los Angeles, and to find out all about it. I found a poor woman, somewhat aged, living in rented rooms; she was selling the book. I asked her to tell me its history. She said:

"My son at the age of 18 began writing the book, and completed it at 20. He never was a medium, in our sense of the words; probably never faced a medium in his life. He was influenced in the higher order of mediumship described in the "Great Work," and works of that nature, as ordained to do a certain work. Sometimes he could see Philos, the Thibetan; generally not. He was merely an amanuensis of what he was told. He never saw but this one person in all the book. He was told that it was not yet time to give the book to the world. Some few things had got to come before the world, such as X-rays and wireless telegraphy, before the world would accept it. They were not to present the book to the world before the first few years of the new century. It was written about '86 to '90. The writer lived to the age of 33, and then passed out of some kind of "anemia," which Phylos had nearly cured him of, when he took some medicine from the wrong bottle by mistake and it killed him."

The poor lady and son had a hard time trying to find a publisher. They sent the manuscript to New York, only to be fooled by a publisher who kept it one year. Phylos had told her that all these things would happen, but to be of good cheer, the book would come before the world when the world was ready to receive it. So, one day a lady friend came to see her with good news. She said: "A person or persons are going to put up the money to publish your book, but you must never inquire who it is as long as you live, nor do I know at this moment," she says, "who is putting up the money."

I immediately bought a copy, price $2.00, and began its perusal. I can say Prof. Larkin has not overstated the matter. It is easily the greatest book in all Spiritualism, and will be a coming sensation to the readers and thinkers of the world. No library, great or small, can afford to be without it, and the highest thought of the ages is there. This is the coming book which will be the sensation of the world, and buyers will come from Europe, Asia and Africa, as well as America, for it is the forefront of the greatest knowledge the world has ever known.

When I read the "Arcana" of Hudson Tuttle, and the Protista, telling about the unseen forces, upon which civilization is built, I thought we had reached the limit of knowledge, which man ought to know; but here we are brought face to face with mightier forces than the Protista could indicate.

This is a book that the Bible people will accept, hence all will be ready for the new wave which the book will create. It will come like Darwin's book on the Origin of the Species, or Evolution, to set all men to talking on the new forces.

But before closing my short letter, I want to say something about a work I am engaged in. I don't care to speak about it, only incidentally at this time. What I want to say is, I have been many times in conversation with Prof. Wm. Denton and Yama of Atlantis for the past seven years, in the fulfillment of this work, and some of the notable things I have received from them will be of interest to your readers. Mr. Denton told me once that the highest mentality that comes to earth, comes through the organism of Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond; that this had been so since she was a child of twelve years, but that it never improves one particle—always the same.

He told me that the home circle would ever remain the truest exponent of spirit power.

I asked him to untangle the Shakspeare business for me. He said:

"Don't you see me talking through the mouth of this woman? Don't you see she has not the intelligence I give off to you? Well, just so was Shakspeare produced. Many minds of previous generations produced Shakspeare. He was only the medium, and nobody can tell anything about what Shakspeare was, which accounts for the impersonal character of the writing."

Question: "Tell me, does the mosquito produce malarial and yellow fever?"

"Yes; so do all water bugs around swampy places carry the germs to man."

"Who were the 'Mound Builders' of our country—say in Ohio and other places?"

"They were the race that preceded the Indians, and much of their blood is still around our Southern coasts."

"Was the great Desert of Sahara ever inhabited?"

"No, not any more than it is now. The chemical conditions were always the same."

"Can you explain the principle of the Water Witch?"

"The Astrologs on this side of life tell me that the moon is the water planet, and that it influences all bodies of water on the earth. When the moon has drawn all the water from the oceans, down to the springs to the farthest side of the earth, the person that is born at that time, when the influence is the strongest, said person has the power to find water by means of a stick, even telling the number of feet from the surface; also the number of inches in the vein."

"Will you tell me about the deposits of nitre near Death Valley, in Nevada?"

"They are only half as extensive and half as valuable as those in Chili. They have a base mineral in them, which they have not found yet how to eliminate. They will find out all about it in a few years. They will then become a source of immense wealth."

I will here state that Death Valley is becoming one of the wonders of the world in its stores of mineral wealth. There are the copper deposits, the borax, the nitre, the gold, the soda, and many other minerals, Goldfield alone producing fifteen millions in 1906.

I asked Mr. Denton about the Pyramids of Egypt. He said:

"I have only history for it, the same as you have, but I will give you my impressions so far as I can get it on this side of life. The race which built those Pyramids supposed that a great calamity was coming over their race and nation, and they would leave a monument to future times that they had lived. Those Pyramids are hollow, and hold their records, as well as the mysteries of life."

"Were they not used for the purpose of divining or astronomical calculations?"

"Not so much as you think."

The next question is a great one. I give it to you just as I got it, as follows:

The city of Los Angeles is about to build an aqueduct of 250 miles in length from Mt. Whitney, the highest mountain in the United States, 16,000 feet in height, to cost twenty-three millions—a herculean work for a city of only 285,000 in population. I laid the matter before Mr. Denton, and asked if it were not possible to find a vein of water in the mountains close by which had its origin in the high Sierras, say 1,000 miles away. He said:

"I will look up the matter and let you know."

Three weeks later I was called up to listen, and he said:

"There is water for five cities like Los Angeles in its vicinity, if they only understood Psychic laws. Now, if you ever get fixed so you can handle it, I will show you where you can drive a tunnel into the adjacent mountains and strike a splendid canal of pure water."

The one great and remarkable thing that Mr. Denton had to tell me was that we are living in an age when discovery of Thought as Power is the "Second Coming of Christ," or rather it is the Philosopher's Stone which all ages have sought, and will work wonders; that thought has built our bodies, has moulded all forms of matter, has built these mountains and the universe.

I asked him once to tell me about his wife, who helped him produce that great work, the Soul of Things. He bade me cease; that I was trenching upon holy ground, and to go no farther.

And now comes the greatest part of my story—my connection with Yama, of the lost Atlantis. "How did I come to get acquainted with Yama? I wrote a letter to Mr. B. F. Poole, the spectacle man of Chicago, for a pair of spec's. He is controlled by Yama for this kind of work. I asked him if he could not give me some help in my work. Back came a typewritten message from Yama, telling me to go to the nearest medium and he would be there to advise. There was no medium then in the town where I was, but I waited for some weeks, when a flying medium came along, and I went down to find out about it. As luck would have it, the medium was a highly developed one, and Yama was there to meet me, and he told me all about my business, and gave me extraordinary advice. That was some years ago. I have had many messages from Yama through five different mediums, all true. I give a synopsis of some of these talks:

"Tell me, Yama, who you are and what do you propose to do?"

"I am Yama, of the lost Atlantis, and lived on earth not quite 21,000 years ago."

"What have you been doing all this time since you left the earth plane?"

"Been impressing you mortals. If it were not for us spirits impressing you mortals, you would soon relapse into barbarism; just the same as you mortals have to look after your children to the age of puberty, just so we have to look after you."

"What caused the destruction of Atlantis?" He answered slowly and solemnly: "Life and all the elements which go to make life were burned out."

I asked him if Copan and Palenque, of Yucatan, were parts of Atlantis. He replied: "Aye, aye, you have spoken it, sir. There, you see, life was burned out to begin again in some spot of land emerging above the ocean—a new process of evolution."

"Was Atlantis a chain of islands, or a continent?"

"What is your earth but a chain of islands set in the midst of the ocean?"

"What is the cause of earthquakes?"

"Decayed vegetable matter enters the earth by means of the infiltration of water; it there forms a gas, which expands, and must find a vent at the surface of the earth, producing concussion."

"What is a volcano?"

"The escaping gases of the vegetable matter to the earth's surface. Strike a flint, perhaps a second flint, setting them on fire, and there you have a volcano or subterranean fire."

"Is materialization true?"

"It is certainly true."

He went into a long explanation, winding up by saying that it was by the manipulation of the astral body that materialization was produced, and that the astral body of this medium at this moment stands behind your chair.

"Is spirit photography true?"

"No. The picture of a face upon the window pane, or the shadow upon the wall or floor, of either a face or writing is true; so, also, a pencil and paper sketch of a person is true, but the photograph of a spirit is false."

I forgot to state that Yama corrected me five or six times about his name. Said it was not Yermah, nor Yarma, but simply Yama. He told me that he proposed to write a book about Atlantis, telling its topography and geography, and all about its people.

I found out from another spirit of prominence that Yama was one of five of the guiding, guarding and controlling spirits of this planet. The last time I heard Yama in a beautiful speech, I asked many questions. He concluded by saying that he would yet make the United States Senate tremble for the false gods they had set up to worship, and erecting of an ideal which would destroy this nation if they were not checked.

SPIRITUAL POINTERS.

They Lead the Way to Higher Development and More Generous Impulses—Impressive Thoughts That Lead Into the Higher Spiritual Realms.

Isaac Watts enjoined us to "let the bears and lions growl and fight, for 'tis their nature to." Growling and fighting their nature, these wild brutes are lonely nomads living here an isolated pair and there an isolated pair, the Wandering Jews of animaldom. It is only the gentler beasts, peaceable, social, mutually helpful, that have inherited the earth; the horses and cattle which herd together in days of danger; the monkeys that combine in hordes for their stealing and exploring expeditions, the ants that live in amiable civilizations, the bees that work in colonies, the birds that fly in flocks are the populous, prosperous animal races.

The society leaders, pre-eminently in the feathery-leisure classes, are the cranes. They are at peace with all birds, with nearly all beings, and beguile away their delightful days with dainty diversions unimaginable and impossible to beasts which are forever grimly on the chase, busied with the grosser struggles for existence.

Like animal, like man. People thrive materially and morally in proportion as they renounce their wars and rivalries and co-operate with and for their brethren. Primeval and primitive man was unsociable and drew swords, or clubs, with everyone, his immediate kin on occasion excepted. Later he made truce with his family, then with his clan as the family ramified and clung together in larger groups to battle bigger hosts. Clans united into tribes, tribes finally into nations.

"United we stand; divided we fall." We have appreciated this as nations and eluded civil warfare, and promoted the piping prosperities of domestic peace. We are learning it as a world. Passes war, a barbarism. Passes patriotism, a primeval ideal. The newer civilization champions the cause of all the race, of every tribe and nation. This out of economic compulsion. Some teach that our engines of war are becoming too dire. Some teach that war is waxing too costly for our waging. Others, like Prof. William James, points the path to universal disarmament through a mutual decline in murderous instinct. Our martial spirit will express itself, is already expressing through conquests of disease, poverty, and material obstacles and through other profitable pursuits.

The need for war, with sword and cannon, and torpedo is obsolete. We have outgrown these gory and extravagantly destructive machines. Force therewith expended is wasted. We weep for higher worlds to conquer. We go forth usefully, bent not on destroying the world of men but on their upbuilding and uplifting.

Probably there always have been among the favored a few who were pitcous of the poor. And after many incarnations of fruitless and bootless philanthropies they are adopting fundamental curatives, relinquishing their charitable soothing sirups. The physicians lavish less pains than of yore on pounds of cure. Calamitous experience sadly has demonstrated the better way of prevention. They and the philanthropists are reinforced by a zealous public which musters like an army to battle world-wide common foes of genus homo.

The new note is co-operation. Today we are for unity. We are unifying in language, customs, industries, economics, governments. Caste and class barriers are burning away. Hitherto our motive forces have been jealousies. Some wiseacres in a university has studied jealousy in detail. It runs no higher among individuals than with states and nations. Commerce, governments are founded on jealous rivalries. Wherever there is competition—and there is competition in warp and woof of the social fabric—there is jealousy also.

But the sovereignty of jealousy is waning as the co-operative spirit strengthens, as nation no longer can be pitted against nation nor class against class, but all must unite for a mutual weal. Already are afoot movements and sentiments which realize that the utilities of the present social orders are declining and that for future necessities and circumstances there must be a more intimately co-operative regime.

Visit an anthropologist like Prof. Homes of Washington, look at his chart and see the home coming of the nations under one stupendous family roof-tree. In the early days of ansocial strife they left the little halls of their ancestral fathers in Asia, ramified in many directions, roamed each his own way, gathered his own experiences, and now will return, already are on the homeward path, bringing their sheaves with them, to merge again into a reunited, homogeneous household. When that has been consummated, the finest human workmanship will begin, human history will begin, the real man will be born.

The argument carries to life's subtler phases where it urges heed. Hate, Prof. Elmer Gates of Washington demonstrates, is poison, the deadliest known to science. The chemical substances exuded in one hour of intense hatred would suffice probably to kill four score persons. Other base emotions engender proportionate poisons. Just as we are laying aside our engines of war for the peaceful implements of a prosperity greater than war can bring forth, so we will relinquish the passions of hate, fear, anger, jealousy, and their fatal ptomaines in favor the elixirs of the nobler emotions, faith, hope, and love. We are finding that war does us destruction and cannot be waged for peril of the race. Hate is war, separateness on higher planes. And as our unity strengthens, waxes more intimate and intricate, we shall find that hate and all its mental and moral progeny prove perilous and must yield to love in love's myriad phases.

Those who see the colors of our voices and have forms for our mental operations say that thoughts are things and go whithersoever we send them. As men's energies are expended more and more on the higher planes and less and less on the physical, we shall be sensible of a need for an increasing fraternity and good will of thought. Wars with words must cease like wars with swords. Thought must be interpreted, human control,

ILLINOIS STATE ASSOCIATION.

Many and Diverse Reasons Why All Spiritualist Societies Should Become Auxiliary Thereto.

There are many and diverse reasons for every society, private or regularly organized, becoming auxiliary to the State Association—in every state having such Association.

In this article I do not wish to be understood as meaning the Illinois State Association alone, for what will hold good in this state will hold good in every state having an association. The reader will take the language here used in its broadest sense, and not in any narrowness whatever.

In the first place Spiritualism, as a mere infant, and with the great and seriously complicated struggle it has ever had, both within and without the scattered and disunited ranks, needs strength, and "in union there is strength." We should be united.

We all believe in spirit return and communication.

We all believe in eternal progress, and evolution.

We know there is no death, and that so-called death is but a change of spheres.

We are all united upon the vital truths underlying Spiritualism, and should be united, organized into one grand army of workers for the propagation of the truth that is its foundation.

The Illinois State Association holds no meetings, except its annual, and sometimes a semi-annual, and interferes with no society's progress, and instead its president and others of its board of executives have spoken for independent societies, and all are willing to aid in any manner in the upbuilding of even private societies, for we well know that every society has its patrons, its investigators, and finally its Spiritualist adherents, and they are our brothers and sisters.

This same condition prevails in all other states, just the same.

It takes away no independence of a society to become auxiliary to the State Association, but rather gives it prestige and a more free and perhaps a more welcome aid from the officers, who are without prejudice, except for the whole Cause.

Because the leaders and workers of a society have a personal aspiration or ambition doesn't make it necessary for the State Association to hold envy or jealousy. When we stoop to that we are not true Spiritualists; we are not true brothers and sisters in a common Cause.

Largeness is one of he highest attainments of the human mind and soul, and grow small toward those who grow small toward us is a mark of deterioration, retrogression.

Everyone wishing to form a society is privileged to do so by complying with the State laws, and if it be from a selfish, personal ambition, we have nothing to say whatever; nothing to throw in the way. Personal ambition is all right; it is the lever of success if rightly used, but with a deep and miserly degree of selfishness it is a hindrance to progress and a poor excuse or bid for public patronage.

One can be miserly in his Spiritualism, but he cannot make Spiritualism a narrow and miserly institution for his own personal aggrandizement or amusement.

This is no thrust at anyone. It is only a common fact expressed without frills or poetic coloring. If the shoe doesn't fit don't wear it nor try to make it fit your neighbor.

Our good Brother Demby, founder and President of the Church of Progressive Spiritualists (an organization of nearly or quite a hundred colored people) knows the virtue of solidifying our ranks and has applied for a charter for that society of this city.

Who will be the next? Let us unite under one banner, and be prepared to do something for the Cause "with a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether."

T. WILKINS, Sec'y.

Message From Captain Doran.

This evening at six o'clock I sat at my table with pencil and paper, as has been my usual custom for the past six weeks. Soon a spirit came and took control of my hand and wrote the following lines:

"I am Captain Doran. I went down with my ship (Columbia). I stood at my post of duty like a man, and by so doing a much smaller proportion of the passengers were lost than would have been otherwise. I was not brave, as the newspaper would have it appear. It was in great fear, and trembling that I remained at my post, and I went down to my death in great agony. I lost my life, but have gained eternal glory. I am but a simple seafaring man, and dear to me are the earth ties.

"The papers have said that I used slang—not so. As near as I can recollect I called out these words: 'Boys, I did all I could for you. I can do no more. She's a goner. Good by!' These were the words I spoke standing at Death's Door, when I knew that we were goners.

"Friends, I awoke here, all past errors and short-comings forgiven. Greater love hath no man than he that lays down his life for his neighbor. Oh! the glorious rapture, the perfect peace of this life here! Glad, glad I am to be here. No more fear, no more trembling, safe in the harbor at last. Tell all that I live again."

Conditions are obliging us to be good, better, to unite as brothers, not fight like foes nor separate like foreigners. We are attuning our lives to love and unity, to move toward the common destinies of men.

An Impressive Vision.

Illustrating Spirit Influence or the Wonderful Powers of the Human Soul—Mother, Dying in Omaha Locates Stolen Child in Denver, Where She is Found by Sister, as Related in the Rocky Mountain News of Denver, Colorado.

Searching through the children's homes of Colorado, in accordance with instructions received by her mother in a vision on her deathbed, Mrs. Francis Nelson of 800 Fourteenth street, found her long lost sister, Verdie Curtis, in the State home for dependent children in South Denver, last Saturday. The girl, who is now 15 years old, was kidnaped from her home in Omaha three years ago, and since that time her parents and members of her family have searched the length and breadth of the United States for her.

Mrs. Alonzo Curtis, her mother, died June 3, in St. Joseph's hospital, Omaha, of nervous prostration. Her family declare she died of a broken heart.

While on her deathbed, however, Mrs. Curtis declared that she saw her missing daughter in a home somewhere in Colorado. She afterwards declared the girl was in Denver. This vision, for such it apparently was, as Mrs. Curtis was then very ill and in a state of semi-coma, impressed itself upon her mind so firmly that she prevailed upon her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Nelson, to come to Colorado from Omaha to search for the girl.

A few days later Mrs. Curtis died, her last words expressing a desire to see Verdie. As she struggled feebly for breath at the last she murmured, "Verdie—Denver—find her there."

This dying statement was sent to Mrs. Nelson, who was then in Denver, and she made a round of the homes here, but without success.

Had Given Up Hope.

Mrs. Nelson had about given up all hope of finding the girl, and had come to believe that her mother's vision was but a dying hallucination, when she received word from her father in Omaha saying that he had paid a visit to a clairvoyant and that she had told him positively that his missing daughter was in Denver. Inspired by this news, Mrs. Nelson determined to make one more effort, and on Saturday of last week she again visited the home in South Denver.

Arriving there she told the matron that she was looking for a girl to adopt in place of a baby she had recently lost. Children at the home were playing in the yard and Mrs. Nelson went among them, speaking to them pleasantly, and all the time watching for the face of her dearly beloved sister.

Finally, far off in a corner of the yard she saw a pretty girl of 15 or thereabouts standing alone and watching her closely. One look was enough. Crying, "Verdie! Verdie! Verdie! don't you know me?" she rushed to the girl, threw her arms about her and was met with a joyous cry of recognition. The girl was Verdie Curtis.

Tears of joy and profuse explanations followed, with the matron as an interested listener.

Soon after the older sister left the institution, promising the girl that she would return for her. But there is much red tape to be unwound before one of the State's little charges can be removed from the home provided for them, and all Mrs. Nelson's explanations and pleadings have thus far proven vain, although Secretary Whitehead and District Attorney Stidger are investigating the claims by Mrs. Nelson, and the child will probably be turned over to her relatives in the near future.

Story of Wanderings.

Verdie's story of her wanderings and of the sufferings and brutalities she has endured since she last saw her home in Omaha is almost incredible.

In 1904, when she was kidnaped, she was a frequent visitor at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Parsons, who were neighbors of the Curtis family. The Parsons became much attached to her, and when they prepared to leave Omaha they asked that Verdie might be allowed to visit with them for a week before they went. Her parents gave the girl permission to do so and she visited happily with her friends for two or three days.

Then, on the fourth day of her stay the Parsons took her to the railroad station and induced her to go on a short trip with them. Unsuspectingly she accompanied them, and a day later found them in Pueblo.

For a time, Verdie says, everything went along nicely, although she often wished to go home. Then the Parsons began to quarrel and she was neglected. Finally Mr. Parsons placed her in a beet field, where she was obliged to work that she might earn some money for him. He took all she earned, and when she was ill, she declares, he beat her unmercifully.

Less than a year later Mr. and Mrs. Parsons separated and the little white slave was free, but was left to shift for herself. In her extremity she appealed to a Mrs. Crouch, who took pity on her and brought her to Denver and turned her over to the Humane Society. An effort was made to find the girl's parents, but when this failed she was put in the state home for dependent children.

Officials Interested.

Since Saturday the state officials have taken great interest in the case and an effort is being made to locate the Parsons. If this is accomplished District Attorney Stidger says he will endeavor to prosecute them for their inhuman treatment of the girl. The Omoha authorities are looking for the couple also, as they wish to prosecute the Parsons for kidnaping.

Mrs. Nelson said yesterday, in discussing the case, "My dear, dead mother's deathbed vision was real, after all. She finally succeeded in locating the girl, unconsciously, but not soon enough to do her any good.

"I cannot tell how happy I am that I have found my sister. The one thing that mars my pleasure is the fact that mamma cannot have the pleasure of seeing Verdie again in this world.

"We will get Verdie out of the home soon, and then she will have all the advantages we can give her. My father is not wealthy, by any means, but he has a little money of his own and he earns good wages. We will take good care of her to make up for the time she has been lost to us.

"If we can locate the Parsons we will prosecute them if it is possible to do so."

DOGMATISM.

Spiritual Culture Is Destined to Unite Spiritualists.

Spiritualism is not dogmatic, but some of its advocates are—innocently in many respects—and, strangely, not so much zeal as the early Covenanters were, but rather to their own acceptance or views of the matter.

Every thinker is capable of grasping so much of its immeasurable truth—some more, some less; none, all of it. But when we attempt to measure the whole by our own yardstick, we have reached our limit. Progress ceases where egotism begins.

A truth, or part of a truth, garlanded by egotism, however eloquently expressed or flowered by metaphor, is dogmatism.

Spiritualism does not admit any kind of circumscription. It has no limitation. Every book (with some exceptions, of course) is but an epistle to a circumscribed limit of students. It does not and cannot fit everybody. The author who expects this is a dogmatist; and if left to these authors, we would have sects innumerable in our ranks. Nay, we would have no ranks, but a deplorable doubling up of religion in the world.

The world has been troubled with too much religion already. It now demands common sense as a substitute, and many of our modern or up-to-date preachers are well aware of this, to judge by their independent way of expounding Christianity.

Theology is a back number, a mere matter of form, which many desire to see revised, and none wish to attack, its adherents lack the ability, and its opposers are in no hurry to have it altered. They are content to enjoy the popularity their "heresy" lends them.

Spiritualism stands in the same relation to the Church, but fortunately minus an accepted theological code.

Our books constitute our theology, and when backed by its authors (or were they all so) would very much tax the reasoning qualities of the novitiate studying Spiritualism from its philosophy exclusively.

Fortunately, there is enough of the phenomena left to lend the philosophy foundation, otherwise there would be chaos indeed. And fortunately the phenomena have no standing room for dogmatism. Jealousy is about the only thing that can creep in here, but that does not affect the facts themselves. That only keeps the blood in circulation among those who lack the broader principles to give it spiritual vigor.

Without the phenomena, therefore, there would be no just cause for Spiritualism as a world's redeemer or reformer. Its philosophy is only secondary, incidental, but a savior for all that. It prevents centralization under a Koran or an individual—a creedalized religion.

Spiritualism is also a religion, but not confined to a people or a nation, and as such it will remain as long as its phenomena last.

Of course we will get more books, but it required a lot of pamphleteering to make France a republic at the close of the 18th century. So it may require a lot of books or reading-matter in general to make Spiritualism acceptable to all the world. We are all writers in this great work, and even units may reach a definite understanding by-and-by.

Intellectual culture makes one of the American and the Chinese minister of state. There is a definite point of understanding between them. Neither can browbeat the other. They became a composite unity. In like manner spiritual culture is destined to unite Spiritualists. Whether they attain it through the same schooling or not, is indifferent. They will get there, just the same. But dogmatism will not permit it. There is no dogmatism in general education. If there were, the American and Chinese ministers would not feel on an equality with each other.

In religious education, however, there is a discrepancy. The "dog of a Christian," and the "Heathen Chinee" do not bespeak of much unity of souls. And Spiritualism is destined to obviate this discrepancy. Unity of souls in each life is its aim. But first, we need unity of minds or hearts—a condition only to be reached free from dogmatism.

YIELD NOT—HOPE ON.

Dark though the day, in the seeming,
Shrouded in folds of the night,
Scarcely discovered the gleaming
Of stars all obscured from the sight;
Tho' the deep darkness enfold thee,
In mantle of wearisome gloom,
Yield not to the fear that would hold thee,
A prisoner waiting his doom.
Yield not, yield not—never so dark be the way;
Hope on, hope on—gladness will come with the day.

Deep tho' the sadness and sorrow,
Pressing the anguish and pain,
Hope paint no brighter to-morrow,
And life seem all useless and vain;
Darkness without and within thee,
Crushing the life from the heart,
Naught of earth-brightness to win thee,
From sadness and sorrow apart,
Yield not, yield not—never so dark be the way;
Hope on, hope on—gladness will come with the day.

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds make ill deeds done.—King

Spirit Edgar A. Poe

Gives an Interesting Narrative of His Experience in Obsession, through Justin Hulburd, a Noted Medium.

Good morning, friend, spirit of Truth and eternal friendship, I enter Searchlight Bower to-day at the urgent invitation of Charlotte Cushman, my friend and benefactress while living in a physical body. The morning is dreary—so much the better for my communication. No doubt you wonder why the medium was not permitted to eat any breakfast this morning; that was my desire; the less he had in his stomach the clearer would be my comprehension of that which I had the power to convey to the reading public. Minds must be clear to give a proper understanding of their theme. The theme I shall present this morning is "Obsession," or demons revelling in the homes of unguarded and unprotected people.

When I lived in the physical body I was known to the reading public as Edgar Allen Poe; an individual that held a dreary nature, yet at the same time I was constituted with a vivacious streak in life; that condition made me a favorite in fashionable society. My poetical art gave me the entrance into all society.

Permit me to pay that proper adoration that belongs to my adopted parents. Two grander or finer souls were never incased in human habitation; their souls was that of purity, love and generosity on all occasions; they committed one great error, and that e@rror was allowing me too much pocket money. They gave it to me from the freedom of their hearts; it was a generous love that welled up for the boy they tried to make their son. It was their desire that I should become a manly man whose every thought should be that of honor. In my sane thoughts I always blessed them, as I now bless James Martin Peebles, the author of a book bearing the title "Obsession, or Demonism of the Ages." The blessings that come from the souls of spirits surely some day must make him a saint. One of the marks of sainthood is courage; the second is nobility of mind; the third is the freedom of the soul to work out an issue whereby groveling minds can receive the light of truth, and when once in their possession it will glorify into a voluminous light, as his writings have glorified the minds of the reading public.

After I had married a beautiful angel living in a physical body I made the discovery I WAS OBSESSED BY AN EVIL INFLUENCE, one that had been dogging my footsteps through life, and finally accomplished my ruin in a physical body. By many I was called the dreary poet, and broke my wife's heart. I became a frightful wreck of my past grandeur. Many of my poems were composed and written while under the influence of liquor—the worst demon of all ages. The first being that distilled liquor brought a great curse upon the human race. It will take ages to wipe it out and abolish that sin. I doubt whether it ever can be accomplished until the human race shall become thoroughly spiritualized.

The glorious philosophy of Spiritualism is the greatest college and holds the most perfect minds of men and women generated through the laws of nature. Nature has created one great law, and that is the expansion of the human mind—a vital truth that never can be blotted out. On many occasions, while living in a physical form, I was invited to read some of my poems, as I was looked upon as a good reader.

On one occasion while reading "The Raven," at a banker's home in New York, I noticed the eyes of his lovely daughter Lucille; they would glisten and shine as if fire was in them; they seemed to hold a fascination for me. When I had finished reciting the poem—for it was more of a recitation than reading—she came forward to where I stood and said in a rich, musical voice with a great deal of fascination behind it, "I love you, Edgar." It was such a surprise it frightened me. I would have left the room abruptly had it not been for her father catching hold of my arm at the same time saying, "Come with me, Mr. Poe, and I will explain all."

When we had entered another room across the hall, pointing to a sofa he said, "Be seated," sitting down alongside of me. I discovered there were tears in his eyes. He said: "Mr. Poe, my daughter is obsessed by some evil influence, and is not accountable for what she does or says while under that influence. I see to-night she is possessed by that wicked woman, whoever she may be. Do you believe, Mr. Poe, that beings living in a human body can curse other individuals by throwing a wicked spell upon them? My daughter visited the home of a classmate; when she returned to our arms we made the discovery our daughter was a physical wreck; there came with her an evil influence that swears in a dreadful manner. She abuses her mother in such a shameful way that I have to keep them apart. That strong, rawboned-looking woman that you saw sitting alongside of her is her nurse and keeper. The language that she will use at some times to me is shocking to listen to. She never attacks me; she does her mother on every occasion there is an opportunity for her to do so."

In listening to his conversation it unmanned me. I said: "I, too, dear friend, at certain times am obsessed. I loved my angel wife, but I broke her heart. That influence that obsesses me at times compelled me to treat her so shamefully that in my sane moments I thought I was only fit for hell or the gallows. O, dear friend, I loved her so I would have given up my life for her sake, did she but command it."

While we were conversing with each other his daughter entered the room followed by her nurse. She came and sat on my lap, and the language she used was too degrading to repeat here.

Her father said to the influence: "You promised me that your behavior would be good to-night if I would permit my daughter to be present on this occasion."

Her nurse came forward, lifted her from my lap and said, "Come, Lucille, it is time for you to retire now."

She turned on her keeper, using the most abusive language I think I ever heard come from the lips of a woman.

There came a time, dear readers, when I was obsessed by a cursed power—aye, a damnable power—that compelled me to accomplish that girl's ruin. I robbed her of the dearest crown a woman wears—her virtue. I became her paramour until her father discovered it, then he placed her in an institution where she died insane.

The spirits of my wife and that beautiful Lucille received me after I had taken on the new birth in spirit life. I passed through that condition that you call death with all my infirmities and crimes to be worked out and thrown off through my spiritual condition. After I had entered into spirit life I made the discovery that the witch that had obsessed me and held that power of infamy over my physical condition was a minister of the gospel—so-called—the one that betrayed the confidence placed in him by Stephen Girard, of Philadelphia, a saintly man living in a physical body at that time. His work since speaks for itself. From the spirit side of life he loves and blesses children. After I had made the discovery who the unfortunate wretch was, all the spiritual beauty of nature held by my wife, Lucille and myself, came to the front of our souls' desires to reform that unfortunate creature, also held under an obsessing power of spirits stronger than himself, those spirits we call the "demons of spirit life." His reformation was accomplished and he became a repentant spirit; there lay dormant in his soul a flame of beauty that had not been kindled yet; when once it had found it was touched by the light of truth, the flame spread and was fed by harmony from other souls. That spirit became one of Little Justin's guides, the one you call "Dick," who came as a "newsboy" to work out his condition through that process. In time he received the new baptism called a divinity in nature.

One day while walking up Broadway I met Edwin Forrest, the great tragic actor. I discovered as he came toward me that he held a little boy by the hand. He was pleased to meet me. He said, "Edgar, come and take dinner with me." I told him I would do so with pleasure. He did not introduce me to the little boy whose hand he held. As we stepped off to go toward the hotel the little boy kicked him on the leg, saying, "You old galloot, introduce me before I kick you on the other leg."

Mr. Forrest laughed and said: "Pardon me, Edgar, for not introducing my little friend Puss. Puss, this is Edgar Allen Poe, the poet."

Little Puss shook hands with me and said, "Are you the chap that was trying to read poetry the other day on the City Hall steps and got knocked down because it was so bad?"

Mr. Forrest laughed so hilariously that I thought he would get a pain in his side from laughing.

When we reached the hotel and were ascending the stairs toward Mr. Forrest's room I noticed a man who had a peculiar look in his eyes as he passed me. He said, "Hello, Forrest." Mr. Forrest said, "I am glad to see you to-day, Mr. Winchester," and passed on, not introducing me to the man. When we were comfortably seated in Mr. Forrest's sitting-room and cigars and wine were placed on the table, Mr. Forrest said to me: "Did you observe that man that passed us on the stairs—what a peculiar look he has in his eyes? It gives the contour of his face an evil expression. I believe that man is obsessed by a devil. I wish there was some way of breaking it up. At times his conversation is elevating to anyone that is present as a listener; he charms people with his cultured conversation; at other times there is a morose condition that seems to hold him in a spell and his gross utterances are too vile to listen to." After we had dined in Mr. Forrest's private apartment, and the dishes were taken away by a waiter, little Puss said, while sitting on Mr. Forrest's lap, "I wish old Beelzebub would come in now and talk to the poet. Oh, he's a daisy."

Mr. Forrest said, "Why do you wish that, Puss?"

Puss said, "Uncle Forrest can't you see his under lip is hanging down? He needs cheering up."

Mr. Forrest said, "Can't you cheer him up with one of your songs?"

I said, "Do, Puss, sing me one of your pretty songs."

He said to Mr. Forrest, "Uncle, it won't do to sing him one with love in it; they say poets are chock full of that kind of stuff"—which made us laugh. He sang us a pretty Scotch ballad. He had hardly finished singing when the door opened and in walked that man that had passed us on the stairs. He said: "Forrest, I heard your boy singing, and I came to listen. Are you angry? I don't give a d— if you are; when he sings I want to hear him."

Mr. Forrest said, "That's all right, friend Winchester, he will sing for you." Then he said in a low voice, "Puss, sing something soothing."

Little Puss started in and sang that beautiful piece of music called "Jesus Let Me to Thy Bosom Fly," and oh, he sang it in such a plaintive voice that I commenced to cry. I also beheld the last man that had entered the room had tears coursing down his cheeks.

When little Puss had finished singing he jumped to his feet, crying out in a loud voice: "You angels in heaven and devils in hell, I want to block you out from my sight; you have been the ruin of my life and cursed her that I loved with my whole soul; give her back to me, damn you, or I will tear you out of heaven and drag the devils out of hell and pitch you all into the sea. Curse you, you have taken her from me, but I will find her, no matter if you lock the gates of heaven against me or bar the doors of hell. She is mine."

I looked at him in pity and discovered the froth was coming from his mouth. He fell on the floor in a fit. It was then I saw he was under of some demon.

I said: "Mr. Forrest, what do you do for him when he gets into this condition?"

"We let him lie there," Mr. Forrest said, "until some influence controls Justin; as a general thing they sing and rub his head at the same time; after that they use little Puss's hands in making passes down over his body. Oh, I am so sorry, Edgar, for this man. His friends should place him where he would be properly taken care of. When in a sane condition he has such a generous heart and is lavish with his wealth. This is the third hotel that I have found him in. He seems to have a fascination for little Puss. The other night at the theater, when Puss had finished speaking his lines, this unfortunate man cried out, 'He is mine; they have robbed me of him.'

He was taken from the theater by his friends and conveyed to the hotel. The little one's singing has an attraction for him, and on many occasions has a soothing effect. When my engagement here in New York is finished I am going to take the little one and go to some place in the country. I want to see if I can stop that man from following us around. I am afraid while he is under that influence he will do some one harm.'

The power had come upon Justin; he sat down by the man and sang a soothing lullaby in some language that I did not understand. After a while he made passes over the man's body, then he said to Mr. Forrest and me, "Come and hold my hands." We did so. In about ten minutes a male voice sang through his vocal organs of speech, followed by a female voice. Mr. Forrest and myself took up the refrain.

The man came out from under the condition, looked wild for a few moments, then commenced to cry. He said: "Oh, Mr. Forrest, I have been under that cursed spell again. I am so happy now, so happy I cannot express it to you in language. God bless you all. Your kindness can never go unrewarded." He took little Puss into his arms, hugged and kissed him, saying, "You belong to another world better than this one that you live in now."

During the time that he was under that unhappy condition, Mr. Forrest put the wine out of sight. He said: "Gentlemen, will you ride with me in a carriage? I want to be so much in the open air, for I am a happy man."

Mr. Forrest said: "We will go with you, Mr. Winchester, if you think you can receive any benefit from our presence being in the carriage.

He said, "Oh, it will make me most happy."

Mr. Forrest said: 'I can only give you one hour, as I must return with the little one to indulge in an afternoon nap."

We went with him in the carriage. As we reached Union Square, up Broadway, an influence took possession of little Puss, and said: "Drive up Lexington Avenue." When we had entered the avenue the control claimed to be the mother of Mr. Winchester, and talked beautifully to her son. Her language I never forget, it had so much of the spirit of truth in it; the cultured and expressive thoughts that she conveyed to her son through the lips of Justin were something never to be forgotten.

VISIONS.

The air is astir with Love's messenger
That comes o'er the vales and hills,
And the green woodland heights welcome her
In the murmuring brooks and rills,
And soft on the air, like a maiden's prayer,
Echo the notes of a warbler clear;
clear;
Thro' the twilight dim floats a vesper-hymn,
Bidding the world good cheer.

Thro' the silent magic of the closing day,
My vision reaches the Long Ago
Of the golden days of my sweetheart May,
When my heart was all aglow;
When my buoyant spirit could taste the tang
Of the odors from sunny isles,
And the wonders and marvels that joyous sprang
To my vision for miles and miles.

Let my fancy bring, on Love's starlit wing,
Glad thoughts of my spring-time days,
When my songs and laughter had a happy ring,
And my path led in flowery ways;
Let my vision bring back those hearts that cling
To my memory's hallowed shrine,
Thro' the drifted years of joys and tears,
Those days of my childhood's time.

Let me recount the fond days of the past,
When my vision was rosy hued,
When the sky was clear and no clouds o'ercast
My path star-jewel strewed;
And let me read again life's mystic book
Of the meadows, vales and hills,
When I wondered in shade and forest nook
And listened to its fluted trills.

In dreamy ways where fond memory strays
Across the mystic stream of time,
Oft comes the vision of life's vanished days,
And of fairer worlds divine.
Sweet world of spring, earth once more a-wing,
Breathes forth her perfume rare,
The old world warms, young arms upspring
With flowery offerings fair.

To the Editor:—I wish to remind your readers of a debate to take place at Hedrick, Okla., commencing August 20, between John W. Ring and Rev. J. W. Chism, Christian Evangelist of Texas. Propositions as follows:

"Resolved, that the fundamental principles of modern Spiritualism are identical with the spiritual basis of the religion of Jesus Christ."

Mr. Ring affirms for three days and Rev. Chism denies.

Second:

"Resolved, that the scriptures teach that with the passing of the Apostolic Age spiritual gifts, such as are mentioned in the Bible, closed."

Rev. Chism affirms for three days and Mr. Ring denies, making a six-days' discussion of four hours each day. ROBERT G. LEE.

SUGGESTIVE THOUGHTS.

The Dynamic and Spiritual Power of the Sunbeam.

While thoughtfully meditating on the philosophy of practical experience as I walked along the street, my attention was arrested by the operation of a radiometer in a jeweler's window.

To the general crowd it had no significance, as familiarity had evoked indifference, but to me it formed a basis for philosophical reflection.

This delicately constructed scientific instrument, sensitive to a degree, was vibrating in obedience to the propulsion of the solar rays. As the fleecy clouds obscured the sun, the vibrations of activity were sensibly lessened, but when the direct impulsion of energy was uninterrupted the sails operated so rapidly as to defy a discrimination of separateness.

This was a manifestation of the dynamic power of the sunbeam; and I thought if that gentle messenger from our solar luminary could but reveal the mystery of its being, we should possess the solution of life's eternal problem, and thus know our true relationship to the great universe of obective activity.

If solar light in its primary pristine, essential condition is spiritual power, only materialized by virtue of atmospheric diffusion, (as I have been inspirationally assured) we may at least boldly speculate and dare to enter the very holy of holies of subjective research; but we are begging a proposition which we cannot at present objectify and place within the province of exact thought.

Obviously, I lay myself open to the charge of being wildly speculative, as possessing no scientific data in entering this region, yet we must not be oblivious of the fact that our wisest and best scientific men do not scruple to consult the oracle of imagination (that divine faculty and attribute of the soul) in their perplexity, with practical results that none can gainsay.

Is the sunbeam a reflection of the life-breathing of mighty human souls in the spiritual realm? Is our glorious sun a reflector or a promoter of power? Is it an electric dynamo or a shield flashing forth the magnetic rays of love from the high and mighty in the celestial world?

The greatest, grandest and most suggestive truth taught by Swedenborg, the seer, was the doctrine of correspondence. This is the most glorious pearl we can extract from the ocean of theological confusion which cramped his soul.

He maintained that everything material had its counterpart spiritual, and this magnificent idea has been beautifully elaborated through our modern mediums.

If our material atmosphere can by diffusion cause solar light to become prismatic and impart color to external nature, why not the Central Spiritual Sun, that inexaustible, impersonal life and thought-supplying essence, impart such in reflection from the orb of day?

There are human beings in the vast hierarchy of the spirit, possessed of attributes similar to our own, dwelling in the celestial world, who are so bright and luminous as to far exceed the brilliancy of the noonday sun. If these very gods in the universe spiritual can breathe forth prismatic beauties to adorn their surroundings, and are the creators of all they desire, why should they not breathe on and reflect from stellar suns creative energy, light and power?

Their intense activity causes a dispersal of soul-substance which must be recuperated or re-supplied from an inexhaustible progressive fountain to minister to the requirements of all souls. Why are these human spiritual intelligences so brilliantly illuminated?

IT IS BECAUSE THE SPIRITUAL POWER PERCOLATES THROUGH THEIR BEING UNINTERRUPTEDLY—THERE IS NO CONGESTION.

Their surroundings correspond to their condition of unfoldment, and their happiness is proportionate to the free flow of spiritual power through their organizations. Thus they appropriate from the great, central spiritual sun fadeless beauty, intellectual energy and spiritual love.

Doubtless if we here, enshrined in clay, could allow free and unobstructed expression to our internal powers, we should be perfectly healthy, materially and spiritually, and "happiness" would characterize our daily life.

As an illustration of the validity of this position, take a common, everyday object lesson. When we violate the laws of nature we catch cold, that is, the temperature of the body is reduced too suddenly; the pores of the skin become congested, the effete matter, which has undergone a chemical change and should be eliminated by the system, is re-appropriated by the circulation, and poison saps the legitimate effects of harmonization, and we therefore immediately take remedies to relieve the congestion, and just in proportion to the free flow of vital fluid is the equilibrium re-established and harmony ensues.

As the mountain is a unit of possibilities physical, and voices by correspondential symbolism the philosophy of diffusion, so the human soul, possessing internally all spiritual potentialities, is a unit of universal power.

Thus the aggregate of human souls in being may be the progenitors of stellar worlds, and the diffusion of all vital energy in objective existence.

Man's intelligence dissociates the elements of which that mountain consists, and appropriates them for the promotion of civilization—spiritual and thought power are breathed from the human soul in creative expression. C. G. OYSTON.

THE STREAMLET.

Can you tell me, little streamlet,
Flowing on so swift and fast,
Are you never tired and weary?
Do you ever sighs for rest?
And the little streamlet answered,
As she flowed on toward the South,
'I am rested when to other Larger streamlets I give strength."

Oh, ye weary ones of earth,
Learn a lesson from the streamlet,
If you would not weary grow
In this life of toilsome journey,
Strengthen others as you go.
And I wandered onward southward,
Where the little streamlet ran,
And beheld a mighty river,
That to earth it gave new strength.

As you journey onward heavenward,
In this school of life of ours,
Help another learn a lesson
That will give new strength to you.

DO YOU WANT A CAMP?

A Special Appeal to the Spiritualists of Illinois.

In response to many inquiries concerning the Illinois Fraternal Camp Association, I would state that, in view of existing circumstances, very satisfactory progress is being made. The first step toward the successful accomplishment of any purpose or enterprise is to create an interest or demand. As soon as a sufficient number of Spiritualists can be found who feel that they want a camp in this State and are willing to lend such assistance as they feel able, steps will at once be taken towards accomplishing that much to be desired end.

The majority of Spiritualists have never thought of the matter at all, but when their attention is called to it they are quick to see the desirability of a movement in that direction. To create the desired interest, is, owing to the lack of organization, a much more difficult matter than it at first appears.

First, we must learn who are Spiritualists and where they are located. We have communicated with a large number throughout the state and would like the address of many more, and we hope that all who read this will assist us by sending the names and addresses of any whom they think might be interested.

We want the foundation of this camp to be broad and strong. Elizabeth Harlow says that "Our apex can be just as high as our base will support." If we would build a structure high enough to attract the attention of the thinking public, we must be sure and start right. The foundation is the most essential part of a building; let the house be ever so fair to look upon, if it is not founded upon a solid foundation, some day an adverse wind will cause it to fall and we have but a ruin left. The camp of the future must be entirely changed from the camp of the past.

First, it should be co-operative, conducted by the individual members of which the association is composed; we would have no stock or stock-holders, no sale of lots, no opportunities for one person or for a small clique to get control. Every member should have a voice in the management of the camp.

The main feature of the camp in the past has been the phenomena, but at present they are passing through a crucial stage. So much fraud has been practiced that intelligent Spiritualists are refusing to attend, and the attendance at nearly all the camps is smaller than in the past years. Managements are awakening to the necessity of weeding out all fakirs, and the cleansing process is going on all over the country. This will have a tendency to separate the Spiritualists from the spiritists. If we have Spiritualists enough to support a camp conducted on educational lines, well and good, but if our camps can not live without degenerating into a fakir's show, the sooner they die the better for the cause.

Our ideas of the future camp is one that shall combine all the best features of the present Chautauquas with the best features of the summer resort. It seems almost impossible for the large majority of Spiritualists to imagine any scheme of any manner of recreation except a spiritual meeting. If we go to a picnic or excursion, the poor mediums are not allowed to enjoy the beauties of nature and a period of relaxation from work, but are coaxed upon the platform to give some tests or to hold a circle for the enjoyment of the rest of the excursionists. We would have the phenomena and the philosophy of Spiritualism presented at all proper times and places, but we would also like a place where we can take our families, where part of the time may be devoted to rational amusements and educational entertainment, suited to the needs of children as well as adults. We want a place where we can spend the whole season, from June to September. We would like boating and fishing for those who enjoy such sports, with occasional canoe rides and aquatic illuminations. The ideal camp will have all these but will not neglect the educational.

We learned last season at Lily Dale that friends of Mrs. Richmond, Mr. Wright, Prof. Lockwood and others, were willing if satisfied of the permanency of the camp, to erect suitable buildings and endow them, that these gifted speakers might be employed to give their wonderful truths to the public free of charge. May the spirit world speed the day when this may be the main feature at all camps.

But we would not neglect the phenomena, without which there would be no camps. A camp should be a home for honest mediums; let none practice on the grounds but those endorsed by their home society and the camp management, then we will have more Spiritualists and less spiritists.

These conditions are being demanded; are we ready to meet the demand? The camp of the future should have a sanatorium fitted with all the latest improvements for rational treatments, equiped wih the various baths, sun, mud, water, etc., machinery for mechanical massage, paraphernalia for physical exercise and all possible appliances to help restore the sick to a natural condition, which is perfect health. There should be no better spot on earth for regaining impaired health than a rightly conducted Spiritual camp, where treatments for the physical, the mental, and the spiritual can all be given, assisted by wise and advanced healers and teachers from the other side.

The response to the call published some weeks ago has been quite general, but we want to hear from many more. Will you help us? Write to us that you are willing to join a camp association; let each one help what they can, and a camp for this state will soon be an assured fact. Address all communications to

TWO WOMEN.

Within the cottage door and bare
A woman sees the shadows grow,
And in a stately palace there
Is one whose servants come and go;
And one of them is young and fair,
And one is old and bended low.

The lady fair whose servants haste
To do her bidding sadly sighs,
She deems the world a barren waste,
Two teardrops tremble in her eyes:
They've sent the wrong complexion paste—
It's not at all the kind she buys.

She in the cottage weeps for joy,
The world to her is strangely bright;
No sorrow enters to annoy,
No care may put her glee to flight;
They've raised the wages of her boy—
Ah, sweet will be her dreams to-night!

SEARCHING FOR THINGS IN THE NEXT SPHERE.

Popular Interest Manifested Everywhere in Psychic Matters.

Our present era has been described as one given chiefly to materialism, yet there never was a time when so many thoughtful persons were engaged in the study of psychic phenomena, or when there were so many societies organized to prosecute psychical research. The question of the nature of spirit is being investigated from many different points of view. Physicians attack the problem from their own side, seeking light in the study of brain, nerves, etc., as well as in phenomena of somnambulism, hypnotism, double personality and the like.

Societies for psychical research in this country and England number in their membership some of the most eminent names of modern science—men who make it their task to sift grain from the chaff of reported apparitions, instances of telepathy, alleged communications with the dead, etc. There is a large literature on the subject of "Spiritism"—a different thing from Spiritualism. The latter has become a creed with many persons, who take their belief seriously, though it has been notably abused by pretenders who give "seances" and use conjurers' tricks to impress the unwary. Mind-reading, "suggestion," etc., are accepted by many who have no theory to account for them. The recent announcement that experimenters in New England have ascertained that the soul weighs half an ounce, ridiculous as it is, illustrates the prevailing disposition to apply the experimental method to the elucidation of questions of spirit. The materialistic tendency of the time demands ocular proof of things the most subtile. Recent revelations of the properties of radio-active substances have strengthened this tendency, but have brought materialists and Spiritualists closer together by showing that matter consists apparently of infinitely minute aggregations of ether which are endowed with wonderful properties. Materialists used to laugh at the contention of schoolmen that thousands of spirits could dance on the point of a needle, but the calculations of Professors Thompson, Soddy and others seem to show that the point of a needle would afford ample space for numerous organized beings consisting each of millions of atoms. Matter, in short, has been refined almost to the quality of spirit, as the latter was once conceived, so that materialists are more ready than formerly to accept a spiritualistic explanation of phenomena.

Faith in invisible causes is accordingly reviving, and persons of ultra-scientific bias will be found entertaining views once deemed highly superstitious. There is much folly and some fraud, no doubt, in various popular manifestations of the revived interest in occult matters.

The limits between the possible and impossible are ignored, and the anxious inquirer after spiritualistic truth often has a trick of sleight-of-hand palmed off on him. The magician and the hoodoo doctor still flourish upon the credulity of their admirers. Not that there is not great virtue in mental "suggestion" in this neurasthenic age. Imaginary diseases require imaginary remedies. The regular physician finds many of his patients cured by bread pills, the pill being something to fix the eye upon, while confidence in the doctor does the work.

The huge boluses of our grandfathers are out of fashion. Medicine has lost its mysterious power, and we want more subtle remedies. Little by little we are finding out that abstinence from drugs and plenty of exercise in the open air are the true secrets of physical and mental health. As respects spiritual health, however, the problem, with all our experimentation, remains substantially where it was before the age of ism began.—Editorial in Baltimore Sun.

A Word From One in Spirit Life.

I wish to thank all my friends for all they did for me while I was in earth life, and the kindly thoughts that they sent out when I passed to the life eternal. Also to say I have not forgotten them, that my thoughts go out to them and for them the same as when I was in the body. Since coming to the new life I have taken a new occupation that keeps me all absorbed in the work that is to be. I have many friends to help me, those that I know, and many I did not know.

I hear it frequently said: "I don't see, or I should think Emeline would come and manifest through some of our mediums."

Well, now, I have no desire to go to any hall to manifest to my friends They are near and dear to me as of long ago, yet it would not be of any advancement to me Spiritually, to manifest in any public meeting. I feel more at ease to come and dictate a message through the medium who writes for me.

Spirit Homes, or the Heaven you read of is as one vast cathedral of everlasting grandeur. There are no streets paved with gold, neither are there walls of jasper. The beauty is the everlasting harmony of souls that shine with dazzling sunlight of wisdom from the great Oversoul of love and knowledge, and wisdom combined for the good of all God's children. All may learn that will, of the power and glory of the Divine plan of the one Great Cause that some call God, but we call Nature, for it is natural, always has been and always will be, for in the great plan there was no beginning, neither will there be any ending.

Now as children of the natural cause, live right, live good, honest, upright, pure, and you will be true to others, on the same plan that good people make good Christians, and the bad never make Christians at all. When one has achieved the true principle of living a true life for one's spiritual benefit, he will be prepared to enter upon higher duties that will meet him when he too, passes through the golden gateway.

There is a great deal of work to be done as yet before the spirit world can perfect the human family that they may bring into this life offspring that will come up to the standard that they will produce the harmony and love that should exist for the peace and morality of the human family.

Wishing my friends, all as one, peace and prosperity.

"International Convention of Ghosts."

We give the following to illustrate again what the Secular Press is doing in the way of calling attention to spiritualistic and occult subjects, although it often does so jocularly, and in many respects not very politely, or even decently, yet the general effect of its work is most excellent. The following from the Chicago Tribune, the great daily, illustrates the point we intend to convey. We use its own heading to the article, "International Convention of Ghosts."

London is preparing for the greatest convention ever held—the first international convention of ghosts, which is being planned to meet at South Institute, one of the great halls of London City, in September.

Not since the investigation of Spiritualism by the Siebert Commission has science taken such a grave interest in the question of spirits.

Psychical Research Societies all over the world, as well as learned educators and thinkers, are, according to present plans, to participate in the convention, which is expected at least to develop important knowledge of things psychical. No school of Spiritualists will be excluded. The Indian "fakir" and the Oxford college professor will be expected to sit side by side with the American Spiritualistic medium and Tibetan recluse. The spirit doctors from the African jungles will be invited to explain their fetich worship to the deepest thinkers of the Italian, French, and German schools of Spiritualistic research.

Scientists to Cross-Question Spooks.

A test, however, is planned to be deeper than this. Not only will Spiritualists and students of Spiritualism be invited to attend, but they will be expected to subject their controls to the cross-questioning of the most eminent students of the world. Historians, writers, scholars, who have but little or no interest in Spiritualism will be invited to attend and examine the spirits to prove their authenticity. Instead of the usual medium's "fake" of saying "I see a tall, blond woman, who asks if John is in the audience," the spirits will be examined by men who know more about their lives on earth than the mediums do.

For instance, a medium who claims to be able to summon the spirit of Napoleon will be examined by the foremost authority on the Napoleonic era, and asked questions concerning the emperor which no one could answer unless deeply versed in the life of Napoleon. The same system, according to the committee, will be used with every historic ghost, a special authority being invited to examine each medium after the same manner.

Among the famous spirits invited to attend, under the chaperonage of their favorite mediums, are the following:

Napoleon, Aristophanes, Mozart, Aristotle, David, Darius, Shakspeare, Demosthenes, Washington, King Arthur, Alexander, Cleopatra, Socrates, Caesar, Dickens, Jeanne d' Arc, Columbus, Solomon, Brigham Young, Cromwell, Sir Walter Scott, Robert Burns, Confucius, Dante, Martin Luther, Henry Ward Beecher.

Spirits of Famous Men Invited.

The committee which is arranging the international convention of ghosts, in order to prove its sincerity in resorting to the greatest test of their belief in Spiritualism, has planned to invite the following authorities to cross question the mediums who claim to control the historic spirits.

David to be examined by William Robertson Smith, editor Encyclopedia Britannica, librarian Cambridge university, authority on biblical and Hebrew history.

Aristophanes to be examined by Richard Claverhouse Jebb, Lit. D., LL. D., professor of Greek, University of Glasgow.

Shakspeare to be examined by Henry R. Tedder, librarian Athenaeum, London,, authority on Shakspearean history and literature, author of works on Shakspeare, the man and the author, and Alexander Stewart MacGregor, Scotch Shakspearean authority.

King Arthur to be examined by the Rev. David Bowlands, the famous Welsh scholar and author, special investigator of the life and legends of the round table and its knights.

Alexander to be examined by Archibald Henry Sayce, M. A., professor of comparative philosophy, University of Oxford, and writer on ancient history.

Dante to be examined by Oscar Browning, M. A., fellow of King's college, Cambridge, lecturer on ancient history, author of "The Life and Work of Dante."

Peter the Great to be examined by Oscar Browning.

Demosthenes to be examined by Richard Claverhouse Jebb, University of Glasgow.

Darius to be examined by Archibald Henry Sayce, professor of comparative philology, Oxford, author "Babylonian Literature," "The Monuments of the Hittites," "Assyrian Grammar," "Assyrian Translations," etc.

Aristotle Expected to Announce New Philosophy.

Aristotle to be examined by Paul Wilhelm Schmeidel, professor of New Testament history, University of Zurich, formerly University of Jena and Leipsic; author many historical works.

Mozart to be examined by W. S. Rickstrom, author "Life and Music of Mozart."

Cleopatra to be examined by the Rev. Frederick John Foakes-Jackson, dean Jesus college, Cambridge, author "Biblical History of the Hebrews," "Christian Difficulties in the Second and Twentieth Centuries," etc.

Caesar to be examined by Oscar Browning, M. A., King's college, Cambridge.

Jeanne d' Arc to be examined by L. De Bouteiller, author history of her life, etc.

Solomon to be examined by Stanley Lane-Poole, professor Arabic, Trinity college.

Brigham Young to be examined by Francis Hepwell, author "History of Mormonism."

Oliver Cromwell to be examined by Thomas McKinnon Wood, London, chairman London city council, one of the editors Encyclopedia Britannica.

Sir Walter Scott to be examined by Prof. James Brander Matthews, Columbia university, author works on American and British literature.

Robert Burns to be examined by James McNichol, LL. D., D. D., university of Edinburgh; author "Life and Character of Robert Burns," etc.

Socrates to be examined by Prof. Adolph Harnack, D. D., University of Berlin.

Henry Ward Beecher to be examined by the Rev. Isaac Kaufman Funk.

Every Ghost Will Have Chance to Talk.

These are not all. The Psychical association, which has appointed a committee of fifteen to make arrangements, is planning to add to the list and include in the invitation all the authorities on any spirit which the mediums claim they can control. The invitation lists to famous Spiritualists now being made up by the committee are growing continually, and with them the lists of the famous students and writers who will be given the chance to talk or communicate with the spirits of the men whose biographies they have written or whose lives they have studied.

One thing the convention will seek to demonstrate, and that is the wonderful changes in the attitude of science towards spirit phenomena since the days when Kate Fox, the American girl, founded what is known as the modern school of Spiritualism.

NOW SCIENCE, RELIEVED OF THE DANGER OF BEING MADE RIDICULOUS, IS INTERESTED IN THE SERIOUS INVESTIGATION OF THE PROBLEM OF SPIRITUALISM AND PERHAPS THE SCIENTISTS AND DEEP THINKERS OF ENGLAND AND EUROPE AT LEAST ARE AS MUCH INTERESTED IN THE PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF GHOSTS AS ARE THE LEADERS OF THE SPIRITUALISTIC MOVEMENT. For the psychical phenomena, instead of being a commercial asset for fakers who prey upon the superstitous members of the public and work wondrous frauds and deceits has become a serious scientific problem and perhaps half the great psychologists of the world have faith in "seeing ghosts." They don't admit it in that form—in fact, they deny the ghosts, but they admit the phenomena and seek explanation.

All Fraudulent Mediums ot Be Barred

The committee expects humanity to derive much knowledge from the coming convention that will support the theories of Spiritualists. The committee says with perhaps 2,000 spiritualistic mediums present ready to produce ocular proof of their claims and with a few hundred scientific men and scholars present to test those proofs there will be no chance for trickery or fraud.

The development of Spiritualism since 1848, when Mr. and Mrs. John Fox of Hydesville, N. Y., first discovered "spirit rapping," has been remarkable, although nothing beyond theories has resulted. Kate Fox, one of the daughters, was the first person to claim to be able to communicate with spirits through the medium of raps; although as early as the seventeenth century German Jews practiced table rocking.

The discovery of Kate Fox that she could obtain replies to knocks upon tables, etc., and that the responses seemed directed by intelligences, resulted in the formation of the modern school of Spiritualism. The form of "spirit rapping" spread rapidly through the United States and thence over the entire civilized world. The spirit of the "murdered peddler" which communicated with the Fox family became historic and subsequent mediums developed rapping to an extent which created interest everywhere.

Growth of Spiritualism in Fifty Years.

Kate Fox and her sister both were mediums and claimed to be able to communicate with the spirits of the departed. They had a host of imitators.

No medium, however, in those days or for many years afterward even claimed to understand what special qualities enabled spirits to make use of them.

Andrew Jackson Davis, in 1847, startled the world by his work on "Nature's Divine Revelations," which he claimed to have received while in a hypnotic trance.

A Mrs. Hayden, a professional medium of Boston, carried the "spirit rapping to England in 1852, and Europe was seized with a "table turning" mania.

Science accepted certain phenomena as real, but in the maze of fraud and buffoonery and trickery designed to cheat superstitious poor, much time and knowledge were lost. Science refused to mingle with the fakers and the fear of ridicule precluded the possibility of any famous scientist devoting his time to the study of Spiritualism until within the last decade.

The Siebert Commissions on insanity and Spiritualism were pioneering investigations into the field which science hardly dared enter because of the ridicule it brought upon them.

The bequest of Siebert, furnishing funds for such investigations, brought a serious effort. Besides science had proved so much that it became less afraid of ridicule.

Present Fad for Scientific Investigation.

The Italian school was one of the first to take the plunge into the waters of mystery and when it emerged bringing up bits of truth the psychologists of France, England, and Germany jumped in. Within the last decade it has become almost a fad for scientific men to investigate ghosts. They have shattered thousands of good stories and got many bits of the truth.

NOW THE SCIENTISTS THE WORLD OVER ACCEPT PSYCHIC PHENOMENA AS A MATTER OF COURSE AND THEY ARE DELVING DEEPER AND DEEPER. SO THEY ARE EXPECTED BY THE COMMITTEE TO WELCOME THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION OF GHOSTS.

Any ghost in good standing, with dues paid up, is privileged to attend the convention and make himself or herself known to any one of the Spiritualists or scientists who will be in attendance.

Besides the spirits of great historic characters, already mentioned, who are expected through their mediums to accept invitations to attend, there will be many famous ghosts, some of them unknown, or at least unidentified, and some of these, the committee hopes, may be identified by the scientists or others during the congress.

Famous Family Spirit of the Rudats.

Of this class is the famous Rudat spirit, which is one of the best known materializations in the world, at least among Spiritualists. This wraith, or whatever it is, has been a mystery to mediums for the last ten years and its peculiarity consists, seemingly, in the fact that the best mediums can do nothing with it while it persistently attempts to communicate with members of the Rudat family, living in and near the village of Getroz, in Switzerland, not far from the French frontier. Not one member of the family is a medium as far as they know, and not one understands even the simplest forms of Spiritualism, yet this spirit, so it is asserted, has made scores of attempts to communicate with different members of the family.

Instead of being pleased the Rudats were almost frightened out of their wits. Two members of the family claim to have seen the wraith, which appeared to them as a semi-luminous mist, approximating in form the human shape. Also the spirit, they claim, strove to tell them something, but failed because every member of the family it approached refused to remain to listen.

Spiritualists, when they heard of this wonderfully material spirit hastened to the Rudats and expected great things in the line of discovery. The spirit, however, refuses to have anything to do with the mediums. Its business, apparently, is with the Rudats, and no one else will do. However, one of the Rudats will be brought to the convention and efforts made to get the spirit to reveal its business.

Spirit Doctors From Africa Invited.

Not the least interesting of the efforts of the convention to reach the truth are the plans for the examination of certain spirit doctors from equatorial Africa. De Mille, the Parisian Spiritualist, or rather student of Spiritualism, who has spent five years in the Congo and through West Africa, studying the fetish worship among the aborigines, will be asked to bring two of their famous spirit doctors to the convention for examination as to their powers of communicating with the spirits of the departed.

This is the first time any effort ever has been made to connect the fetishism, voodooism, and other mysterious rites of savage races with Spiritualism as it is understood in civilized countries. De Mille, however, has a theory that scientific psychologists have much to learn from aboriginal races. Indeed, he believes that at some time human beings on earth had the full power of communicating with the spirits of the departed, but that the art was lost with civilization and now is retained to a greater degree by savage races than by the educated ones.

THE FRENCHMAN DECLARES THAT THERE IS MORE IN FETISHISM THAN PEOPLE OF CIVILIZED COUNTRIES GENERALLY BELIEVE. INDEED, HE HAS SEEN THINGS IN EQUATORIAL AFRICA THAT LEAD HIM TO BELIEVE THAT THE FETISHES REALLY ARE PLACES OF MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS AND THAT THE SPIRIT DOCTORS AMONG THE TRIBES ARE NOTHING MORE NOR LESS THAN HIGHLY DEVELOPED SPIRITUALISTIC MEDIUMS.

Among the committee which is arranging the convention the question of permitting De Mille to bring his spirit doctors to the convention was at first frowned upon, but later the committee voted unanimously to include savage as well as civilized ghosts.

The effort of the convention will be to reach the truth if possible, whether or not it is made ridiculous by some of the developments. The committee says it is fully aware that certain frauds may be attempted by daring fakers who may hope to gain advertising by tricking the convention, but, nevertheless no efforts will be spared to prevent impositions and, furthermore that all but known tricksters may attempt to materialize their spirits. Doubters are as welcome as firm believers. The committee announces that the only object is to get nearer the truth.

Every Honest Ghost Will Have a Chance.

Nevertheless, a special committee has been appointed to look up the records of Spiritualistic mediums who announce their intention of being delegates and bringing their ghosts to the convention.

EVERY HONEST PSYCHICAL RESEARCH WORKER ADMITS THAT PUERILE FRAUDS AND CLEVER IMPOSITIONS ARE PRACTICED DAILY, AND THAT SLEIGHT OF HAND, HYPNOTISM, AND ALL SORTS OF JUGGLERY ARE USED FREQUENTLY BY THOSE WHO CLAIM TO BE MEDIUMS. SOME OF THE BEST KNOWN SPIRITUALISTIC MEDIUMS IN THE WORLD WILL BE BARRED ENTIRELY FROM THE CONVENTION, BECAUSE PROOF EXISTS THAT THEY HAVE PRACTICED FRAUDS.

It is a well known fact that one firm in Boston manufactures immense paraphernalia of all sorts for the use of tricksters who seek to make money by deceiving the public. At least one Parisian moving picture firm manufactures extremely clever "ghosts" that can be materialized instantly, even through a small hole at the rear of a room, and produced upon walls or curtains.

The committee knows all these things, and it proposes to bar all fraudulent mediums, accepting only those who seek truth and do not resort to trickery.

The international convention committee is made up of English, French, American, Italian, and German Spiritualists, and is not backed by any clique or organization of Spiritualists, the originators of the idea planning to keep it out of the hands of any one society, and to have it represent as many as possible. The Society of Psychical Research of America, as well as England and France, is represented on the committee; the Spiritualist Alliance of Great Britain and the Spiritualist Society of Germany also have representatives on the board but the societies themselves will not be asked to participate in the arrangements except as individuals. Spiritualistic Societies to Demonstrate

Before the final plans are laid however it is expected that they will be asked to join forces with the international committee and assist in the work not as organizations but as part of the convention.

E. Dawson Rogers, president of the Spiritualists' Alliance, probably will be asked to allow his name to be presented as the leader in the convention, and W. Stainton-Moses, the leading Spiritualist of Great Britain, is almost certain to be invited to take charge in the department of psychology, which will be one of the most important features of the convention.

Not only will the leading Spiritualists be invited to attend and participate in the doings of the convention, but famous men from all over the world who have been interested in psychological research work will be pressed to assist.

America, it is probable, will be represented by Prof. Garrett P. Serviss, the distinguished scientist, who was one of the first Americans to dare public ridicule by serious study of Spiritualism, and the first in America to suggest organized study of the subject of psychic phenomena. Prof. Serviss is not a Spiritualist, but he believes firmly in many phases of spirit phenomena. He suggested years ago the urgent necessity of a thorough investigation of the entire subject by scientific men and it is more than probable that he would accept the invitation.

A few years ago, when the Rev. Stainton-Moses, leader of the British Spiritualists, suggested that all the Spiritualists in the world form connected "circles" and thus strive to reach the truth Prof. Serviss objected on the grounds that such a thing would result only in a mass of disconnected, jumbled statements from which it would be impossible to separate the true from the false. The idea of the international convention is to do away with exactly the thing to which Prof. Serviss objected.

Marconi, Believer in Ghosts, Invited.

Among the others the committee expects to invite will be Guglielmo Marconi, the inventor of the wireless telegraph, who is a firm believer in spirit communication; the Rev. Minot Judson Savage, the eminent New York divine, who has made a study of Spiritualism and psychic phenomena in general, and George Stuart Fullerton of Columbia University, who was one of the Siebert Commissioners in the investigation of Spiritualism and author of the preliminary report of the commission, which embodied its findings.

The Rev. Father C. G. Franco, S. J., the most eminent Roman Catholic authority, may be invited to attend, but because of the attitude of the church towards Spiritualism, the committee scarcely hopes he will participate. The church, according to Father Franco, believes many facts of Spiritualism, but condemns its claims and practices as contrary to the commands of the Bible, and likely to result in error and delusion.

Prof. James Hervey Hyslop, professor of logic and ethics at Columbia, a firm believer in spiritual manifestation, almost certainly will receive an invitation.

Isaac Kaufman Funk, author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," a clergyman and publisher, and perhaps the leading investigator of Spiritualism in the United States, the committee expects to be a delegate. His work on Spiritualism published in 1904, in which he told of his meeting with the spirit of Henry Ward Beecher, was one of the sensation of the year, causing a widespread revival in Spiritualism. Mr. Funk probably will be asked to attempt to communicate with the spirit of Beecher during the convention.

Flammarion and Lombroso to Be Present.

Prof. Charles Richet, the eminent French savant, who has done more than anyone else towards scientific investigation of spirit phenomena in France, is expected to be a candidate. Camille Flammarion, the great astronomer and writer, and Cesare Lombroso, the Italian psychologist, who, perhaps, is the deepest investigator in the world, according to present plans, will be invited to conduct certain phases of the investigation.

The first international convention of ghosts is expected by the committee to bring science nearer the truth regarding psychic phenomena, at least, and to collect the knowledge of the world on the subject for discussion.

The opening days of the convention, according to the plan now outlined by the committee, will be devoted to selection of committees and departments, and the examination of credentials of Spiritualistic mediums. Before that, however, organizations of Spiritualists will be asked to investigate the records of mediums who propose to show their ghosts.

During this preliminary stage, which may cover three days, there will be lectures and discussions, and each medium will submit to a special committee a short account of his work and his results.

Famous Ghosts Will Be Investigated.

After that, however, there will be little talking. The work will be for the mediums to demonstrate and for the scientists and students to investigate, cross question, examine, and seek means to get into closer communication with such spirits as may manifest themselves.

Interest in the convention is growing among Spiritualists who have heard of it, and the extent of the interest which will be aroused when the committee perfects its plans may be judged from the fact that there are at least 7,000 different Spiritualist societies in England alone, many of them belonging to the Alliance, which has branches in every city and village in England, all reporting to headquarters in London.

SPIRIT MESSAGES.

Received by Mrs. Nellie Davis, Medium, Kewanee, Illinois.

Charles Boice.

Well, I am afraid I can't say much, for I am not used to this kind of work. It is awfully hard to live a little while on earth, to grow so attached to people and want them so much, and then have to leave them and come over here. I didn't want to die. I used to talk about it a great deal, but it wasn't because I wanted to. It was only because I felt that it was coming. And they have some of my books at home now, that have flowers that I used to press between the leaves; they open there sometimes and say, "Poor Charlie." I often go back to the old place. I go into the room where they have so many of my old playthings. Mamma has all my toys in a glass cupboard, and the clothes I had on when I passed away, in the bottom drawer of the bureau in her room. She has a picture of me in the sitting room that she had enlarged. It is pretty good, I think, but it does not look much like me now, for I have grown stronger and don't look as I did. I just want to say that my picture is hung on a funny picture hook, it looks like a cone off of a pine tree. I want to speak of this because I want them to know I can see things at home.

Mamma gave my bicycle to a neighbor boy, and then she took it away from him again, for she said he was so rough with it, and would make me feel badly. I want to tell her to let him have it, I don't care, and he likes it. Well, now, I thank you and I will say that I passed away at Seattle, Wash., about seven years ago. I was 13 years old.

CHARLES BOICE.

Maria E. Pitts.

Now I do not want to send a long message to-day, any more than to identify myself. I find that those who are connected with me in earth-life—my boy, especially—are going through some adversities, and I want him to know that we are all helping him. It is immaterial whether anyone believes in Spiritualism or not, when a thought is sent out on the wings of love and honesty it is sure to do some good to someone.

Now my daughter Emeline is not very well, and she feels that the time is not far distant when she too, will have to leave the body, and her anxiety is as to how she can go and leave little Frank behind. I know that if she could come more closely to us we could help her; we could help her to regain her strength, and if I could keep her from worrying she would not be so bad, because there are changes that I see in the future and not far distant, that will be of great benefit to her. I want to say that George is with me, he was her husband.

I also have May Belle, her little child, and my father, John Martin, is with me.

Please say to her, we all join in sending our love, and assistance, and encouragement, and all will come out well if she will only trust the angels. I know she will understand me, because she turns to the assistance of mediums in her great trouble and trials.

I want my sisters and my brothers to know that death does not separate those who love. There are many conditions in heaven, the same as in earth, but where our loved ones are, and our desires are, there is the sphere in heaven in which we live. The reason I say this, I have often heard them say, "I wonder what heaven is, and where are all our friends who have died belonging to different faiths?" We are all in the sphere where we belong, that is one of the most beautiful conditions in spirit-life. We are not held by circumstances; we are just held by our desires.

Please say that Maria E. Pitts was here, and my home, although I have been gone nearly twenty years, was in Pittsburg, Pa. My son lives in Vermont, and I hope to open an avenue where I can assist them, for then I shall feel happier.

MARIA E. PITTS.

Alice James.

My dear ones all:—I would like to send out a few words to those in earth life not yet reconciled to my passing away, and I would like to say to them that all is well. There is much I would like to say, and much I would like to give directions for, but as this is a public channel I merely want them to become interested so I can change the sad conditions of my own home, and those I love. I want to say to my family which I left, that I have been conscious of a great deal that has been going on since passing away, and there are many things I would like to give counsel in, but every time I try to approach the earth life I seem to feel the old conditions coming back and I can't stay long. But I find that every time I come it helps me to overcome that feeling, and I have watched every chance, and when I found this gateway open for me I was so glad. Please say to my dear children that I am satisfied with what was done, and that there was nothing that could have been done any different. I often hear them say, "Oh, if this had been different—or if we had done that;" and there are so many things I see floating through their minds that I wish I could make them understand and know that all is well, and all was done that could be done for me.

I left so many on the mortal side of life. I left my dear husband, my daughter, several sons, several sisters, and so many friends who have a warm place in my heart; and I only wish they could all know that I have come here and tried to identify myself; and I hope I can come again. I will not stay any longer, but will give another a chance. I send love and greetings to all. Please say that Alice James was here and my home was at Volinia, Mich.

ALICE JAMES.

Recognition.

Philadelphia, Pa., July, 7, 1907.—My Dear Madam:—I saw a spirit message in The Progressive Thinker, from Neddy Murry. I knew him well. He went away with my half brother. They are having trouble about the property. I will show it to them, and you will hear from them. It is all just right as far as I know. I am 87 years old and can't write very well. May you live long. Your Brother, GUY J. WHITE.

New York, July 1, 1907.—My Dear Mrs. Davis:—We have just received a paper telling of a message from Effa Sargent. I don't know what to think of it, but will say that every word is true, and her brother says that he did just what she says he did. We think it is wonderful; she passed away just as she said. We know it must be from her. If this will help you in any way, use it as you please. We are very grateful to you. Regards to you. MRS. L. SARGENT.

DOES THIS APPLY TO YOU?

A Very Striking and Illustrative Poem

There's an artist named A. Liar,
Who, all characters must fire
In a way he deems is best to do;
Who is ever painting red
Both the living and the dead:
My brother, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named A. Greed,
Who makes other people need,
By withholding from them what is due:
You will meet him any day;
He is always out for pay:
My brother, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named A. Grouch,
Who is ever in a crouch,
To spring upon his prey when in view:
He will snarl at people's heels
While by law he grafts and steals:
My brother, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named A. Bore,
Who will meet you at your door,
And insist upon explaining something new,
When you wish to catch a train,
And you smile and frown in vain:
My brother, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named A. Snoop,
Who to anything will stoop
That will keep the patient neighbors in a stew,
And is always first to "knock,"
On the finest of the flock:
My sister, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named A. Beat,
Who is master of the feat,
Who while idle picks his folks to "do."
He's a useless piece of clay
Every night and every day.
My brother, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named A. Fraud,
Who is never overawed;
Who to all the name implies is true;
Who is free to use the paint,
Each one's character to taint:
My brother, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named A. Hate,
Who just lies around in wait,
To create destruction's flame of blue;
Who is ever in alert
Some dear loving one to hurt:
My sister, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named They Say,
Who is ever in dismay,
O'er the lives that others will pursue;
Who would libel any saint
And put Satan in a faint:
My sister, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named Do Good,
Who is seldom understood;
Who not every day is heeded by but few,
And whose soul will ever shine
With a radiance divine:
My brother, does this apply to you?

There's an artist named B. True,
Who would evil things subdue;
Who would make this earthly plane all new;
Aye! whose edict would suffice
To build here a Paradise:
My brother, does this apply to you?

DR. T. WILKINS.

DR. BLAND'S PIONEERS OF PROGRESS.

This book will be mailed to any reader of The Progressive Thinker who by letter or postal will say they would like to see it before paying for it, and will promise to send me one dollar or return the book in good condition within thirty days. This offer is made on the belief that on seeing it you will like it so well that you will be willing to pay one dollar for it.

In a four-page review of it in the Arena, B. O. Flower says: "This book is so interesting we doubt if one reader in twenty who commences to read it will lay it down until he has finished it."

In his magazine Tom. Watson says: "In a long career of usefulness and distinction, Dr. Bland has come in personal touch with many of the most interesting characters of the past century. He is himself a pioneer of progress, and what he says about Lincoln, Grant and other great men is of far more real interest than anything that could be said by anyone who had never seen them. Unreservedly, I commend this charming book."

The Daily Star, Washington, D. C., says: "The sketches in this book show the intimate knowledge and subtle appreciation which makes for the truest biography."

"Those who have read any of Dr. Bland's books need not be told that he is one of the most brilliant and fascinating writers of the age, as well as one of the most instructive and progressive. This, his latest and greatest work, should be in every library and every home."—To-Morrow Magazine.

"The book is rich with stirring reminiscences, and Dr. Bland relates them with a fine sense of fitness in the estimate of the character he has in hand."—Chas. Eugene Banks, in Chicago Examiner.

"A broad-minded lover of his fellows, Dr. Bland delights in giving credit to those men and women who have said things or done things to help forward the welfare of mankind. For this reason there is a contagious quality in his sketches, which are acutely discriminating and highly interesting."—Chicago Post.

If you want this book on trial, or as Elbert Hubbard says, in sending books in the same way, "on suspicion," that you will like it, say so at once, as the number of copies on hand is limited. Address, T. A. BLAND. 231 Hoyne ave., Chicago, Ill.

SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.
A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.
By John E. Remsburg.
The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.
The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.
This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

No. No. Too Much Church Still Remains.

English ecclesiastics visiting this country are anxious American Churchmen shall plunge into politics, and give to legislation a religious character. They say the country will never be saved if the church people content themselves with making prayers while the devil makes the laws.

The fathers of the American Revolution saw the evils of a union of church and state, and wisely divorced them; and this great Republic, the most free, the most prosperous, and the most promising for the future of all the nations of the earth, is the outcome of that divorce. Palsied be the heart that shall attempt to restore the old order of things. The few relics still existing relating to the olden times will soon pass away. Slavery was one of them. Our schools were once under exclusive church control. Where are they now?

Even England is laboring to bring about what was an established fact with us more than a hundred years ago. Let prelates go back to their own country and hasten the disestablishment of the church, and join the great intellectual army of thinkers who are laboring to prevent future wars and national strife, which the founder of Christianity in so many words declared:

"Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace but the sword." Mat. 10:34.

Near two thousand years of the practical application of such teaching; now let us try the opposite.

Money Wasted.

Mrs. Francis Campbell, a learned Christian tourist, writing The Westminster Gazette, an English journal, said:

"Last year, when I was in Morocco, I asked Dr. Rosen, who is, perhaps, the most familiar of all Orientalists with the Mohammedans, if any are really converted to Christianity. The Doctor replied: 'No, though' he added, 'some take pay to appear so.'

Exactly the same applies to the Jew. Not long ago a Jewish gentleman, who is like many of that race, deeply concerned for the children, said to me: 'You have missions for Jews. There are some Jews who figure in missionary reports as having been converted; but a Jew can no more change his faith than he can change his skin—he is a Jew always.' And that is my own fixed and firm belief, after many long years spent among Eastern races. I have seen the missions at work, and I say deliberately, the vast sums of money sent out of England for the conversion of Jews and Mohammedans is money wasted."

That Mrs. Campbell is correct in her statement all know who have investigated in that direction. And it is not Jews nor Mohammedans alone who are invulnerable to the arts of the missionary. It is the lower classes, the uneducated and the servile of China, Japan, Hindustan, etc., who are accessible to the missionary; and it is very evident their influence is lost so soon as the stimulus is withdrawn which connected the natives with the propagandists.

The opinion is fast gaining ground that the Oriental religions are better adapted to the needs of the people who adopt them, than is the mongrel faith of our Western civilization.

Not Guilty.

The trial of Wm. D. Haywood, at Boise, Idaho, for the murder of Gov. Steunenberg, commenced May 9, ended July 29, by the jury returning a verdict of "Not Guilty." The principal witness for the state was the self-confessed hired assassin, Harry Orchard. This was an assumed name. He was a bigamist, a wife deserter, a multi-murderer, and all-around criminal, who for a hundred dollars—his word for it under oath—seemed ready to commit any crime.

But Orchard "got religion," and, if other unimpeached witnesses can be trusted, he then added perjury to his many other offences.

Haywood was released from his long imprisonment, and was restored to his family, his reputation in our estimation, untarnished by the trying ordeal through which he passed.

Moyer and Pettibone, under indictment for the same offence as that charged against Haywood, with the same polluted evidence, are yet held for trial. Moyer is released on $25,000 bail, to appear and answer. Pettibone's trial is set for October 1. But will either be brought to trial? We question it.

There is a speedy way of disposing of the matter. Arraign, try, convict and execute the confessed murderer, and save the state in costs and incidental losses one million dollars, and let real justice be done. As Orchard's guilt has been washed away in the blood of the Lamb, he is assured a joyful welcome to the pearly courts, over whose battlements he can look down eternally on his unfortunate victims, and see them writhe in unspeakable torture, world without end, because they were ushered, all unprepared, before the great Judge; whereas, had they, like Orchard, each slain a score, accepted Jesus as their redeemer, they would have been awarded seats with their assassin, and together would have shouted glory, glory, glory forever.

A Grave Question.

If some device could be brought out which would prevent critical thought doubtless the church could gain a new lease of power. Until then they who can reason from cause to effect, if honest, are in danger of finding themselves outside of church circles.

The story of the crucifixion, death and bodily resurrection of Jesus has been a stumbling block to the learned for centuries. The more critically the gospels are examined the more obvious their inconsistencies. A cablegram from Christiana, Norway, of July 23, brings the question again to the attention of independent thinkers.

"Pastor Konow, of Berger," says the dispatch, "has caused a sensation in Norway by denying the bodily resurrection of the Savior. Konow belongs to the state or official church, and the cabinet decided to ask him to resign instead of dismissing him. The pastor refused to resign, and now there is widespread interest in the question as to what step the government will take next."

They who read the New Testament account of the resurrection, and accept it as gospel truth without thought, as is the case with the great mass of Bible readers, will be astonished to find the conflicting statements in the different Gospels. No two of them agree in presentation of facts. They are discrepant everywhere. Truthful witnesses each stating the same fact, will vary in language, but agree in ideas in every essential particular. Courts of justice suspicion perjury when several witnesses relating the same event agree in nothing. Should not the same principle prevail in religious affairs as in judicial?

Seat of the Soul.

A musician known as Professor Henry Price, of Mount Vernon, N. Y., announces, seemingly in good faith, that he has discovered the seat of the soul in man. Doctors in the dissecting room, have investigated every organ of the animal economy in search of that information, but the secret spring of life and immortality has evaded their search. The old prophets thought the heart was the fountain of the mind, but modern investigation converted that organ into a pumping apparatus, a force-pump at that, to send the blood coursing through the arteries, and back again through the veins, to the heart. The soul was not there.

Late anatomists located the seat of the soul in the pineal gland. This organ has some resemblance to the cone of pine. It is located near the base of the brain. As its purpose was unknown, it was an easy matter to credit it with those powers the investigator could not find elsewhere, hence it received the popular name of "the tree of life." Deeper research has charged it with other duties, so, until the retired musician put in his appearance all the world was groping in darkness on this interesting subject. This gentleman, as ambitious to know the truth as any of us, assures his readers that "The soul of a man is soft and gelatinous, small, practically shapeless, and situated beneath the first rib." That settles the question. It is as clear and positive that the location of the soul is found, as Rev. Zeb. Hetzel Copp is, that the infernal regions are in the sun.

Must be some sort of affinity between religious enthusiasm and bloodletting, judging from the fact that so many of those Kentucky feud-fights take place at church. Blood atonement, perhaps.—Woman's National Daily.

An Honest Inquiry.

Rev. J. Lloyd Jones, of Chicago, inquired: "Why is the modern man so loath to form church-going habits?" That was a vital question, propounded to twenty Ministers, eleven Professors in Chicago University, and fourteen laymen. The Congregationalist says:

"The first thing which impresses us in these letters, is the unconscious elimination of worship from the popular idea of church services. In all these forty-five letters the name of God appears only once, and no other definite allusion is made to him as a person. Worship is referred to only in the single sentence: 'The idea of worship has very little influence.'

Just listen:

"Nineteen of these letters were written by pastors of evangelical churches. Have men ceased to expect to meet him [God] in the midst of their fellow-worshipers? Have ministers forgot that the chief purpose of public service in the church is to bring men as worshipers consciously into the presence of God? This chief object of the church-going being eliminated, it is easy to account for the decline of church attendance."

The Progressive Thinker would suggest that since Infinite Intelligence is found to inhabit alike every atom in this boundless universe, his presence is no greater in church or cathedral than in every honest heart wherever located, so it is not necessary to gather under towering steeples or clanging bells to express adoration for his goodness to mortals.

Old Time Spirit Rappings.

In Baxter's Historical Discourse on Apparitions, written probably about 1660, occurs the following:

"There is now in London an understanding, sober, pious man, oft one of my hearers, who has an elder brother, a gentleman of considerable rank, who having formerly seemed pious, of late years does often fall into the sin of drunkenness. He often lodges long together here in his mother's house, and whensoever he is drunk and has slept himself sober, something knocks at his bedhead, as if one rapped on the wainscot. When they remove his bed it follows him. Besides other loud noises on other parts where he is that all the house hears, they have often watched him and tied his hands lest he should do it himself. But his mother declared she had seen his shoes under the bed taken up and "nothing visible to touch them." The drunken sinner refused, in spite of these solemn warnings, to abandon his evil ways."

Was the author of "Baxter's Saint's Rest," falsifying when he so wrote? or were there unseen intelligences demonstrating in those early years what became common two hundred years later? We incline to the opinion that the disembodied mind, whose indwelling home is all about us, has ever labored to hold converse with mortals, but the latter were slow in becoming acquainted with the true source of these communications.

A Sanitary Bible.

In some of the states witnesses sworn to give evidence in pending trials are required to kiss the Bible at the conclusion of the oath, as evidence of their sincerity. The covers of the sacred book becomes covered with filth and germs of disease, and thus transmit the foulest ailments from one user to another.

Now comes the information that a Bible bound in celluloid has been placed on the market which may be washed and disinfected at will, thus removing the disease-producing germ. But there is a new danger. The celluloid is highly inflammable, and a lighted cigar may accidentally set it on fire with the most destructive results.

Unfortunately the immoral character of the patriarchs mentioned in the holy book who are presented to us as exemplars for imitation, are not eliminated. Even Jacob, who stole his brother's birthright, and lied to his blind father by which it was gained, is still doing service for the encouragement of perjurers. The inside of the book should be cleansed as well the covers.

Legislation Implored.

We are paying too dear for the whistle. More than two thousand lives were sacrificed July 4th on the altar of mistaken patriotism! In Chicago were the usual large list of accidents. In New York 423 injured were treated in the hospitals. Crime, too, was on the rampage on the "glorious fourth."

Stringent legislation is an absolute need to prevent the discharge of firearms and explosion on the nation's natal day. And dealers should be prohibited from selling the destructive imitation of the war fiend. Not one in a thousand stop to think why they celebrate. Their ambition is to make a noise, and excel their neighbor in that direction, while invalids are tortured, and thoughtless children are killed to put a little money in the till of the conscienceless dealer. It is time the nuisance was abated.

"Leaders of the People to Infidelity."

The above is the charge made by a church organ against the clergy. The editor is distressed to see so many preachers accepting advanced thought, and rejecting the barbarism of the "Word of God."

There is but one way to remedy the growing evil, if evil it is. And that to prevent candidates for the ministry learning scientific truths.

A 7x9 God, hallowing to Adam "Where art thou?" and then playing tailor in manufacturing fig leaves into aprons, is too diminutive a God for an age like this.

DANGER AHEAD!

An Alarm Signal for Spiritualists to Consider.

Last week we sounded an ALARM SIGNAL, calling the attention of Spiritualists to the serious dangers threatening our ranks. A vast number of Spiritualists would have remained in ignorance of the grave crisis now arising if it had not been for The Progressive Thinker.

The arrest and fining of Mrs. Noyes $35.00 for practicing her mediumship in one of the cities of California, only exhibits THE TENDENCY of municipal authority all over the United States.

Next winter no doubt many bills will be introduced into legislatures, the object being to suppress mediumship, and no end of trouble will arise in reference to our Cause. Bill after bill has been introduced into the legislature of Illinois, and it has required money, courage, skill and sharp diplomacy to defeat them.

In this impending struggle THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER will be an important factor to consider. It calls the attention of Spiritualists to the dangers to our cause constantly arising, and keeps them informed of passing events, and giving them timely warning to be on the alert. It is the only Spiritualist paper that can give all the Occult and Spiritualistic news concerning our Cause.

Read carefully what J. L. Dryden, a prominent lawyer of Los Angeles, Cal., says: "By way of suggestion, whether it may meet the approval of the readers of The Progressive Thinker or not, in my opinion, Spiritualism, as an organic religious movement, IS FACING A GRAVE CRISIS. What is commonly known as the 'Police Power' of a government, or the taxing power, the power under which municipalities, counties, etc., are authorized to impose taxes upon property, franchises, professions, etc., for revenue purposes, IS PRACTICALLY AN UNLIMITED POWER; and the only reason doctors, priests, preachers, and such professions are not taxed is because the POWER BEHIND THE THRONE is the man who operates the ballot judicially. And until Spiritualists generate enough common sense to get together and secure representation in the law-making and law-executing functions, they may expect the burden of PUBLIC RESTRICTIONS TO GROW HEAVIER AND HEAVIER. It is easier and not one-half so expensive and humiliating to gain exemption from an ordinance while it is being passed, than it is to evade its provisions on the plea of religious liberty after it becomes a law."

Mr. Dryden is right in his assertion that Spiritualists are facing a VERY GRAVE CRISIS, and there can be no more efficient agent for good in any great struggle that may ensue against mediums than The Progressive Thinker. Extend its circulation among Spiritualists everywhere, and the result will be in every way beneficial. It should have at least 100,000 circulation.

Catholicism In Trouble.

The Poor Old Pope Is Grieving as the Anti-Clerical Movement Grows—His Power and Influence Is Declining in Europe.

ROME, Aug. 7.—Reports from various parts of the country indicate that the anti-clerical sentiment is spreading seriously. Two churches at Florence and one church at Pisa have been set on fire by mobs. Convents and monasteries have been attacked at Terni, Venice, Leghorn and other cities.

The Pope's decision is to suspend pilgrimages on the occasion of his sacerdotal jubilee in September, in addition to his desires to avoid possible public disturbances, has a political object, namely, to afford opportunity for a protest to the powers respecting the position of the Church in Italy. Meanwhile, despite numerous anti-clerical aggressions, the movement has not reached a situation where the whole Church can be said to be menaced.

Pope's Fourth Anniversary.

Yesterday was the fourth anniversary of the election of Pius X. It was not an occasion of rejoicing by the Church, for it is inflicted with troubles such as it has not had in more than five decades, and which are the chief cause of the Pope's ill health.

In South America the Church has been losing ground within the past few months, as witnessed by the demonstration against the Jesuit order in Chile and the recent Protestant proselytizing among the Italians emigrated to Argentina and Brazil, which has proved highly successful.

Australia is not making so much progress as it was hoped would be the case when the present Cardinal Moran, Archbishop of Sydney, was was promoted to the Sacred College. In fact, recent reports received from there show a great falling off in church attendance, as compared with conditions a few years ago.

The same is the case in England, where the Catholics, staunch as they always have been in their allegiance to the Church, are beginning to draw away, so that at the present moment, outside of the members of the Catholic aristocracy and the servants employed in their homes, and the large number of Irish Catholics who have emigrated to England, there are hardly enough people left to the Church to support it properly.

This situation was made known to the Vatican two or three years ago by a group of English Catholics of prominence, who feared Catholicity in the British Kingdom would die out. Their report was then turned down at the Vatican as absurd, but it is now a matter of public knowledge that the Vatican authorities have since ascertained the alleged facts to be correct.

The progress of Catholic missions in China, Japan and Australia has been very slow, notwithstanding the fact that millions have been spent there by the Congregation of the Propaganda for the support of the missionaries and the expenses of running the missions. Thousands of priests have been sent there, mostly from Rome or from institutions established for the purpose, but recent reports received at the Propaganda show that very little in the way of practical results were obtained.

Church Upheld in America.

There is only one continent regarding which the Pope and the cardinals have sufficient reason to congratulate themselves, and that is North America, in which it is useless to deny that the church has made rapid progress within the past few years. At the same time there are pessimists who point out the large number of losses suffered by the church because of the fact that thousands of Catholics, after emigrating to the United States or Canada, never set foot in the church, causing the generation following it to be lost to the church. American bishops have reported time and again to the Vatican that the class of Italian immigrants arriving in the United States is utterly unavailable for the support of the church. The same kind of reports have recently been received at the Vatican concerning the Polish population, the Hungarian, the Slav, and even the Spaniards and the South Americans who have emigrated to the Northern Republic.

Every one admits that Pius X. is very earnest in his desire to improve the conditions of the church and to "restore all things in Christ," as he expressed himself soon after his election. Some of the Roman prelates think he has been too earnest and has refused to adapt himself and his methods of working to the conditions of the present time with the subsequent loss which the church has suffered all over the world.

GENEVA, Aug. 7.—Finally a combination of Catholics, Socialists, Free Thinkers and others who advocate complete separation of State from Church, have succeeded in stopping the appropriating of public money in the Geneva Canton for religious purposes.

The struggle has been on for years in this "citadel of Protestantism," from which Calvin inspired the movement which gave birth to the Huguenots of France and Holland and the Puritans of Scotland and America.

The war waged against Catholicism in Switzerland ended with the treaty of Vienna in 1815, providing constitutional equality between the religions. Until after 1870 Protestantism and Catholicism lived in peace, each enjoying its share of the public money. But the activity of Mgr. Mermillod, who boasted in the name of the Pope that he would conquer the Huguenot stronghold, aroused the Protestants, and under John Carteret, in 1873, the people voted to expel the bishop and require all salaried ministers (priests and pastors alike) to take the civil oath and be chosen by parochial elections.

Pope Orders Clergy to Carry Firearms as a Protection.

ROME, Aug. 7.—The Pope called a special meeting of the Cardinals in order to obtain their advice as to the present situation in Italy and the best means to avert any harm from ecclesiastical persons and property.

The meeting discussed the recent numerous anti-clerical insults offered even to foreign ecclesiastics visiting Rome or belonging to foreign colleges, whose cases in several instances have already been referred to the diplomatic representatives of their countries within the last few weeks. It was decided that there was no use for the Pope to make any formal protest in the matter, and that the best way to protect the clergy of Rome and Italy would be to allow them to carry revolvers and stilettoes to defend themselves.

After the meeting Cardinal Respighi, as the special representative of the Pope, issued orders to all the Roman clergy to purchase firearms or other weapons. Accordingly all the parish priests and their assistants in this city, who have to be on the street often at night, now go armed.

All the religious institutions in this city have now been, or are being, provided with means of defense.

Anything to Draw a Crowd.

"The way to fill the church," says a Syracuse preacher," is to serve free soda and soft drinks."

A good warm dinner will also be a good drawing card. Either would be preferable to some of the methods churchmen have devised in the past for raising money to pay the preacher. Kissing-bees and sales of the sisters' ankles peeping under a curtain, the owner of which to accompany the purchaser to supper, though practiced for a time fell into disfavor as not exactly the thing in these modern times. They revived the history of the early love feasts, of which the least said the better.

The Progressive Thinker.

It Leads in Everything Pertaining to Advancement.

Hardly a week passes that I do not receive sample copies of various Occult, Psychic, Spiritualist, and New Thought publications. All of them have interesting reading matter and all have some real GOOD things in them. When I say GOOD, I mean USEFUL things, for to me a thing may be nice, it may be even beautiful, but it is not really GOOD unless it is USEFUL.

It is, indeed, refreshing to learn of the many sources from which truth and knowledge is being expressed and of the many means that are being employed to spread the same, BUT OF ALL OF THEM THERE IS NOT ONE THAT EXTENDS TO ITS PATRONS UNDER ONE COVER SUCH COMPLETE LESSONS AS ARE RECEIVED WEEKLY IN THE COLUMNS OF THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

I frequently hear people say that they like The Progressive Thinker well enough, but they would like it much better if the editor would not bother himself about frauds and impostors, but instead devote all of his space to lectures and topics of progression generally.

To them I want to answer that there is no better way to help you in your individual growth than by presenting to you something that will AROUSE YOU to individual thinking. If The Progressive Thinker would print only things in which you believe and with which you fully agree, you would no doubt fold your hands in blissful satisfaction and say AMEN! But what would you, as a soul, have gained by that? Nothing at all. On the other hand when The Progressive Thinker, along with the things you like and approve, also prints some things that you do not understand or do not agree with, then YOUR MIND IS AROUSED and your brain vibrates at a higher rate of speed, and you reason things out according to the LIGHT YOU HAVE, and with each thought vibration you grow stronger in mind and richer in intellect.

The Progressive Thinker does not want to fill us with predigested food; but, on the contrary, it presents thoughts TO MAKE US THINK. It offers us nourishment in its original state, which we, by our own effort, must masticate thoroughly by independent thought if we wish to assimilate the nutritious ingredients thereof.

We cannot deal justly with any problem by hearing only the one side of the question; it is necessary at all times to know the pro and con in order to arrive at logical conclusions. If, therefore, we find anything in the columns of The Progressive Thinker that rouses us to do some real hard thinking, let us not feel that we have met an enemy, but, instead, let us recognize THE FRIEND who is waking us up, and causing us to stir about. Let us be willing to admit that every such stir makes us stronger and more independent. Let us enjoy all publications that please and entertain us, and let us, at the same time, cheerfully receive and retain our serious yet kind teacher, THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER.

OUTWARD DRIFTING.

"Come, Katharine, close to my side,
And bend your fair head low;
I want to whisper, Katherine,
Good-bye, before I go.
I want to feel the tender touch
Of your endearing hands
Once more before I drift, dear heart,
To yonder star-lit strands.

"I want to hear the accent of
Your voice so fondly sweet;
I want it lingering in my ears
When I the angels greet.
'Twill sweeten e'en the music of
The spheres where seraphs dwell,
'Twill carol in the chorus of
The choir invisible.

'Look! look! dear heart! The pallid light
That comes with dawning day,
While o'er the tide a sail, dear heart,
Is coming on its way.
'Tis coming from the borders of
A land supremely fair,
And with the falling of the night
'Twill bear me, loved one, there.

"Oh, do not let the teardrops fringe
Your lashes dark and long;
Remember that earth's silence breaks
Into celestial song.
That every line that pain has wrought,
And ev'ry anguish now
The soothing hand of death shall smooth
Forever from my brow.

"Remember, oh, my Katherine,
Those girded shores beyond
Where stand the palms so grandly forth,
Each with its trembling frond;
Where seas throw up their silver spray
Along the morn-lit shore,
In lullabies of prayer and psalm
Forever, ever more.

"Remember, too, my Katherine,
When haze of twilight falls
And o'er the world the nightingale
Into the silence calls;
Remember, dear, the seas that break
Upon a spirit shore,
That oft the pallid boatman brings
The loved and lost once more.

"Then lean your head and listen, dear,
There at the casement wide,
And through the silence you shall hear
The flowing of the tide:
And you shall see the eyes unveiled
There on the spirit main
The bark that from the harbor sailed
Drift back, drift back again.

"Just take my hands, dear one, I pray,
And in the silence hold
Them until I shall slip away
Into the mists that fold
The gray old earth from morning light.
Oh, let me, let me feel
Their clinging clasp so warm and tight,
Till death shall drift the keel.

"Draw closer to me, Katherine,
And bend your fair head low;
I want to whisper, Katherine,
Good-bye before I go.
I want to feel the tender touch
Of your endearing hands
Once more before I drift, dear heart,
To yonder star-lit strands."

GENIUS.

The power that dazzles mortal eyes
Is oft but perseverance in disguise.
Continued effort of it implies,
In spite of countless falls the power to rise.

'Twixt failure and success, the point's so fine,
Men sometimes know not when they touch the line,
Just when the pearl was waiting one more plunge,
How many a struggler has thrown up the sponge.

No real fall as long as one still tries,
For seeming set-backs make the strong man rise.
There's no defeat in truth, save from within,
Unless you're beaten there you're bound to win.

THE HUMAN SOUL.

Dictated by a Spirit Voice to Mrs. May A. Price, Medium.

From the realms of endless time,
Into future space doth climb
Conscious force, embodied soul,
Seeking yet a higher goal.
How the soul first lived to learn
Of its powers, and how turn
From the mineral to the man—
Guess the riddle, you who can.

You who with great wisdom teach
Of the sand on yonder beach,
Of the stars that shine by night,
Holding pow'r o'er life so tight,
That wherever we may stray
God's great laws did mark the way
For our weary feet to walk,
And no power their sway can balk.

But an overruling love
Shines upon us from above,
Gives to each a conscious life.
Evolution marks the strife
Of the soul's unfolding growth.
How we came, and why so loth
To advance upon our way
Answer this for us, we pray.

Why did man first learn to dwell
In a magnet as a shell
As a mineral soul confined
'Till in the flower its chains untwined?
Why the beast in yonder dell
Gave the flower a place to dwell?
Why has man expressed them all
In a great magnetic ball?

In the aura of his life
Colored with the mingled strife
He is seen to weave about him
Streaks of color pale and dim;
Also those of sombre hue,
Red and gold, and heaven's own blue.
Do these rainbow colors tell
How he in the past did dwell?

Do they tell why he must go
To some place he does not know?
Do the atoms of his life,
Mingling in a ceaseless strife,
Building for a higher growth,
Making soul and body both,
One great power of God in man?
Tell me, tell me, you who can.

I have sought to live and grow,
And the truth of life to know.
I would make my life so sweet
That no secret e'er so deep,
Hidden in great nature's breast,
Clothed in matter and so dressed
That the forms walk out in view,
In the way I tell to you.

I did to the great life pray:
"Tell me, tell me, tell the way
Of the soul. From whence it came,
And how much of life is flame.
How we live and how we know
That to higher life we go?
Still the torture of the thought
That our loved ones are as naught."

And the answer came so sweet,
Came my waiting soul to greet;
"You are all of God's great life,
Throbbing, pulsing with the strife
Of the endless Universe.
Oh, the light within you see
Tiny though that light may be,
It will lead to wisdom's gate.

"Would you know from whence you came?
Others seek to know the same,
And the light within doth touch,
That great light that holds so much.
Back to nature you must go,
Back to where the seed doth grow;
Back of flower, of tree, of life,
That we call this earthly strife.

"Back of all, a rainbow riseth,
Hoop of promise for all time,
And the magnet of our body
Was drawn from it line on line.
In the center of the rainbow
Music played for nature's dance;
Music, rhythm, soft and low,
Nothing ever came by chance.

"To the harmony of music
Soul flied forth in endless chain;
Love and life was power magnetic,
All go forth, not back again.
But the love that holds together
Earthly lives so sweet and dear,
Is the universal Father,
Is electric light so clear.

"Thought is but the conscious struggle
To express what each soul knows;
Knowledge gathered from the tangle
As it in separate earth-form grows.
Interblended are the forces,
Bound in groups, soul-linked to soul,
Yet the law of life so blesses
Each may hold the life of all."

The Question of Spirit Identity.

A Lecture by W. J. Colville, in Which He Elucidates in a Very Interesting Manner Many Important Questions.

The vexed question of spirit identity is one which is always liable to occasion considerable discussion, chiefly by reason of the fact that what appears thoroughly conclusive to some types of mind seem inconclusive to others. It is, therefore, necessary to approach this immense and vital subject not only entirely free from prejudice, but also fortified with clear understanding of the actual worth of the various theories now submitted for popular acceptance as substitutes for what is often termed the spiritualistic hypothesis.

We are often asked whether it is possible for us to explain clearly how we discriminate between telepathic and spiritistic messages. Frankly, we admit that it is often quite beyond our present ability to discriminate completely between them, but this lack of ability always to discriminate, far from weakening the testimony favorable to simple Spiritualism, only necessitates a reconsideration of the entire problem of our human constitution before we attempt to formulate an inclusive theory to explain the entire bulk of our diversified psychic experiences. A very large number of thoughtful readers have been much impressed by Thomson Jay Hudson's five celebrated books: "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," "A Scientific Demonstration of the Future Life," "The Divine Pedigree of Man," "The Law of Mental Medicine," and "The Evolution of the Soul," in which the hypothesis known as the dual theory of the mind is very fully and forcibly expounded. Professor Hudson, in common with many other able writers, labors to some extent under a burden of preconception adverse to Spiritualism, which often mars the beauty and consistency of his otherwise excellent literary work. The evidence for telepathy which this author puts forward is very strong, and in some instances unimpeachable, but the alleged evidence against Spiritualism is rationally inadmissible, because it is of a singular negative and suppositious character. We must face our problem bravely, not attempting to disguise the fact that during the past several years much evidence has accumulated in favor of simple telepathy which some over-enthusiastic Spiritualists may have been liable to undervalue because it has been erroneously supposed that, if accepted, it would tend against the interests of the cause which is nearest of all to their hearts. A better understanding of telepathy, and a fuller comprehension of what is logically involved in Hudson's "two minds" theory, may serve to set many doubters at rest. We must not forget that the title of Hudson's second book is utterly misleading and an entire misnomer, if the evidences of telepathy prove communion between friends on earth but throw no light on the condition of those who have "crossed the border." The author persistently claims that of our two minds, which he persistently designates objective and subjective, the former perishes at the time of physical dissolution, but the latter lives on and finds a sphere for fuller and more perfect functioning than it ever enjoyed on earth. This theory accounts for telepathy as a sort of foretaste of the method of communion between friendly entities which will prevail unceasingly in the future life. The only flaw that we have been able to detect in Hudson's chain of reasoning is the poor opinion he seems to entertain of the moral integrity of the subjective mind, coupled with the utterly foundationless assertion that overwhelming evidence of unrestricted telepathy will drive Spiritualists, ere long, even out of that "last ditch" in which they are now desperately fighting (according to Hudson) to save a lost cause and rescue a forlorn hope.

Reasonable identification of telepathy with direct spirit communion, instead of introducing a new perplexity and further complicating an already complicated situation, introduces us for the first time to an orderly, harmonious, and easily comprehended interpretation of many analogous facts and parallel experiences which have long perplexed the average student of psychic phenomena, though there have always been singularly luminous exponents of mental and spiritual science and philosophy, who have gone a long distance on the road which must lead eventually to universal understanding of man as a spiritual being.

We have frequently been asked to define clearly wherein consists the difference between a message received from a friend yet on earth, and a similar communication from one who has "passed over." Spiritualistic literature has largely been encumbered with two oft-repeated phrases, "spirit return and "spirits coming back to earth." These phrases are to a large extent misleading, for, though there are instances where such language may accurately and adequately describe the nature of certain manifestations, such expressions do not by any means correctly serve to describe the actual experiences of the great majority of seers and seeresses of ancient or modern times. "Intromission to the spiritual state" is a phrase full of deep significance, and, were it used more frequently, it would serve to elucidate many a problem of clairvoyance, clairaudience, clairsentience, and psychometry. Professors Denton and Buchanan, in their learned dissertations concerning psychometry, illustrated by numerous recitals of personal experience, have insisted that a true psychometer perceives the aura of an object, and can at times distinctly see into the spirit world and become consciously en rapport with denizens thereof. Such quickened perception may fairly be considered as in some degree an anticipation of the means of intercourse we shall enjoy one with another when we have bade farewell to our robes of flesh.

We may surely claim that if we are called upon to identify those intelligent beings with whom we are in communication, we must apply the same laws of evidence to this matter as to questions of individual identification when only mundane matters are involved. To identify a fellow-being in any world is not always easy, and indeed it often is found to be extremely difficult when we rely solely on outward tests. "The hands are the hands of Esau, but the voice is the voice of Jacob" is a vivid Scriptural instance of the extreme difficulty experienced by an ancient patriarch in deciding which of his two sons was actually in his presence. The blindness of Isaac is easily typical of the condition in which most people are found when some sort of deception is successfully practiced upon them. Evidences of two kinds are presented together. One set of evidences appeal to feeling, the other to intelligence. We judge people very often by outward appearances which we subsequently find to have been altogether deceptive, and if it be admitted in any degree that there are deceiving spirits who sometimes visit us, we are obviously placed in precisely the same position with reference to them as with regard to persons yet on earth who play us false because we are open to deception. The difficulties attending spirit identification are not necessarily greater than those surrounding the identity of persons who are yet encased in mortal garments.

No purely external tests are always valid. Indeed, to place extreme reliance upon such alone is to encourage swindling, and play into the hands of forgers who are usually very capable of simulating perfectly the outward garb of those they seek to personate. Testimonials, references, and letters of introduction constitute no infallible criteria, as these may all be counterfeit or stolen. The only sure way to identify any one absolutely is by cultivating psychic perceptiveness, and this is more apt to be strongly developed in highly sensitive persons than in any others. Deception is, however, less likely to be practiced on the spiritual than on the material side of existence, because the motive to deceive is far less strong. Expectation of worldly gain urges most deceivers on earth to ply their nefarious vocation, and it may be safely assumed that at least ninety per cent of all deceptions would vanish from the earth if no financial or other ulterior gain could accrue from it. To palm oneself off as another would be objectless folly in which very few people wold care to indulge did they not think they saw in such deception a means for self-enrichment or aggrandizement.

It may with some fairness be assumed that when communicating intelligences who display only very meager intelligence profess to be very celebrated and illustrious personages, they may be hankering for the incense of adulation, but when no great names are given and no pretentious claims are made, it is difficult to see what reason could be fairly given for simply stupid masquerading or deliberate misrepresentation of any sort. We know from experience that auto-suggestion on the part of the alleged recipient of a spiritual communication may account for some instances of falsification, especially when such self-deception tends largely to self-glorification or the gratifying of personal vanity. A great drawback to untainted spirit communion is the prejudice and vanity of many sensitives, but this very foolishness on their part sometimes serves to reveal an aspect of truth which is frequently neglected, viz., that there may be perfect sincerity and frankness on the side of the unseen communicator, while the person to whom the communication is made may be the sole suggester of the deceptive element.

A lady in one of the Southern States of America declared that she was in direct communion with George Washington, the first president of the United States; but her friends as a rule laughed at her claim, because by means of automatic writing through the lady's hand, and by means of trance speaking through her lips, "George Washington" expressed himself most ungrammatically and in negro dialect. On a notable occasion when "George Washington" was speaking through this lady's mediumship, he was distinctly seen by a fine clairvoyant who had been invited to a seance, and at the conclusion of the address this seeress described what she had witnessed during its delivery, which was the presence of a very decided African of Ethiopian tint and cast of feature, and who appeared strongly attached to the lady through whose mediumship he had been able to deliver a lengthy message. On being requested to describe all she saw, the seeress went on to give particulars of a venerable old servant who had been named "George Washington," who had been a faithful retainer of the family prior to the Emancipation Proclamation issued in 1865, and had in that year steadily refused to accept his freedom, as he dearly loved the old estate and was devotedly attached to his master and mistress, parents of the lady through whom he was then able to communicate, and whom he had often nursed during her earliest girlhood, ere he passed to spirit life, when she was not over eight years of age. That simple incident served to explain the entire problem, and it afforded a thoroughly rational explanation of a phenomenon belonging to a class, by no means uncommon in America, who have led to denunciations of fraud where none existed—theories of wicked personating spirits, and many other vagaries of unbalanced judgment—to say nothing of the would-be clever remark made by people who were more "smart" than wise, that it must be a terrible thing to die if in our post mortem condition we so quickly and sadly deteriorate. An instance like the foregoing will bear thorough sifting, and it is surely much easier to explain such an instance in the light of direct spirit communion than by straining an auto-suggestive or telepathic hypothesis to the breaking point to invent an improbable, in place of a probable, interpretation. Had the lady referred to suggested the matter to herself she would certainly have been fairly grammatical, as she was a comparatively well-educated woman, and not being a negress she would not have clothed an imaginary message from George Washington, as she conceived of him, in negro dialect. Admitting telepathy, mental telegraphy, or telephony, or aught else that is in any measure psychical, nothing can well be more likely than that a good old negro who had been for forty years a faithful servant to the family residing on that particular estate, should seek an avenue of communion with it through the agency of a member to whom he had been greatly attached just before he passed into the realm of spirit.

It is doubtless true that many spirits leave the earth and all pertaining to it, very shortly after the demise of the physical body, while others remain closely connected with the scenes of their earth existence, not because they are earth-bound in the sense of being unhappy creatures who cannot, on account of their sensual vices, rise above the mundane level, but because their affections still cling to persons and places with which they have enjoyed pleasing associations up to the latest moment of their terrestrial existence. Andrew Jackson Davis, as well as Swedenborg, and many other gifted seers, have said much concerning the many spheres in this solar system encircling the various planets, which have often been numbered from one to seven, and then again divided and subdivided into circles within circles, like wheels within wheels in Ezekiel's visions; and those who have become strongly attracted to such teaching—and their name is legion—have brought forward the revelations of these prophets to disavow the declaration, made from a somewhat different standpoint, that multitudes of spirits cannot return to earth as they have not yet taken their departure from this planet's immediate atmosphere, or even from the exact localities where a large portion of their earthly days were spent in work or amusements in which they took a decided interest.

When indulging in personal reminiscences, I often narrate an instance of what seems to me clear evidence of spirit identity. When I was in Australia, in 1900-1, I frequently employed the services of a bright, enterprising young man, who was an excellent typist, and to whom I dictated portions of several books and numerous magazine articles. Before taking my last earthly farewell of this young gentleman, on the eve of his departure for New Guinea, whither he went to occupy a post of trust and influence, he said to me that he hoped when I returned to England he might accompany me on the ocean, as he much desired, though by birth an Australian, to visit the Mother Country, which, though 12,000 miles distant, is, invariably called "home" by many Australasians. My reply was that though I could not definitely foresee my own plans for the near future, and could, therefore, promise nothing, I held myself in full readiness to fall in with his wishes should opportunity occur to favor the carrying out of the project. Shortly after his arrival in New Guinea, in full possession of his health, and seemingly of vigorous constitution, he caught the local fever, and in three days he had made his exit from the mortal body. I cannot say that he was very frequently in my thoughts, or that his loss would seem to me irreparable; but there was a link of sympathy between us which made it possible for him to manifest his presence to me on more than one occasion during three distinct stages of my voyage from Sydney, via New Zealand and across America, to England. The first time he attempted to make himself known to me was between Sydney and Auckland, but as I was seldom alone during the four brief days that voyage occupied I cannot remember any very definite evidence of his identity, though I was fully conscious of his presence. The second visit which I know he made me was en route to California, when I had a large cabin to myself on the "Sonoma," and not being much acquainted with any of my fellow passengers, I had many opportunities for silent and uninterrupted meditation. I well remember distinctly feeling the presence of my young friend with me, just as I had known him in Australia, and so real and tangible was the sense of that presence that it seemed exactly as though another person was sharing the cabin with me. I was quite awake, perfectly calm, and fully able to determine all he said to me, and yet I am certain I heard nothing with my external ears except the motion of the vessel passing through the water. Not only did I feel, or sense, his presence, but he gave me information concerning his situation in New Guinea, and the circumstances of his life there, which I subsequently learned, through correspondence with a mutual acquaintance, was correct in every detail. On the third occasion, when I as strongly realized his presence, I was nearing Plymouth on my voyage from New York, in February, 1902, and on that occasion he gave me information concerning his present state and occupation, and told me several things in regard to my own future, which have since been fully verified. Such definite, direct, and truthful communications certainly do not proceed from lying spirits, nor do they emanate from my own sub-self, whose reputation for veracity and sanity I am naturally interested to maintain; and when I speak a good word for my own subjective mind—which is to live hereafter when my objective mind has perished—I stand up equally for the corresponding sub-selves or subjective minds of all my neighbors. It is immeasurably more rational to maintain a reasonable spiritualistic version of such facts as I have just related than to invent, and uphold at all hazard, a contradictory and extremely complicated theory of the mysteries of telepathy, which serves to befog far more than to enlighten rational inquirers. In seeking to reply definitely to the very natural inquiry whether there is any marked difference in appearance between the psychic, or astral, body of a person yet on earth, and of one who has parted company with earthly raiments, I venture to suggest that only when the factor of clairvoyance is added to telepathy is this clearly determinable. Usually the appearance to psychic vision of one who has left the flesh is more ethereal than that of one who is still connected with it, but when only a sense of presence is realized, and intelligence is inwardly communicated, it is often impossoble to decide whether the despatch in question is being received from a friend yet on earth or from one who is more frequently designated a "spirit."

Unnecessary difficulties in the way of rational spiritual identification are created by many persons who evidently mistake identity which pertains to abiding individuality for the most external incidences of ever-fluctuating exterior personality. Such questions are often raised as, "If you see my father can you describe his appearance? does he wear a beard? how is he dressed?" and much else of the same almost ridiculous character. A little sober reflection must convince the veriest tyro that such questions, answered one way or another, cannot determine identity. We all know that fashions alter and habits change with wonderful rapidity, and it is by no means difficult for a man to remove a full beard in a few moments, or let one grow in a few weeks, thereby completely altering one aspect of his appearance. Black hair easily turns white, stout persons grow thin, and slender persons become stout, very frequently, while changes wrought by passing years and varying emotions frequently suffice to render old photographs, once speaking likenesses, no longer discernible, unless to the acutest student of physiognomy. It is, however, continually declared that clairvoyants see our spirit friends as they were when we last beheld them or as they appeared when we were most intimately associated with them. And such testimony, founded, as it often is, on actual fact, needs to be interpreted in the light of other knowledge than that obtainable by simple and often mysterious clairvoyance. Astral pictures are often beheld in the air of old houses, where certain people have lived long periods, and to which they have become greatly attached, and these psychic photographs are often mistaken for the actual presence of departed spirits by persons who rely on sight as evidence apart from feeling or manifest intelligence. A fact in my own experience may serve to illustrate two features of this portion of the subject of spirit identity.

Some years ago I was sojourning in an old country house which had been the abiding place of a single family ever since its erection. The room assigned me as a sleeping apartment had, as I afterwards learned, been for many years the special working and reading room of a maiden aunt who had been quite a second mother to the family. In that room she had spent a great part of her time during her latest years on earth, and one of her favorite occupations was knitting stockings by the fire. For four nights in succession, during my occupancy of that room, did I see that quiet elderly lady, with knitting in her hands, seated before a fire in the grate, which was at that season of the year filled with a summer ornament. At first I thought I must be actually in communion with the kindly, placid dame, and that she might have a message to convey through me to some member of the household; but, concentrate my thoughts and attention intently as I could upon the vision, I could detect no animation, nor could I receive even the faintest intimation of intelligence. The people with whom I was residing were not at all averse to Spiritualism, and when I told them exactly what I had seen four nights in succession in that particular bedroom, they all agreed that it was an exact description of their aunt, even to the smooth bands of brown front hair, and the cap with lilac satin ribbons tied under the chin; but they, in common with myself, wondered why, if I could see their aunt so clearly, I never saw her move and could obtain no impression of her intelligence. On the fifth night of my occupancy of that apartment I experienced a totally different sensation in connection with the same apparition, which I again beheld stationary and unresponsive as before; but on this occasion, hovering over the astral picture I beheld a radiant, youthful form bearing a certain family resemblance to the abiding simulacrum, but instinct with the fire and energy of active life and operating intelligence. Contemporaneously with this new additional experience, information clearly flowed into some receptacle of my consciousness, causing me to become aware that the original of the portrait desired her nieces and nephews to find in her old writing desk certain papers she had written long ago, and which she desired should be revised, edited and published. Following the minute directions given me by this guiding intelligence, I accompanied several members of the family to a lumber room in which many discarded articles of furniture had long been stored; and there among them stood an ancient escritoire, in which we found a completed story setting forth a romantic and highly edifying history of marvelous episodes in what the world would doubtless have looked upon as a secluded and uneventful career. After this startling confirmation of the veracity of my vision, we formed a private family circle for further investigation, and thereat, by means of automatic writing, supplemented by clairvoyance, we verified many extraordinary statements made by this living relative of the family, who assured us that she was no longer sitting by a fire engaged in knitting, but most actively employed in spiritual occupations, which did not, however, alienate her in the least from her old associates but, on the contrary, kept her in close vital touch with all of them, though in a subtler and more ethereal manner than before she had quitted the material frame.

An interesting experience of my own dates back to the autumn of 1899, shortly before my first visit to Australia. I had long known Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten, but my first interview with her was in 1877, at a lecture delivered in Manchester, when she was a middle-aged woman, dressed in much the same style as she continued to adopt till she finally withdrew from the public platform. Since her passing to spirit life, this earnest worker has occasionally made herself distinctly known to me, both on and off the platform, and in November, 1899, I distinctly saw in connection with a most forceful realization of her close proximity, the likeness of a radiant maiden with light golden curls, somewhat resembling the earliest pictures of Mrs. Richmond when she was Cora Hatch, but in no way suggesting Mrs. Britten to me by the appearance. I never could have understood that vision had I not visited Mrs. Wilkinson (Mrs. Britten's sister), about a month later, and, while her guest in Manchester, been shown a picture taken many years ago, representing Emma Hardinge in youthful costume as "Queen of the Fairies." This picture represents the young lady who afterwards became Mrs. Britten with the flaxen ringlets, and in every way precisely as she showed herself to me on the occasion of my vision. Had I suggested to myself a similitude of Mrs. Britten, I should certainly have conjured up from the depths of memory a likeness of her as I had known her; and when I interrogated her spiritually through the mediumship of automatic writing, subsequent to beholding the portrait at Mrs. Wilkinson's, the following message was communicated: "I knew you were going to my sister's; therefore I wished to give you a singular test of my identity, which I find I have succeeded in doing; and there is another reason why I showed myself to you thus—I wished to impress you with the knowledge that I can now show myself in various forms to my friends, and my present appearance far more closely resembles that of my youth on earth than that of my later age."

"How do we know each other here?" is quite as grave a question as "Shall we know each other there?" I remember some years ago, in New York, being asked by a mutual friend to meet a gentleman who was returning to America after ten years' residence in Germany, and who was described to me from a portrait as a slender man with jet-black hair. And such he doubtless was when he embarked for Germany, but during the decade of years he had spent in Europe, he had grown decidedly corpulent and his hair had become positively white. I nevertheless knew him by instinct, though I had never met him previously, and I accosted him by name, greatly to his surprise, directly he had left the steamer. Had I been slavishly governed by my physical senses instead of trusting to some surer and subtler faculty of discernment, I should certainly have failed to acknowleedge him, so greatly did he differ in appearance from the description I had been given of him. We cannot expect that when we change in outward aspects thus rapidly on earth, we shall remain stationary in external aspect in the world of spirits. There is, however, this to be said concerning relatively fixed appearance in the life beyond. We are not there, as here, so greatly affected by outward climate, and outward appearance changes only as it indicates alterations in our interior state. Such is the unanimous and unfaltering verdict of spiritual testifiers wherever they have made their presence known.

And now, finally, concerning the weighing of evidence in the scales of reason. We may certainly maintain in the face of all opposition that every individual communication should be judged on its particular merits, and neither be accepted nor rejected on the merits or demerits of any other submitted message. We cannot believe, unless we part company with reason, that we are victims of stupid or wicked deception in cases where the teachings given are of the highest moral import, and where the information offered is proved correct in every detail as far as we can possibly verify it. The crude and intricate theories now afloat to discredit evidence of spirit intercourse are far more difficult and far less probable than the plain satisfactory conclusion long ago reached by all intelligent and dispassionate inquirers—that we do on many occasions receive convincing proof of the identity of communicating spirits. In conclusion, let us look for an instant at the mental characteristics of a few of the typical students of psychic phenomena who during recent years have become thoroughly satisfied that in many instances, though not in all, proof positive of spirit identity has been obtained. Professor Hodgson and Dr. Myers were thoroughly satisfied at length, through Mrs. Piper's mediumship and that of other sensitives; and so were Miss Lillian Whiting and Rev. Minot J. Savage, as well as many other representative and cautious investigators.

These famous persons had nothing to gain and possibly something to lose, by outspoken advocacy

"ACTINA" A BLESSING

To Those Afflicted With Eye Troubles.

Every person with impaired eyesight or suffering from weak or diseased eyes should write for our latest free booklet, entitled "Positive Evidence."

The records of phenomenal cures by the "Actina" treatment, as described therein by grateful patients themselves—names and addresses given—will satisfy the most skeptical that "Actina" is not only a remarkable, simple and harmless invention, but restores eyesight even after specialists have pronounced cases incurable.

Following are a few of the successes produced by "Actina," but more fully described in our free booklet.

A Chicago gentleman, after suffering 12 months with inflammation of the iris, used "Actina" a few weeks. He says he can now see as well and as far as anybody.

An Iowa lady writes that after being under treatment of specialists for 15 years, "Actina" completely restored her eyesight and she no longer uses glasses.

Astigmatism and granulated lids impaired the eyesight of a Hartford (Conn.) lady. Specialists failed to cure. As a last resort, against advice of friends, she tried "Actina." She writes:—"For many months I have written almost daily without glasses. No more pain in my eyes and drooping eyelid is restored."

"Actina" removed a cataract from the eye of an Oklahoma lady; relieved the closure of a tear duct for a well known Chicago lady, and in scores of instances people have been able to discard eyeglasses through the faithful use of "Actina." To get an idea of the enthusiasm of our patients the entire letters as printed in our book should be read.

"Actina is made on common sense principles. Its simplicity, effectiveness and lasting qualities will appeal to any one that will investigate. Let us send you one on two weeks' trial. Use it as often as you please and if you are not benefited, or for any other reason are dissatisfied, send it back and no charge will be made. Write today. Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the most famous woman author in America, says of this book: "It contains a fortune in value if you practice the simple exercises given. The Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Ill., held a picnic, at Corey's Bluff, south of the city, on Sunday, July 29. There was a good attendance, and all enjoyed themselves as become Spiritualists. The object of such an assemblage is to give opportunity for members and friends enlisted in a common cause to become better acquainted. Another like assemblage will be held at the beautiful place of the President of the society, Daniel C. McDougall, Esq., 2520 West State street, on Sunday, August 18. Everybody, his wife and cousins, should be there with a basket full of goodies, for an all-day good time. It will be the prelude to the beginning of the lecture season in September, and preparatory to it.

The First Spiritual Church of Santa Cruz held an interesting meeting last Sunday evening at Native Sons Hall. The decorations on the platform were fine. On an easel covered with the American flag was placed the charter. Festoons of flowers draped the easel and charter, making a very pretty picture. The unveiling of the charter and the installation of officers proved, from a spiritual standpoint, one of great interest and pleasure to the many who were present. Rev. Katie Heussman-Harveston, the pastor and organizer of the church, through he higher gifts of spiritual inspiration beautifully illustrated symbolically with a bunch of different colored flowers she held in her hand, the obligation and duty of each officer toward the church as a body organized on the principle of universal and spiritual good to all mankind. After some good musical selections by C. Miller, the pastor delivered a soul-stirring lecture on the subject, "Who Are the Greatest Souls on Earth, the Contempted or the Sinners?" This discourse proving of great interest and instruction, a grand feast of light and truth to all present. The church will now work under the State and National Spiritual Association. The application for charter was accompanied by a list of 62 names, over twice as many as required to secure a charter. Let truth and light ever shine, is our motto.—Santa Cruz, Cal., Sentinel.

Mr. Harden writes from Toronto, Canada: "We are holding very successful meetings in Occident Hall, Toronto, Ont., Sunday, July 27. We were ably assisted by Mr. Hynes of New Zealand, with an address, also by Mr. Ravell of Toronto, with messages, who is well known to most Spiritualists here. Our week night meetings are also well attended."

Marietta Hammer writes from Clinton Camp: "Spiritualism is given here upon the rostrum from an advanced Spiritual plane, by those who have been upon the platform. Mr. W. F. Peck, President of the M. V. S. A., gave a fine discourse the 4th, upon the subject of "A. J. Davis, The 19th Century Seer." Mr. Thomas Grimshaw gave us a fine inspirational lecture upon "Angel Ministry," and if we had become somewhat pessimistic in regard to the future of Spiritualism, after listening to the spirit intelligences speaking through his organism, we felt that we need not fear that our cause will triumph over all retrogressive agencies which retard the onward march of progressive truth."

T. J. McFeron writes from San Diego, Cal.: "Rev. John W. Ring has been lecturing for us since the last of March, and has held his audiences right up to a full house every Sunday evening. Sunday, August 4, was his last day here, for the present engagement, as he will be at Harmony Grove Camp (Escondido) for the opening on August 11, and go from there on East to fill previous engagements. Brother Ring's work among us has truly been a great boon to this society just at this time, as well as a very great benefit to the community a large. He gave us a masterly discourse on August 28, on the subject, "The Golden Age."

The San Diego, Cal., Union says: "At 3 o'clock Rev. John W. Ring gave an interesting address of "The Tommorrow of Spiritualism." "Spiritualism," said Rev. Ring, "is the light of knowledge, the soul of love and the fullness of comfort come to bless those who seek facts, cherish human development and appreciate sympathy. Its presence in the early church (filling the apostles with the Holy Ghost) and the many later evidences, such as the manifestations in the Wesley family leading to the founding of the Methodist church, convince the thoughful of its useful career. So on it moves in its matchless growth and like the sun behind the cloud but waits the passing of prejudice and superstition to bless the children of men. At night "The Golden Age" was elaborated upon from a Spiritualistic standpoint."

Minnie Eastman Hanvey writes: "The Golden Rule Society held services Sunday, August 3, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. It was the first meeting since the consolidation of the two societies, "The Golden Star Center" and "The Golden Rule." The house was filled to its utmost capacity. The speaker, Mrs. Nellie Kusserow, delivered a most able address, which was fully appreciated by all. By special request she gave several messages; other message bearers were, Mrs. Clybourne, Mrs. Harper, and Mr. Travis. Our pastor, Mrs. Nora E. Hill is at present attending the Spiritualist Camp Meeting at Grand Ledge, Mich. She writes she is having a most delightful time. Watch for notice of Mass Meeting soon to be held in Star Lodge Hall."

Rev. Alice Baker of Dallas, Texas, has been very sick, and she wishes to extend thanks to those who have been so patient over unanswered official letters.

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

Mrs Elizabeth Schauss writes from Toledo, Ohio: "On July 28, a mass meeting of Spiritualists was held in the grove adjoining the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. Davis, near Ida, Mich. Dr. J. Lyle, leader of the Order of Love, Light, and Truth, had charge of the services. Many good and useful thoughts found expression, and the large gathering of people from the surrounding country was most appreciative. On Sunday, September 8, a like meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Mortimer, at Samaria, Mich. Services will be held at 10:30 a. m., and 2 p. m. A goodly number from Toledo will attend. Several message mediums are expected to be present. There will also be several speakers, including myself."

Edith Smith Writes from Wheaton, Ill: "The Truth Seekers Society resumed its meetings at the home of Mr. Brookins, on the first Saturday in June. With the efficient work of Mrs. J. Staner Adams, who is with us each week, giving words of encouragement and many loving messages which are readily recognized, our members are increasing and much good is being done. We wish through the columns of your paper to thank Mrs. Adams, for the unselfish devotion she has manifested in her efforts to assist us in every way possible; coming to us whenever needed, regardless of her own pleasure. We appreciate kindness and rejoice that the Fraternal Order has such noble workers in its ranks as Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Dr. Caird, who came with sister Adams on July 6th, helping in the good work. It was a day long to be remembered by all."

Something doing in Oklahoma for Spiritualism. G. G. Lee writes: "The Ring and Chism debate at Hedrick commences August 20, for 6 days, and then a camp meeting at Mountain Park, commencing on the 27th for 3 or 4 days, and from there to Oklahoma City to the State Convention of Spiritualist's commencing September 3. Everyone come."

Professor Ransby writes: "I shall be at Lily Dale camp all the season. After a year of hard work in Canada I send kindly greeting to old friends westward. Mrs. Cooley is doing grand work here. I wish all true mediums could come here and learn from Clegg Wright and others. Mrs. May Price of Washington, D. C. a good worker, is here, and Brother Brooks, it is a pleasure to meet him.

Dr. E. W. Emerson writes from Manchester, N. H.: "The Progressive Thinker is a weekly visitor at my home from week to week. I am more than glad it is so strenuous, and hope it will continue so to be."

C. J. Barnes, the trumpet medium, is now at his home in Warsaw, Ind., called there on account of the sickness of his wife. He has been at the Grand Ledge, Lake Brady and Vicksburg Camps.

Mrs. C. A Thompson writes: "The Fraternal Daughters held their semi-monthly meeting at the home of Sister Mr. Rickort, 117 Rice st., on Wednesday, August 7. The afternoon was taken up with readings, and at 6 p. m. supper was served to a very nice crowd of friends, and it seemed that this supper was the best we ever furnished, and we extend a hearty vote of thanks to Mrs. Rickert for her untiring effort to make this meeting one of harmony, and for her hard work, in helping with the supper, and opening her home for the society. snipping party and the giving of readings by the following mediums: Mrs. Dr. Alex. Caird and Sisters Adams, Lichtig, Goldstein, Rickort, Miner Copeland, Thompson, and Brothers Warner, Traver and Thompson. Our next move was made by Brother Knapp, who saw to it that all The Progressive Thinkers we had were sold. The writer has never failed to have some on hand at each meeting of the Fraternal Daughters, because we feel that our efforts to advance have been greatly helped through the columns of this, the only "tried and true" Spiritualistic paper before the public, today. Our next meeting will be held in Hygeia Hall, 406 Ogden avenue, August 28, at 8 p. m., when our beloved Sister, Miss Lizzie Harlow, will lecture for us, followed by a social, but no afternoon session or supper on the 28th. Everyone come and bring your friends and be prepared to leave your name as a new subscriber for The Progressive Thinker. They will be on sale at the door.

Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig writes from her home in the City: "I returned last Monday from Unity Camp, Wonewoc, Wis., where I filled a 10 day's engagement. A prettier Spiritualist camp ground is hard to find. The attendance was uniformly good, and the management seemed to be satisfied with the results. Friday I left for the Chesterfield camp, where I intend to stay a week or so and then will return for a short stay, and then again leave the first week of September for Cleveland, O., to fill an engagement for the society there, from September 8 until October 6. Probably, if nothing interferes, I may proceed from there to Washington, D. C., to attend the N. S. A. convention. I am open for engagements for the season of 1907 and 1908. My permanent address is 4746 Calumet ave., Chicago."

Mrs. A. J. Pettengill has a ten days engagement at Temple Heights, Me.

Mrs. G. Partridge, the well known psychometrist, has been visiting her children and friends in this city for a few days. She still has the care of her little grandson, Bobbie, or Robert Glen Partridge. They are soon to go west again.

A society of Colored folks have formed themselves into the Church of Progressive Spiritualists, and are holding services at 3329 Vernon ave., South side, this city, to the number of one hundred members, under the leadership of Rev. Dr. J. H. Demby, asssisted by the regular number of executive officers, and they are an enthusiastic and intelligent crowd of truth-seekers and Spiritualists. Of course they will soon become auxiliary to the State Association; their application is already in and being sanctioned with a hearty welcome by the State Board.

Rev. Jose Montoya writes from Wichita, Kan.: "The First Spiritualist Society here seems to have taken a new lease of life under the mangement of President Jno. Q. Adams. For some months past things have been practically at a stand-still here with us. The regular services last Sunday evening at the F. A. A. Hall, were opened by the rendering of "Meditation" by Miss Madeline Trux. Following this came the address of the evening by Dr. H. F. Kraushaar of Topeka, which was well received by an appreciative audience. Dr. Kraushaar is a new worker in the field and is a member of the Board of Trustees of the State Association. He spoke with eloquence for forty-five minutes upon the necessity of harmony within the ranks of Spiritualism, emphasizing the fact that principle must ever be kept paramount to personality if the Cause is to expand to its rightful proportions. The evening services concluded with a recitation by Miss Pearl Inman. Dr. Kraushaar goes Thursday to the Delphos (Kan.) Camp, where he will continue his labors for the next three weeks."

W. B. Allen writes from Etna, Wash.: "We are going to have a grand meeting, and would like to have everyone here to enjoy it with us. For speakers we have P. C. Mills, Mrs Aber, Mrs Cory and several others. W. W. Aber, the materializing meeting of Kansas City, Mo., will be with us during the meeting; also other good mediums. The meeting will commence August 24, and hold over three Sundays. For particulars address H. B. Allen, Etna, Clarke Co., Washington."

Mrs. Margaret L. S. Chase writes from WestPullman: "Mrs. Barbara Hilbert of the Progressive Church of the North side, and Mrs. O. B. Wilson of the Hyde Park Occult Church, held two meetings at Bocks Hall in Kensington, Monday at 2 p. m., and the evening of August 5th. There was a fair attendance and great interest was manifested. Prof. Richart and three sons of 115th street, furnished the music, three violins and piano. It was very uplifting and greatly enjoyed. An organization was partly arranged for, and at the next meeting, hope to perfect. The next meeting will be at the same Hall, August 18. On Sunday afternoon and evening, Mrs. G. Longstaff of Cheltenham, near South Chicago, has been the means of awakening the people to the thought of continuity of life. She held meetings in West Pullman and Roseland all winter at private houses, and will begin again as soon as cold weather begins. She will aid in the organization of this new society, which is not yet named."

Unusual interest has been aroused in psychical matters in Berkley, Cal., as the result of Dr. James H. Hyslop's lectures at Hearst hall. One of the results of these addresses is the plan to organize a society devoted to psychic research in the college towns. The list of those interested includes the name of Miss Mildred Burnett, whose interest in psychical questions has long been known to her intimates. Miss Burnett is a granddaughter of one of California's early governors. She was formerly an actress, but gave up the stage because of ill health a year ago. During the last year she has enjoyed unique fame as one of Berkley's successful realty operators and is adding to the list of fields in which she has shone by venturing into the realm of psychic mysteries.

"CAIAPHAS."

High Priest of Judea at the time of Pilate's Governorship. Apollonius, the Man Who Talked With the Doctors in the Temple.—Selected from the Faraday Book.

"I come to aid you in your efforts to unravel the mystery which surrounds the connection of the Christian deity with Judaism.

"During my life upon earth there were many hopes indulged in by my countrymen for the appearance of a deliverer who should rescue the nation from the Roman yoke. Those hopes were the basis of all the insurrectionary disorders which finally culminated in the overthrow of the nation and its exile.

"Apollonius of Tyana was well known to our wise men by reputation, but not recognized by them as having the true doctrine, because of his affiliation with the Romans and other Gentiles, and some of his disputes with our Rabbis were the foundation of the stories attributed to Jesus.

"Apollonius insisted that the Jews had failed to grasp the true ideas of divinity, on account of their subserviency to the Mosaic law and exclusiveness toward other nations. He often quoted from our older writings, ideas diametrically opposed to the received traditions of the day, and endeavored to prove to us that all who lived upright lives were Sons of God as much as the Jews.

"These conversations were recorded by Damis, and afterward woven into the story of Jesus as controversies with the Jewish Rabbis concerning his divine nature.

"Speaking, as he often did, under the influence of ancient Egyptian and Chaldean spirits, it was not unusual for the spirit itself to put the words which he spoke into his mouth, and the statement 'Before Abraham was, I am,' was a literal truth, which was understood by those of us who believed in the existence of spirits.

"There was no disposition on our part to destroy him, which has been ascribed to us as existing toward Jesus, for he was considered an alien, but those of us who knew of spiritual ideas, often came to him privately to converse with him, and the conversations ascribed to Nicodemus might have occurred with almost any of us, although in making up the story our names were freely changed and others invented.

"Apollonius was fond of exercising his marvelous spiritual gifts, and had he been born a Jew, would have been recognized as a prophet; but it was contrary to our policy to recognize spiritual powers as legitimately possessed by other nations.

"As for the record which says that I was either instrumental or accessory in in accusing anyone for the crime of blasphemy before Pilate, with other charges, I repudiate them as the fabrications of after generations. No such person as Jesus was ever accused before the Sanhedrim, nor would such accusation have availed anything, for the Jewish laws were annulled in all cases where they conflicted with the laws of Rome.

"We could not have injured our cause more than by accusing an innocent person of blaspheming our God, or attempting to incite an insurrection against the Romans.

"Upon one hand the Romans would have laughed our charges to scorn, and upon the other, the people would have refused to support us, for whoever promised to lead them against Rome would have had a larger following than we could raise against him.

"It seems as if this ought to dispose of the charges brought against me in the story of the Christian mythology, and that hereafter the Jews should be relieved from the imputation of causing the death of a person of whom the only record existing proves that he could not have existed unless the tales of the Gentiles about their gods had a basis of truth.

"Whatever were the follies of Israel, they never indorsed the ideas of Polytheism, however represented, and it was the greatest folly to place the nativity of Jesus in Judea.

"With this deception revealed, the rest of the statements which connect him with Judea disappear or appear in their true light as legends of Apollonius.

"The Talmud is said to bear witness to the existence of a person of that name, but the Talmud is a collection of traditions, which for generations were preserved chiefly by memory, and transmitted orally.

"As their possessors lived among Christians, it was not strange that some of the legends should have been incorporated in them, and so appear there now, but they should have no place there as truth."

Mrs. Vanderbilt at Unity Camp, Mass.

The speaker of the day, Mrs. Vanderbilt, was introduced, who read a gem of a poem entitled, "Show Me the Way," after which she delivered an interesting and eloquent address on "Modern Spiritualism, and the Great Progress It Has Made During the Past Two Years." She said in part:

"It is my privilege to give what little I can of my services for the benefit of Unity camp, and I am only too glad to do so. It is two years since I stood on the platform at Unity camp to espouse the cause of Spiritualism. Since that time great changes have taken place in Unity camp and its progress, and there has been a change with me personally. I congratulate you and the citizens of Lynn and Saugus on having such a fine camp and auditorium, for it is a credit to you, and an achievement of which you may well be proud."

The speaker told of the great progress which Spiritualism has made during the past two years, especially to the end that scientists begun to investigate it, and in fact many religious beliefs have sprung from Spiritualism, and while heads of denominations, after having made an investigation of Spiritualism, and admitting it to be true, yet say that it emanates from evil influences and advises the believers of those professed religions against the philosophy of Spiritualism, which she denounced as unjust to a religion which is doing and has done so much for the elevating and uplifting of humanity, as Spiritualism has.

At the close of her lecture Mrs. Vanderbilt gave many of her wonderful spirit messages and tests, which were well received, and were highly gratifying to the large audience in attendance.

PROF. W. M. LOCKWOOD.

OUR OWN.

The children we loved in the past are grown,
To men and women, and gone away;
And we sit in the dark and we sit alone
And dwell on the pleasures of yesterday,
Of the winding path through the orchard lot,
Of the old wood lot and the grapevine swing;
Of the dusty roads where the sun shone hot,
Of the elms where the orioles used to sing.

Of our childhood days and the friends we knew,
The girls in ribbon and furbelow;
Of the woods the creek went twisting through,
Of the little boy with the stone-bruised toe;
Of the little lass with the ribboned hair,
With the sweetly curving lips and red;
And we sit out here in our big armchair,
But our hearts are back in the days long dead.

And our minds drift far from the girls and boys
We chummed with back in the long ago;
Drift far, far, far from the childish joys,
And the childish games that we used to know;
Drift far, far, far to life's grown-up time,
And the little children who used to play
About our knees, and who used to climb
In our arms to sleep, and who're gone away. —HoustonPost.

TAKE NOTICE!

Spiritualists Everywhere Be On the Alert.

Spiritualists of the United States, do you want Spiritualism properly represented in the report of the Director of the Census? If so, urge the officers of your local and State association to fill and return the card sent them long ago, by the Department. Every opportunity has been given us to prove by figures how many we are, and it will be our own fault if we are incorrectly reported. Spiritualists, have you the courage to stand up and be counted? If so, send in the reports of your local societies.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books contained at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 462 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity; its moral tendency; the Bible Doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend Spiritualism or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

"Inquirer."—Q. It is said Harry Orchard, the most brutal and unfeeling multi-murderer ever brought to public view, has experienced religion and become a Christian. Is it possible that anyone to-day believes this doctrine of salvation?

A.—All the Christian churches claim to believe it. The Catholic priest can pardon all sins by power bestowed on the church by God, and the Protestant churches teach the same doctrine, except the pardon is direct from God and no priest stands between. That Orchard, who, according to his own confession, has sent a score of souls unprepared into the next life, and hence to eternal torment, has by conversion made his own salvation sure, and as the most vile of sinners will become the brightest of saints is the logical and inevitable conclusion to be drawn, and to deny it is to deny the entire scheme of Christian salvation. And if Orchard can be saved and taken to glory, after the law has sent him into the next life through the hangman's noose—Orchard, the most vile and despicable murderer, liar, deceiver, spy, traitor, apparently without a conscience, without remorse, without feeling or human sympathy—if he can be saved, there are none who cannot be washed white in the blood of Christ! Yes, this is the creed.—This is the inevitable conclusion to be drawn from the Christian belief. The most moral man in the world has no merit in the world compared with this prince of criminals. The preachers preach these doctrines Sunday by Sunday; they defend them in magazine articles and books, and yet speaking conservatively there is not a single one of them who believes the immoral, absurd, and indefensible doctrine.

Many of the laity may believe, as they do other absurdities, because they have given it no thought. Ministers of the gospel pretend to believe, and when any of their number rebels, hale him up for heresy, just to show that they stand by the beliefs of their fathers!

Oh, it is painfully pitiable, the sham, the pretense, the hypocrisy, the weak cowardice of it all!

Yet it potently reflects on national morality. Orchard, the deceiver, traitor, wholesale murderer is made a hero and held up by the pulpit as an example of God's grace! He will have imitators. There will be inoculation with the virus of crime, and a lowering of the standard of morality. Thaw, Orchard, etc., models, culmination, and impersonation of this money-made, money-worshiping age of sham.

Arthur T. Wilmot.—Q. (1) Taking the Bible record for details, does the story of Noah's Ark mathematically disprove itself?

(2) Do scholars, as a rule, disbelieve at all in the Ark (and deluge), or do they put a different interpretation on said contents of the Ark?

(3) Is there any disproof of the "fall of man," the "resurrection of the body," "Trinity," and the "forgiveness of sins (the Atonement)? If so, will you please point out assertively?

(4) Is there any proof of the whereabouts and the nature of the activities of "Jesus of Nazareth" from early youth to his public ministry?

(5) How do true Spiritualists interpret the Christ—as to his power and relation to man and the Infinite? Also the "second coming of Christ?"

A.—(1). Granting the Bible account of the Ark, it was utterly incapable of carrying the cargo assigned to it. Not only had it to provide for all animals, but it had also to take the food for them, not only for forty days, but till the earth again became fruitful. The story of the flood and the Ark is a delightful folk-lore tale, just as reliable as Jack and the bean stalk. There is not in history or science a supporting fact.

(2) "Scholars" is ambiguous in meaning. A scholar may be bigoted and superstitious, and believe the whole gamut of the old dogmas. Yet there is probably not a single well informed minister of the gospel who takes the story literally, and scientific men do not think the subject worthy of attention.

(3) The theory of evolution, which proves beyond a doubt that man came up from the lower animals through the savage and barbarous state—that he did not begin as a perfect creature, that he is ascending and not descending, completely and forever settles the dogma of man's fall, and the vast scheme of Christian salvation. For, if man never fell, he needs no savior or redeemer. He never has been, nor is he now, lost from God, and hence requires no return to the fold. This is fully discussed in "The Evolution of the God and Christ Ideas."

(4) Christ comes in history without a childhood, except the vague stories furnished by writers a long time after the event is granted to have taken place. The Evangelists were content with a few myths. Outside the four gospels, there is not in profane history a single authentic mention of this individual.

(5) Spiritualists entertain almost as many shades of belief as there are individuals. Some are outspoken infidels, while many, having come up out of the churches, retain, perhaps often unconsciously, superstitions which are seemingly in flat confliction with their knowledge. Spiritualists, however, taking a "consensus of the competent," if they accept the personal existence of Jesus, regard him as a man like other great reformers who appear in the vague mists of tradition. His second coming (a correlated myth), of course can only take place if the claim of divine nature made for him be true.

J. D. Schlotterback.—Q. Can you give any substantial authority where a question, the answer to which no one knows, has been correctly answered by a medium? For instance, take a large closed book and slip a knife blade between the leaves, and then the medium tell the number of the page where the blade is.

A.—It would not be difficult to fill a volume with instances where communications have been received beyond the knowledge of those present. This occurs with frequency at every seance, so much so that it is expected. I have, in my own experience, had many such facts, in one instance giving us a prophecy for three months, all of which came true.

As to the test proposed by this correspondent, I doubt if a spirit can see into a book and find the correct word any more successfully than while in the mortal body. I have asked several and they have replied that it was impossible for them. It would be just as legitimate to demand of a man this test of knowledge, as of a spirit. With the new ideas of the nature of spiritual beings, the old belief in their infinite knowledge and ability must be cast aside, and the limitation of their intelligence and ability be kept in mind. Spiritual beings cannot see beneath the earth crust; they cannot foretell the prices on the stock exchange or market. They may have keener perceptions, wider range of knowledge, and thus conjecture with more certainty than man, but the spirit acquires no new knowledge or perceptions. The proposed test, when the attainments and limitations of spirits are known, is absurd. The greater share of all the objections, or discomfitures, caused by messages from spirits, grow out of the old belief in their infallibility and all-prescient knowledge. The first lesson to be learned, and which is often taught with severity to over-zealous investigators, is the LIMITATIONS of spirit perception and attainments.

REV. DR. MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Back From Europe, and Will Go to a Sanitarium.

Boston, August 2.—The Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage, till recently pastor of the Church of the Messiah, New York, arrived here on the steamer Saxonia, from Liverpool, last night. When asked if his health had improved, Dr. Savage replied that he was no better than when he went abroad, and was obliged to return immediately to go to a sanitarium.

To the Editor:—Is it not too bad that this great liberal preacher, the successor of Theodore Parker, should have to step down and aside when in the height of his great work?

I have found in an old scrap-book a creed, and the author is anonymous. Will you please reprint it in The Progressive Thinker. I think that many of the readers would like it for preservation. J. OSBORNE LUNT.

79 W. 124th St., New York.

I love my God, yet do not care
To seek him in a house of prayer.
I feel his presence everywhere,
And try his gracious love to share.

There is no hour in any day
When inwardly I do not pray;
At night when on my couch I lie,
Again to him my thoughts do fly.

I do not search the Holy Book,
I care not how my God may look,
Enough for me that far above
Dwells my Creator, whom I love.

Enough for me, to feel, to know,
That where I am and where I go,
His watchful eye is bent on me,
I cannot sin but he will see.

I need no priest to tell me how
I must before my maker bow,
Or teach me how to bend my knee
To him whom everywhere I see.

There is no hill, there is no dale,
Which does not tell the glorious tale;
There is no leaf on any tree
In which God's hand I do not see.

Call me not wicked when I say
That in a church I seldom pray,
But rather praise him when alone,
And worship silent at his throne.

And when I die, let those that weep
Rejoice that in his love I sleep,
And shall again awake above,
And pray for all whom here I love.

Fake Mediums in England.

Some correspondents have sent us copies of a Leeds newspaper containing an account of a recent exposure of the so-called medium Chambers. We can only repeat, as we intimated after a certain occurrence at Newcastle, that if sitters will be so foolish as to "induce" such a man, "by means of a substantial fee," to give "sittings," at which the medium himself appears dressed up—or rather, undressed—with a chest-protector on his head for a cap, they have no reason to complain of what they get in return for their money. It is the earnest Spiritualists who have the right to complain of those who encourage such performances.—Light, London, England.

Views of One Considered a Pagan.

THE OTHER SIDE HEARD FROM.

A Chinese Nobleman's Speech to the Protestant Missionaries at Shanghai.

At the closing meeting of the Shanghai Centenary Missionary Conference, held on May 7, Taotai Tong, representing the Chinese Government, delivered an address in the course of which, as reported in the Japan Weekly Mail, Yokohama, he said:

"I think you will agree with me when I say that the general tendency of mankind is toward good, that is, toward attaining a continually progressive and higher plane of mentality than that with which we were originally endowed. The history of the world proves this. The world has progressed, however slow such progress may have appeared to be. We are progressing, perhaps, not at such a rate as some would desire, and we shall, I believe, continue to progress. In all effort there is bound to be some difference of opinion as to the suitability of the methods employed to secure a certain result. Controversy among men always has existed and always will exist as long as men are of the great family of mankind. We differ in our ideas regarding the greatest as well as the most petty concerns of life, in our religion, in our politics as well as the cut of our clothes and hair.

"But these differences—which are inevitable—should not militate against the exercise of our comprehensive charity and toleration, and although we may be convinced in our minds that our way of doing things is the best, we should always remember that others have an equal right to the same opinion about their methods.

"There is one method with which every impartial and thinking man and woman must disagree, and that is the method of force.

"To the Chinese, as well as to the non-partisan foreign observer, the fact that stands out most prominently in connection with the efforts of missionaries in the past is their too great dependence on the arm of the flesh, instead of trusting to the arm of the Lord. The gospel says: 'Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves. Be ye, therefore, wise as serpents and harmless as doves.'

"Without making any undue reference as to who may be considered the wolves or the sheep, I submit that this clearly shows that to suffer injustice uncomplainingly is more Christian than to exact treaty rights; to suffer injury than to claim pecuniary indemnity; to pardon the offender than to demand his chastisement.

"But what have we found in the past? I will not attempt to give instances of the many controversions of this maxim that have occurred in the history of missionary relations with China and the Chinese authorities—they are known to everyone. Their effect is ever present with us, whether we be patriotic Chinese or sympathetic Westerners, and until the Chinese people receive convincing evidence that such methods will never again obtain, the aftermath of these lapses will exert an overwhelming negative influence on all your work and efforts.

"Other factors which will militate against the achievement of your ideals are the lack of social intercourse, the consequent absence of interchange of views, and the assumption of superiority which, although it may at times be unconscious, is still evident in the behavior and demeanor of many. One of the first duties of any person desirous of making the acquaintance of a strange of fresh community is to study the idiosyncrasies and etiquette of that community. Especially does this apply to the Westerner coming to China for purposes of propaganda. He encounters a civilization much older than his own and of which the inhabitants of this country are justly proud. He comes in contact with a people who have existed as a concrete nationality for untold centuries.

"Now there is not a person here present who does not in his heart treasure the records of his own race and family, and we in China have every reason to regard ourselves as not the least among the races of men. And yet it has often been known that a stranger, immediately on his or her arrival in our midst, has trampled on our most cherished ideals and has posed as being in a very much better position to tell us what we ought to do than we have ourselves learned by hard and long experience.

"In connection with this we all know that to be dogmatic is not always to be convincing, and that the possession of a good tool is not always a guaranty of good workmanship on the part of the owner. I would suggest to you that the aim you have in view would be furthered by more social intercourse between yourselves and the communities in which you reside, and by an abandonment of that suggestion or allegation of superiority which, however unconscious it may be, is so often evidenced in the demeanor of foreigners in this country.

"At this moment we are in a hall belonging to the 'Chinese' Y. M. C. A. Has it ever struck any one that Jesus Christ did not differentiate one jot between the races or nations? These are the headquarters of the Young Men's Christian Association; why place 'Chinese' before it?

"Again, missionaries are often deficient in their knowledge of the Confucian classics, and consequently appear illiterate to the Chinese. This lessens the respect for the missionary in a very marked degree. The mistake is made that a person can learn sufficient Chinese in two or three years to equip him or her for work among the people, whereas it requires many years of study and practice.

"The better way would be for the learned missionary to transfer his knowledge of spiritual creeds and faith to a competent Chinese scholar, who in his turn would teach individuals able to form an opinion and choose for themselves. Thus a proper understanding, brought about by efficient study, would emphasize such facts as that neither Confucian nor ancestral worship—so called—is considered as worship, in the Western sense of the term, by the Chinese. We do not bow down to or worship our ancestors. Each family has its own forebears, and our respect and admiration for them is a simple expression of filial piety.

"Similarly our expression of reverence for the great Confucius—which is wrongly termed worship—is performed more out of respect to the learned sage. We ask no favor, such as protection, either from our ancestors or from him. We do this solely to God.

"Every man is entitled to his own opinions and his own belief, and Confucianism, embodying, as it does, respect for ancestors, filial piety, and brotherly love, conduces to morality, obedience to the law, and brotherhood among the masses of the population. Consequently a proper consiedration for the religious susceptibilities of the people as a whole would conduce not only to the creation and maintenance of good relationships between the missionary and the authorities of this country, but it would also enable the missionary to assist China, and China to assist the missionary. Thus, although we may be Confucianist or Christian, and although we may again be divided into sections, sects, denominations or belief, we can still do our best to pull together in that spirit of charity which is common to, yet above all creeds, and thus effect some good among the races of men."

W. J. COLVILLE'S LECTURE.

of Spiritualism; and in the case of Dr. Savage it is well known that his tendency of thought was decidedly agnostic, and for many years during his popular ministry in Boston he was largely a champion and exponent of the philosophy of Herbert Spencer. It is difficult to see why people should prefer the devil to their own friends who have passed beyond the mystic portals, and it surely cannot be easier for normal intellects to believe in imaginary evil demons, of whom we know practically nothing, except on unsupported hearsay, than in the presence and activity of the very people whom we have known on earth as real personages, and who reappear with their own well-known characteristics. Telepathy and all other demonstrable phases of psychic phenomena must be freely admitted by every student of psychic science, and it has now become the imperative duty and solemn privilege of all who have knowledge in this direction to elucidate, as far as possible, the truthful doctrine of the close resemblance and intimate relation of telepathy to Spiritualism. Simple telepathy throws much clear light on our present spiritual abilities, and spirit communion transcends mundane telepathic experience by carrying telepathy across the unseen border into those sympathetic realms of spiritual activity where the powers and functions of our "sub-selves" or "subjective minds" are more fully unfolded and more freely and extensively exercised than they seemingly ever can be during terrestrial embodiment. Let us be open to all classes of evidence, and construct theories to account for facts, but never seek to squeeze facts into grooves of premeditated theory.

MERRY HEART GOES ALL THE WAY.

When you come to a wearisome bit of the road,
Where the stones are thick and the path is steep,
And the back is bowed with the heft of the load,
As the narrowing way is hard to keep,
Don't stop just then for a wasteful sigh,
But challenge the worst with steadfast cheer;
It nowhere else, there is help on high—
God's angels will hasten your pioneer.

When you stand at the sorrowful bit of the road,
And a hand you loved has loosed its clasp;
When streams are dry that in sweetness flowed,
And flowers droop from your listless grasp;
E'en then take heart, for further on
There are hope and joy and the dawn of day;
You shall find again what you thought was gone—
'Tis the merry heart goes all the way.

Equal Pay for Equal Work.

Robert L. Owen, who has been overwhelmingly endorsed at the Democratic primaries in Oklahoma, for United States Senator, is one-eighth Cherokee. Mr. Owen was born in Virginia and educated at Washington and Lee University. As teacher, editor, banker, lawyer and statesman, his career has been brilliantly successful. He is immensely popular with all classes in Oklahoma and Indian Territory.

Mr. Owen advocated suffrage for women in the Constitutional Convention of Oklahoma in a most remarkable address. One of the strongest passages in that address was as follows:

"It is perfectly well known that in the stress of modern times, women by the thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions are obliged to work with their hands for their livelihood, and it has been shown by actual experience that where women have suffrage their rate of wages for the same work performed as that of a man, has increased decidedly in value, so that the sweat of their faces for a given amount of labor has produced to them a better means of subsistence. Will you, as honest men, knowing this history, deny to them an equal privilege and opportunity of life, when the momentous question of making a living is the great issue that now shakes this nation?"

If I Just Had Wings, Dear Mamma.

If I just had wings, dear mamma,
Like the fairies in the play,
And you thought that you could spare me, for a night, or for a day,
I could fly away to Heaven, where dear papa is, you know,
And could love, and hug, and kiss him, as I used to long ago.
Won't you let me try, dear Mamma?
Just to see if I could fly,
'Way up in the starry Heavens, to my papa in the sky?
For I would so love to see him; dearest papa was so kind
To us both when he was with us, that I always loved to mind.

He would always bring us something, you some flowers, or me a book,
When he came home in the evening with that smiling tired look,
But he's gone to live in Heaven, with the angels in the sky;
And I would so love to go there, dearest Mamma, let me try;
For I'm tired and so sleepy; I've been working hard all day,
Trying to be good and happy, since my papa went away,
But dear Mamma, tears won't let me; 'cause I'm always sure to cry,
When I think of dearest papa, all alone up in the sky.

Animals and Children.

I agree with what Grace Cobb writes in The Progressive Thinker, 921 anent animals and children—that we should feed and provide homes for the children first. I however, think the "Animal Rescue League" a grand institution, and that it should be supported.

Surely the homeless and starving should be rescued, and cared for, whether human or animal.

While I protest against the necessity of taking life, it seems that at present we are at times compelled, or think we are, to do so, consequently those animals that are no comfort to themselves or others, it might be well to as quickly and painlessly as possible end their earthly careers.

To annihilate them, though, would be an impossibility, for all living things, even the earth on which we live and have our being, have minds, souls, which are immortal.

There is enough in the world for all, and none would be hungry, homeless, loveless and forsaken, human or animal, if selfishness was abolished.

If love, the parent of justice, reigned instead, then each and all would ever think of others' woes, pleasures, and comfort prior to their own.

A PETITION.

These are the gifts I ask of thee,
Spirit serene:
Strength for the daily task,
Courage to face the road,
Good cheer to help me bear the traveler's load.
And for the hours of rest that come between,
An inward joy in all things heard and seen.
These are the sins I fain
Would have thee take away:
Malice and cold disdain,
Hot anger, sullen hate,
Scorn of the lowly, envy of the great,
And discontent that casts a shadow gray
On all brightness of the common day.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

FUTURE LIFE

In the Light of Ancient Wisdom and Modern Science.

BY LOUIS ELBE.

This is the authorized translation of the famous book which has been creating so wide a stir in scientific and religious circles throughout France, and exactness M. Elbe has arranged under the title "La Vie Future." It will be received with equal interest here, and will arouse very general discussion, as the subject is one engaging not only scientists but laymen in ever-increasing numbers.

The fundamental question of the "Immortality of the Soul" has disturbed the great thinkers of all ages, and for the solution of this eternal enigma humanity still seeks in vain.

This volume offers for the first time a complete presentation of all the available evidence hitherto to be found only in the most scattered and inaccessible forms. With great care a plain statement of the discoveries, theories, and ideas of the greatest investigators together with his own illuminating views and comments, and a mass of authentic information regarding the beliefs of the primitive races.

The book is divided into two parts, the first part being devoted to the Ideas of the Survival as considered by the Primitive races, and the second to Deductions drawn from the Fundamental sciences. With Portrait of the author. Price $1.20; postage 10c.

MASTERSHIP IS THE RIGHT WAY.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

LILY DALE CAMP.

A Vivacious Account of Various Doings at the Noted Eastern Camp.

Sitting in that gallery of culinary arts, the dining room of the Maplewood Hotel, a comfortable, motherly woman was seated on my left. She wore a benignant face, blue eyes, white dress, tan hair and shoes and a large Japanese coral necklace, studded with mythological, cabalistic, and ivory figures and skulls. Importance was written all over her, as, filled with dynamic force and the milk of human kindness, she proceeded to add as much of the concoctions of Senor Green, the hotel cook, as she did not deem absolutely unfit for consumption.

She is a connoisseur of such things, yes indeed, for she was Mrs. Sarah Tyson Rorer, Professor Emeritus of Domestic Science, and one of the world's busy women.

She lectures at colleges and Chautauquas, writes for innumerable papers, publishes a couple of cook books yearly, and feeds 1,000 of the brokers of the Stock Exchange at her sumptuous cafe at 42 Broadway, N. Y., fitted up at an expense of $50,000. She receives from $3,000 to $5,000 weekly for the six work-day lunches, and thus lives on the bulls and bears, as they in turn feed on the shorn lambs, soup made from Mrs. Rorer's watered stock and her various other creations.

She is the angel with the new message, "Good food unto man;" while she fully believes that he was intended to do the housework, but, straying from his mission, left it to woman to do the "sweating in his brow" for him, over a hot stove.

Mrs. Rorer is one of the main workers in this week of attractions. Stars and planets are the theme of our morning lessons at 10 o'clock.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, just returned from the Peace Conference at TheHague, holds daily receptions at this hour and introduces us to the inhabitants of Mars, Jupiter, Venus and Mercury. We are taking mental note of the exact width of the stripes of the loin cloth of the gentlemen there, also the number of the gores in the ladies' overskirts, and whether they wear them cut bias or in scallops, observed the fetching manner in which they do up their back hair and carefully studied their etiquette concerning when and where rings should be worn—in the ears, on the toes, hands, left ankle, or in the nose.

We subscribed for the "Mercury Morning Star," to keep posted on what our neighbors are doing, and are contemplating sending a petition to the postmaster general, asking that mail service be established between the earth and other planets, with rural delivery along the Milky Way; also the advisability of urging upon the proper authorities to unite some odds and ends of shooting stars and left-over satellites and make a brand-new planet, where the "new man" will rise to superior heights, doing housework and frizzing his whiskers to win favor with the "new woman"—an idyllic place where the hens will lay butter and eggs as you like them; where the babies will grow in the gardens among the other flowers; where the bushes will bear books containing all knowledge, and the trees yield clothing, ready made, shimmering sheen for the fair and for the men the dragging skirts they have for years designed for women and compelled them to wear.

In the midst of our castles in the air the cock crew: it was eleven o'clock; the class closed and we hurried to Library Hall to attend Mrs. Rorer's class of Domestic Science. We came down to earth with a jar and a few other dishes as our mentor proceeded to tell us how to cook eggs one hundred ways for Sunday.

The most difficult part of the recipes are their names; when you can remember them the rest is very easy and so simple and appetizing—but those names! It seemed that every Roman emperor, Greek god, French general and Spanish don and banditti had an omelet named after him; not one was named after a woman, but we were told eggs were created for the palate and stomach of man.

You felt as if your brain was scrambled, and eggs were discussed until we realized how serious is the question of egg laying. Any thoughtful hen may well stop and think twice before she rushes into this industry, for she knows not whether her egg will hatch a chicken or whether it will be whipped, crimped, cut bias, fringed, stewed, served on a half shell, used for egg-nog, or to discourage an unwelcome speaker.

How little we realize the hen's responsibilities; how seldom we sing the praises of the honest, reliable daily Layer.

The Hen and the men are the most interesting subjects to Mrs. Rorer, as well as her favorites. She could be happy with either, were the other dear cackler away.

Our afternoon lectures have been very interesting and of mighty power. Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond comes to us younger and stronger, renewed in body and spirit from her inspirations received while abroad.

She is indeed a prophetic soul, with the gifts of a great seer, and her visions of things coming to-morrow make us wish we could live during the entire century to travel in the coming airships drawn by solar engines, when letter writing will be a thing of the past, and our business and love-making can be done at long range—if need be—by the power of thought.

Stepping side by side with Mrs. Richmond came Mrs. Helen L. P. Russegue. We always considered her a powerful speaker, and withal, a sweet, loving spirit. This season she is more forceful than ever—broader, stronger and gentler, with a triple extract of concentrated energy which, like sweet perfume, pervades her presence and illumines her lectures. No one on our platform to-day discourses more eloquently and persistently what Spiritualism means to the world, and no one hammers harder blows on the dizzy head of dyspeptic orthodoxy. Mrs. Russegue makes you feel what a grand thing it is to be a Spiritualist. It is the greatest knowledge which can come to the mortal.

Clear, independent thinking, high aspirations and clean, healthful living is Mrs. Russegue's gospel, and the way to bring man into close relations with his creator.

George H. Brooks is with us again, and most welcome. He comes to us breezy, hearty and full of vitality from the pines and ozone of Wisconsin. There is a healthy, wholesome truth and earnest conviction in all he says and does. Mr. Brooks adds new friends daily, for old and young are glad to see and hear him. He wears well, for he is a real true man who taboos all shams.

Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley has lectured before us twice this week and brought bright messages to us from the other side. Her inspirers discussed Spiritualism as found in the Bible in a new and interesting manner, using arguments we never heard before. Her platform messages have been exceptionally fine, and each one recognized. She gives names without hesitation and very correctly. Mayflower, her little guide, has poured consolation into many a sad, hungry heart here, and conviction to a large number of skeptics. Mrs. Cooley will leave this country in October, traveling through Japan and China, thence to New Zealand for six months, and then around the world, bringing her glad message to the children of men on the isles of the sea and the ends of the earth.

Our artistic proclivities were ministered unto last Friday when Mr. W. J. Sheehan, our director of vocal music, conducted his first musicale. The choral class outdid themselves. Their execution was very finished and showed the careful training they had enjoyed.

Mrs. Norma Pritchard, of Pittsburg, the soprano solo, delighted everybody. She has made her debut at Lily Dale this season and has won the love of all by her gracious manner and sweet, dainty personality and their admiration of her unusual talent and finely trained voice. Her singing is such as we dream singing was intended to be: the expression of the harmony of the soul. She made her audience feel melody as well as hear it, singing beyond the ear and playing on the tenderest and most sympathetic cords of the human hearts until they vibrated in accord with the music within her own. The great, busy world will some day hear more, much more, of this coming star. Mr. Sheehan is a thorough artist and the unusual excellence of his teachings is greatly appreciated. He directs six classes weekly, and these are among the most appreciated this season.

Last Monday afternoon Mrs. M. J. Stephens, of Washington, was our hostess and gave a progressive euchre party in the auditorium. There were seventeen tables besides a large audience who had come to enjoy the fine program which followed the card playing. Some very choice prizes were given by our hostess, and at the close ice cream in cones, lemonade and cakes were served.

Do I weary you, friends, talking so much about Lily Dale? It seems a new place this year—new in a larger attendance, greater harmony, much deeper peace and better work being done than had been looked for or dreamed of; indeed, our realities are much better than our rosiest hopes dared to picture.

LAURA G. FIXEN.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Having been directed to carry on the work of Editor-at-Large in connection with the N. S. I respectfully request all Spiritualists to forward the same to me at their earliest convenience.

HARRISON D. BARRETT.
600 Pa. Ave., N. E., Washington, D.C.

Queen City Park (Vermont) Camp-Meeting.

The meeting opened on July 28, with most buildings in good shape, and the audience of gratifying proportions.

The opening address in the forenoon was delivered by President A. F. Hubbard, followed by spirit messages by Mrs. Ellie I. Chapman. Afternoon, W. J. Colville occupied the platform, giving one of his fine addresses and following it with improvised poems. Afterward Mrs. Chapman again delivered messages from spirit friends, giving entire satisfaction as always.

Tuesday afternoon there were improvised poems by Mr. Colville; the address being given by Mrs. Abbie Crossett, and messages through Mrs. Chapman.

For the rest of the week, Mr. Colville gave lectures each day, on one occasion taking a subject suggested by somebody in the audience and discoursing on it for an hour. He is a pleasing speaker in every way and created a very favorable impression on those fortunate enough to hear him. His good work is so widely known, however, that comment is superfluous except as it shows that his efforts were fully appreciated here. Closing his engagement August 4, he shared the platform that day with Mr. Wm. Parfett of Goshen, Ind., who was on the program to deliver the forenoon address. The week from August 6 to August 11, is filled by Rev. F. A. Wiggin, with addresses and ballot tests; Mrs. Chapman, message medium.

The speakers engaged for the remainder of the season are equally first class talent, and the officers of the association, most active of whom was Vice-President S. N. Gould, are to be congratulated on their choice. It is hoped that more who visit other camps will journey this way and see for themselves that Vermont's camp-meeting is second to none in quality and natural attractions.

The music is furnished by Prof. and Mrs. Gibson, and is as good as we have ever heard, their fine singing is an attractive feature.

Many people from a distance are visiting in camp, and many more will come, but room will be hard for all; cottages take those who overflow from the hotel, or who desire cottage life.

T.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Dr. Knowles, of Grand Rapids, Mich., who is chairman of Lake Brady Camp for the season, gave both addresses of the day. While the doctor does not claim to be much of an orator, his remarks are full of facts and common sense. He usually answers questions from the audience. Some of those asked were as follows:

"What is the best thing to do to advance Spiritualism?"

"Give us your idea of God in Nature and how to worship him."

"Will Spiritualism make the world better, as you see it?"

"Do you believe in prayer?"

"Are there any failures or accidents in God's universe?"

One could not help having a higher idea of one's duty in life after listening to his remarks. Ella Wheeler Wilcox being one of his favorite poets, he read two of her poems: "Failure" and "Thought."

More professed Spiritualists would carry their theories into practice, as the doctor does, the cause would be in a more healthy condition.

MARY L. BETTES.
Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Grand Ledge Camp, Michigan.

The meetings at Grand Ledge Camp have continued in a very interesting manner since the opening on July 2.

Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets concluded her week's engagement on Saturday, July 27. Mrs. Sheets is always a great favorite at Grand Ledge; although it is her home, it cannot be said of her, that she is a prophet without honor in her own home. We all felt that her lectures were more than usually interesting and valuable.

On Sunday, July 28, Oscar A. Edgerly and Geo. A. Letford began their joint engagement of one week, Mr. Edgerly giving lectures, Mr. Letford the messages. Mr. Edgerly's lectures on Sunday were up to the highest standard of his own well-known ability. Mr. Letford's messages were all that the most exacting could desire, being clear, concise and to the point.

On Sunday, August 4, Miss Elizabeth Harlow will begin her week's engagement. Mrs. A. A. Atcheson will give the messages during Miss Harlow's engagement.

Our private workers on the grounds are being well patronized.

Mrs. Christine Oswold, one of Chicago's best known medium's, is doing a most excellent work among our people.

Mrs. N. M. Russell of Grand Ledge, is giving her usual helpful aid to our cause.

Mrs. Nora Hill of Chicago, is spending some time at camp, and we apprehend that she too will do a good work for our people.

On Sunday, August 4, Miss Elizabeth Harlow was the speaker at Grand Ledge Camp.

I feel that no words of mine can do justice for the grand discourses. For eloquence and power I do not think that they can well be surpassed.

Mrs. A. G. Atheson, pastor of The First Spiritual Church of Niagara Falls, N. Y., followed Miss Harlow's lecture with spirit messages. The messages were all that could be desired by the most critical audience.

Geo. A. Letford, the Drummer Medium, having soon to return to his regular field of labor, in the South, leaves our camp tomorrow, and will make a short stop at Vicksburg camp. Mr. Letford is the treasurer of our Grand Ledge Camp, and is well-beloved by all our people. We shall miss his genial presence, but will send with him our kindest thought and best wishes. We wish there were a thousand Geo. A. Letford's possessed of the same generous spirit! then would our cause indeed prosper. Fraternally,

SECRETARY.

Parkland Heights Camp.

Parkland Heights Spiritualists' Home and Camp-Meeting Association opened its camp on the first Sunday in July, and will continue every Sunday during July and August. The first meeting was opened in our new auditorium by an invocation by Mrs. Luce.

Mr. Tabor Thomson was the speaker of the day. Mrs. Luce and Mrs. Volk were the mediums. Mr. Thomson disappointed the camp on the second Sunday, and his place was filled by Mrs. Luce as speaker and Mrs. Snyder as medium.

Mr. and Mrs. Kates filled the platform the two following Sundays. The first Sunday in August Mrs. Luce occupied the platform as speaker, following the lectures with psychometric readings.

Mrs. Snyder volunteered to hold a seance on Sunday nights for the benefit of the Home Fund, in which she is very much interested.

The meetings are largely attended. The grounds are beautiful. The weather on each Sunday has been delightful. The lectures have been beneficial. One must not forget Mrs. Dempsey, who has so ably satisfied the appetites of all who visited the dining room! The camp is growing and an interest has been awakened in the residents of the surrounding country. Our musical director, Mr. Shetton, has filled the air with most pleasing vibrations.

Let the readers of your paper know we are working hard, with a determination to build a home for aged Spiritualists, and with our combined efforts and the assistance of our spirit friends, we know no such word as fail.

MRS. FRANK E. LUCE.
Vice-President.

Lake Pleasant Camp, Mass.

The camp is thoroughly under way and many visitors have arrived during the past week. We have a host of able speakers on the grounds, among whom are Hon. A. H. Dailey, R. F. Churchill, Mrs. Lizzie Hall, J. Clegg Wright, Albert P. Blinn, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds and Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates, and the conferences are spirited, enthusiastic and inspiring, and each morning finds a big audience in attendance.

Last Tuesday Mrs. Hall answered Judge Dailey, and Pres. R. F. Churchill, taking the ground that Spiritualism is not a religion, and her remarks called forth a spirited discussion, almost everyone of the above speakers having something to say.

The lectures and message work given in the Temple each afternoon, have been excellent, and the proportional attendance much greater than last year.

J. Clegg Wright is here for the season, giving class lectures each morning.

Whist parties each Monday afernoon have become a permanent institution.

Mr. H. A. Budington has issued a booklet of the History of Lake Pleasant, and it finds a ready sale.

As a proof that bigotry is not a thing of the past, we had an excellent demonstration this past week. The Boys' Club, a Catholic organization of Greenfield, Mass., was to have given a minstrel show here last Friday, but as soon as it was known that the camp meeting association would receive part of the proceeds, the local Catholic authorities notified the boys that they could not give the show, it was called off.

Contracts for immediate erection of new cottages have been given by L. E. Henry on Owosso street, and Mrs. I. J. Purple on Lake Shore st.

The speakers for the week are Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Kates, J. Clegg Wright and Mrs. May S. Pepper-Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Vanderbilt will be with us the rest of the meeting.

ALBERT P. BLINN, Sec'y.

Oklahoma Convention.

The Oklahoma State Spiritualist Association will hold its first Annual Convention, September 3, 4, and 5, 1907, at Oklahoma City, Okla., in the new K. P. Hall on West Main Street.

Attending Spiritualists are requested to wear the emblem of Spiritualism, the sunflower, that they may be recognized by committees who will meet the incoming passenger trains. Officers, mediums and elected delegates will be furnished free lodging and breakfasts during the convention.

Each and every Spiritualist in Oklahoma should, if possible, attend this first annual convention of their state. There is so much to be gained by a meeting of this kind, in the way of new acquaintances, new experiences and new pleasures.

We will name only a few of the mediums and lecturers that are expected to be present. The Rev. Alice Baker is at present very sick at her home in Dallas, Texas, but we sincerely hope that she will recover in time to attend the convention, as it has been, in a great measure, through her untiring labor and self-denial that the work in Oklahoma has been advanced. The Rev. John W. Ring, a noted medium and lecturer, also Rev. S. E. G. Thorp, the first pastor of the Oklahoma City Society, will serve the convention. We hope to have many other able lecturers and mediums with us who will be mentioned later on.

There is much that may and should be done at this convention. There will be an entire new board of State Officers to elect. Let every Spiritualist attend and see that the proper persons are selected. Bring a few dollars with you, remembering that the expenses so far, have been borne by a few, and with the increase in members, the burdens ought, henceforth, to be lighter.

Come, wear the sunflower.

CHAS. S. SIMMONS.
President Oklahoma State Spiritualist Association.

Vicksburg Camp, Michigan.

The Vicksburg Spiritual Camp Meeting is progressing nicely, the end of the second week is at hand, the camp is well filled but is like the old saying, "there is always room for one more."

It seems that people are becoming more and more interested in the philosophy of Spiritualism.

Mrs. D. A. Morrill, of Grand Rapids, one of Michigan's well known workers of recent years, came to be with us August 4th. Her work has been well received, as well it might, for her lectures are surely full of inspiration. Her messages, too, are well received.

Mrs. A. E. Kibby, of Kentucky, is appreciated more as the days go by. Her beautiful messages and kindly expressions endear her to those she meets.

The mediums on the grounds are: Mrs. Jennie Martin, of Grand Rapids, who is now acting as choirlady in connection with her psychometric readings.

Miss Mattie Woodbury, of Shaftsburg, Mich., whose guides are always willing to give words of cheer to those in need.

Mr. George A. Letford, the Drummer Medium, is again making his yearly visits to the Michigan camps. During the latter part of this week he will assist in the message work. His spirit of helpfulness is felt and valued by all who know him.

Mr. Oliver Comstock, of Vicksburg, is astonishing the skeptics with his wonderful fire-tests, arrow-hunting and messages.

Mr. Joseph King, of Pipestone, is giving many materializing seances, having good results.

Mrs. King, of Coldwater, a sincere medium, is also with us during the entire season.

Miss Elizabeth Harlow and Pres. H. D. Barrett will speak next week, a great feast in thoughts is expected.

Evening meetings and circles are being enjoyed by campers and visitors.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

OUR CHILDREN.

Hints From Practical Experience for Parents and Teachers.—By Paul Carus.

In this little book "Our Children," Paul Carus offers a unique contribution to pedagogical literature. Without any theoretical pretensions it is a strong defense for the rights of the child, dealing with the responsibilities of parenthood, and with the first inculcation of fundamental ethics in the child mind and the true principles of correction and guidance. Each detail is forcefully illustrated by informal incidents from the author's experience with his own children, and his suggestions will prove of the greatest possible value to young mothers and kindergartners. Hints as to the first acquaintance with all branches of knowledge are touched upon—mathematics, natural sciences, foreign languages, etc.—and practical wisdom in regard to the treatment of money, hygiene and similar problems. 207 Pages. Price, cloth, $1.00.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 24, 1907 NO. 926

THE PILGRIM HOME.

Dr. J. M. Peebles, the Veteran Spiritualist, Has Returned to Battle Creek, Mich., Hale and Hearty in His Fifth Trip Around the world.

So much interest has been manifested in the travels of Dr. J. M. Peebles during his absence from Battle Creek throughout the past year, that we have induced the doctor to give us a more complete account than his letters mailed en route could furnish, his time being then too fully occupied to permit of his writing at as great length as his interesting experiences would have warranted.

In interview, the doctor said that travel was wonderfully educational. It lengthened the chains of friendship, enlarged human nature and tended to promote the brotherhood of humanity.

"The three great teachers of this age are the press, the pulpit and foreign travel," said the doctor. "The press, appealing directly to human nature, directs public opinion, and is one of the mightiest agencies of this age. The newspaper has become a fireside and table companion the wide world over.

"It may surprise the reader to know that Calcutta, India, prints four daily papers in English, three dailies in Bengalese and one in Hindustani. In the principal cities of India and Ceylon there are printed dailies, weeklies, and monthly magazines. Being in close connection with the English press, they are posted in regard to the political and religious doings of America.

"The Hindus are a very religious people, and think Americans very irreligious. They at once refer you to our holding for many years 4,000,000 slaves. They refer you to lynching and burning colored people at the stake; they refer to the slums in cities right under the shadow of church steeples, and so say in trumpet tones that they do not want these christian influences of America brought to their country.

"In this they show only a partial knowledge of christianity—that is, the christianity of Christ rather than that of creeds. They claim Jesus Christ as one of their prophets. He was an Asiatic, they say, and not a western scientist, and they reminded me more than once that while 'Jesus had not where to lay His head' and that John's meat was locust and wild honey, Rockefeller was a billionaire and the lands were mostly owned by rich landholders. They have gathered these things largely from the English press which is reflected largely in oriental countries.

"Speaking of lands reminds me of two of the passengers on the Manuka from New Zealand who had the cabin next to mine. These were Mormon elders who had been on a three years' missionary tour in New Zealand. With some prejudice against Mormons, I found these elders not only gentlemanly but scholarly and broad minded. They informed me that they had solved the 'rent' business, for 95 per cent of Western Mormons own their own homes.

"They send out each year 1,000 missionaries to all parts of the world. These elders have no stipulated salary and they seemed so enthusiastic in their religious convictions, and had been so self-sacrificing—a proof, by the way, of their sincerity—that I greatly enjoyed their companionship.

"We all know that polygamy does not now exist, at least legally, among this people. In talking with them about what they term plural marriages, or celestial marriages, they at once referred me to Abraham, Jacob, the patriarchs and David who were biblical polygamists, and they were very careful to add that while they personally did not approve of the plurality of wives, they thought it more honorable than for merchants and wealthy men of America to secretly keep their paramours."

"The Mohammedans number in India 40,000,000, and are noted for their bigotry and superstitions. There are more than a dozen subsects among the Mohammedans. The Ameer of Afghanistan is a rigid Mohammedan, and when he came into India with his court the Mohammedans, to honor him, proposed to sacrifice 100 cows. This the Hindus sternly opposed, the cow being a sacred animal. The matter being laid before the king, the Ameer, he said frankly, 'I will not permit the sacrifice of cows, that might so injure their religious feelings. If you choose to sacrifice goats you can so do, but you would do me greater honor by being good, industrious people?

"I was deeply interested in seeing the Ameer, and hearing his address in somewhat broken English. He is a very independent man, tall, straight as a pine, has a roman nose, sloping forehead, deep set eyes, and in his movements really has a kindly bearing.

"The Afghans and many of the Hindus regard Americans as savages or semi-barbarians, reminding us of the mobs, hold-ups on railways, assassins of presidents, etc.—Battle Creek Enquirer.

"You would betther be thinkin' how you would be gettin' yer hat over yer horns when you get to the other place," answered Mike.—Ally Sloper.

Identity, or the True Self in Man.

A Philosophical Discussion of an Interesting and Important Subject, by Charles Dawbarn.

When a babe is born we recognize that, like everything else, he is a child of our mother Earth. His bones, his muscles, his nerves, his blood, are each and all manufactured out of planet raw material. Every molecule in his organism is the planetary compound of intelligence, substance and energy. Even if he is an idiot, every organ has to work intelligently or he would soon die. His heart must beat, his lungs inhale and exhale air, his kidneys secrete, his stomach digest and his blood flow. He has a complete system of nerves—a regular telephone system, enabling his organs to communicate and work together. If he is a normal child he will have SOMETHING MORE, and that something is not LIFE, for, as we have seen, even an idiot is full of intelligence in activity, which is "life." That SOMETHING is the object of our present study.

If we take the new-born child to pieces, we will not discover even a trace of this "something," although it may have been there from the moment of conception. We find, however, an "energy" present which will help us in our search. This energy, by which intelligence controls the little form and its organs, is so interfused with every molecule in the organism that it does its work impereceptibly, and without fatigue. The organs do their work, and hard work, too, sometimes for a century, yet the child passes into manhood and old age without sensation of weariness from the work of those organs. When those organs do, at last, stop work, and the blood ceases to flow, the human form dies, and presently goes to pieces. So we have to look further for that SOMETHING we seek, which is in the body and yet distinct from the body.

The first question is, how shall we know it when we find it? It cannot be a normal part of the form because of a remarkable distinction in the way it works. That difference tells us the secret. Its every-day name is SELF, for it is selfhood which distinguishes one being from another. The use of this "self individuality" makes the body very tired. It is always making certain parts of the body so tired that they must go to sleep and rest. It compels certain organs to work, when of themselves they would be quiet, or only move to seek sustenance. So we have found the SOMETHING we are seeking, which is in the body but not of it, and which can only use the body part of the time, yet is the real man, the guider and director of the personality we know, and sometimes love.

Having made this discovery that the man and his will, or SELF, are not one, but two distinct individuals with very different powers in one body, we are ready to discuss the difference between personality and identity, which difference puzzles so many students of the mystery of manhood.

We are all aware that the person we know and admire has not only the human form with its organs and nerves, but also what we speak of as a will or selfhood of its own, which we now perceive is quite distinct from the rest of the form. It is also true that we always include this mysterious SELF in our conception of "personality," or, if absent, as in the case of the idiot, we count him as an imperfect personality.

In sleep we have an expression of manhood. Everything is present and active save SELF. There is even a simulation of that in the sleep-walker, but in every dream the intelligence becomes grotesque and distorted because the SELF has withdrawn. SELF comes and goes. It sometimes happens that the form dies while SELF is absent, but as SELF has been in the habit of coming and going, all that has really happened—that is to say, the death process—merely keeps SELF from coming back again. Since he was always independent of the body, it is absurd to suppose that death could kill him.

In order to mark the power and the limitation of this higher and only real SELFHOOD, we will now trace a little of his manifestation, beginning with the new-born babe. If we knew enough we might go further back, perhaps beyond conception, and even into the asserted realm of reincarnation, but in this inquiry we must confine ourselves to the provable, and so learn our lesson. We acknowledge we do not know whence SELF comes, or whither he goes. Our little real knowledge is comprised in the fact that sometimes after the body is dead, SELF can once again manifest, though always in a very imperfect manner. So far as we know he is linked to but one body in earth-life. Of course he must have a form of his own. He could not come and go without form, but what that form is we do not know. We are told by some of these SELFS which return, and by our own clairvoyants, that a copy of the mortal form, but of finer material, continues as a sort of duplicate of the old personality. We presume that SELF uses that new form as he used the earth body, but, under universal law he will still come and go, because he is just what his name implies—an independent SELFHOOD, and necessarily with a form of his own. So, confessing our total ignorance as to the nature of SELF, we will watch him attempting to get control of a new-born babe.

See the babe lie on its nurse's knee—just a molecule of planet life. Its own form intelligence is already there. Its little organs are assuming their several duties in adaptation to planet life and atmosphere. For a while that is all you see. Sometimes such a babe dies, and then the student discovers a brain with plenty of convolutions, but never a scratch on them. Let us remember that, like the disc of a phonograph, once scratched with a tune or a word it can repeat itself indefinitely. That repetition is memory. The remarkable fact is that the infant, or the man, has almost no power existing within his mortal organism which can thus create its own memories. When the heart beats, or the brain palpitates, there is no memory of that life expression. Memory is thus almost entirely the work of SELF, even in that new-born babe.

Professor Elmer Gates divided a litter of puppies, and some he proceeded to train, while the rest were left to their normal activity. The interesting result was that presently the brains of those he had taught had evolved cells that were not there in the beginning, because the untrained puppies did not have them. The interesting fact in this experiment is the alteration of brain structure as the result of outside influence.

In the case of the babe we call the influence "outside" because it comes and goes, but it does its work from the inside, and is always limited by the development of its mortal instrument. So the infant, with almost no control of its eyes or ears, makes little movements of its hands by reaching for what it wants. That is a feeble effort of SELF. It can do little before the hand will drop fatigued, but the tiny effort has made its mark on the brain, which is presently repeated and deepened into a memory. It is not long before the babe exhibits SELFHOOD at work on its eyes, ears and vocal organs, but requiring frequent periods of rest.

We now come to a most convincing fact, proving the distinction between that infant form and its SELFHOOD. It is a fact we cannot explain, for it shows a startling limitation in the power of SELF. If that child is born right-handed, every impress recorded by SELF will be on the left lobe of that child's brain. And if he is to be a left-handed mortal, it will be his right lobe that will bear that impress. But still more astonishing, there are certain localities in the lobe used by SELF for his impress or scratch which are so differentiated by the skilled scientist of to-day that a troubled patient can often be relieved by a surgical operation. For instance, the utterance of words is memorized at one spot on the brain lobe called "Broca's convolution," because Dr. Broca first proved that articulated speech was impossible if this convolution were diseased. This discovery led to many others where the passing events of life were each impressed on a definite spot on the lobe. If a patient has become suddenly affected with "word blindness," as word failure is now called, the surgeon knows the exact spot which is diseased.

This is not an anatomical essay. It is enough for the reader to recognize that self is limited to the use of one brain lobe to record his own experiences as memories, and to certain localities on that lobe. The young may sometimes make a use of the other lobe if a previous center is destroyed, but once manhood is developed such partial recovery is difficult and rare.

Now let us see what we have so far discovered. Here is the infant mortal with no apparent power of memory in his little organism until it is evolved and developed by an outsider we have called SELF, who comes and goes, and always tires that organism when he uses it. When we think of that babe as a personality, we always include both his form and organs, and also this wondrous SELFHOOD. And in that total we have evolved the personality of our mortal friend or loved one. But in our ignorance of these facts we have demanded that the form, with all its organs, and also its SELFHOOD, shall be present in the next life for instant recognition. We know the mortal form has gone to pieces, but we have been taught that a duplicate form will be all ready to give us greeting on the other side.

In a recent article on "personality" we noted the impossibility of the new form being duplicate in its organic details; but we now see that so far as that form exists, SELF must always be the foreigner he is here. When that new form is in its turn discarded, SELF will still be the real man—the ego, as distinct from the personality. He will be the IDENTITY, which, in its essence, is as near to our conception of Godhood as anything finite and a distinct entity can be. Personality after personality may be evolved, each form from finer and finer planetary material till, at last, cosmic substance must be used. It is then that the new form, freed from every earth attraction, will be guided by SELF into experiences we cannot even imagine.

At every step we see SELF at work, and sometimes he loses his hold. The infant dies before he has placed his seal upon it. SELF is not infallible. He can gain experience, but he can also fail to get the experience he seeks. The form may overwhelm him, and experiences may horribly degrade the personality. In fact it seems quite probable that the personality may sink to its own destruction, lower and lower till annihilation is achieved. SELF cannot die, but the effect upon him we cannot even guess. All suffering of which we can conceive is an organic expression through form. So, if form vanishes, and personality ceases, SELF would ultimately be freed from that which had dragged him down.

We have now reached a point where the distinction between Personality and Identity should be clear to the student. He should now see that personality will be ever changing, by either progress or retrogression. On the other hand, SELF or Identity has always a limited relation to form, for it fatigues it by use, and it comes and it goes. Comes from we know not where, and goes back to that unknown when the form is compelled to rest.

The spirit seeker chases "personality," and when found it may or may not include the SELFHOOD or Identity. In fact, the "return" seems to often act as if Identity were absent, and the form with its organic intelligence was played upon by surrounding forces. Brain impressions are apparently carried over into the new form, but if SELF is not present to control, they exhibit a jumble of intellectual confusion. At the best the visitor soon makes complaint that the "power" is gone, with little said that can give proof of Identity. The entire personality, including its SELFHOOD, which was the individual we knew in earth life, is not present. Something is absent, and that SOMETHING we now see is SELF, or the EGO of the mortal.

Here is a thought we must follow for a moment. The student of life sees SELFHOOD in every form. It accepts and rejects, even if it is a microscopic microbe. Therefore SELFHOOD is a universal fact, and an individual fact we cannot ignore. And since all forms grow fatigued, and rest, SELF comes and goes in all alike. Herein is the mystery of mysteries which no sage has unraveled. SELFHOOD'S expression is just such as form may permit, with man as the highest and best—or worst. It may be that SELF thus gains universal experience. It seems as if spirit return can throw no light on these mysteries. But the spirit seeker finds, at best, just enough of the old Identity to encourage him to persevere. It is not now working as SELF through its old form and conditions. Its new form and the old won't harmonize, and at best SELF finds himself trying to recall a past that in many details he cannot now grasp. Presently his instrument becomes fatigued, and he retires. Another SELF may try to take control, but it is no longer the Identity we seek.

So, our lesson becomes plain. Personality is for us a mortal form with a SELF in it. Identity is the SELF, that may be in that form one hour and absent the next. Identity comes and goes so long as the mortal form lasts, and if that mortal form has a spirit successor, then SELF will continue to come and go, subject to the new conditions. Personality evidently must sometime cease, but, so far as we can grasp the thought, Identity may have an eternity of experience before it.

Such is the distinction and difference, in the writer's judgment, between PERSONALITY and IDENTITY.

What Spiritualists Demand.

A Fair Trial for All Violators of the Law, from Rockefeller Down to the Worst Case of Human Depravity.

South Carolina's "pitchfork" senator, when he was in this city the other day, said to a reporter of The Journal, "As long as there are rapes, there will be lynchings."

He might have added, that while lynchings continue there will be rapes. One crime cannot be stamped out by another crime. Neither seduction, adultery, nor rape can be stopped by a murder committed in revenge of these crimes. Murders by mobs will not put an end to crimes by individuals. Scenes of mob lawlessness will not strengthen the law-abiding disposition of individuals. On the contrary, the more lynchings there are, the more crimes will be committed. They serve only to arouse the ferocious feelings, the savage instincts of man and make the crimes committed more brutal, as well as more numerous.

Senator Tillman, we do not doubt, is courageous and honest, and says fearlessly just what he thinks. We admire him for this quality, which has been shown in conspicuous contrast to the trimming, temporizing course of some of his colleagues in the senate. But a bulldog, and even some "yaller" dogs are courageous, while something more than honesty is necessary in dealing with public questions. There are many dolts who are perfectly honest. With wrong views, and in power a man's honesty may make him the more mischievous. The founders of the Spanish Inquisition and their successors were men of undoubted honesty. And yet, by selecting for death or imprisonment the best men of their country during a period of 300 years, they contributed very largely to the decline and decay of the once great Spanish nation. James the Second, of England, was a better man, morally, than was Charles the Second. Yet the very conscientiousness of the former, with his religious ideas, made him a persecutor, while opposite traits in the latter saved the country from many horrors. An honest, wrong-headed fanatic, unchecked, may bring great calamities upon a country. Intellectual error may be more dangerous than moral error. "Hell," it is said, "is paved with good intentions." One may have good intentions and very bad inclinations, as well as hurtful principles and policies.

Now, Senator Tillman, while morally honest, is intellectually erratic, prejudiced, fanatical, and explosive, and his views are as distorted as his reasonings are often illogical, and his expressions violent and extravagant. He does not view great subjects in the unimpassioned light of the intellect. His prejudices and his bigotries, deep and ineradicable, impair his intellectual integrity and often vitiate his conclusions.

Tillman defends lynchings when the victims are negroes. He thinks that lynching is the right kind of punishments for assaults upon white women by colored men. In other words, when the offender is a negro he should not be given the benefit of a trial or the chance of defense, but should be strung up by a mob. Angry, infuriated men should take the law into their own hands and be, at the same time, judge, jury and executioner. The courts in such cases should not be opened to the accused, and there should be no legal procedure, no observance of the forms of law. As soon as caught, the man identified as a criminal should be rushed to the nearest lamp post or tree and hanged, if not shot to death on the spot where he was captured.

The liability of a mistake by a mob, or by an excited victim of assault, as to the identity of the assailant, and the possibility of lynching a man innocent of the crime, without a trial in court, with the safeguards to the prisoner, as well as the opportunities for rigid examinations which the court affords, do not enter into Tillman's consideration. He does not see that the object of the law is to prevent individuals or mobs taking the punishment of offenders into their own hands. He does not see that courts are established to prevent rash acts against real or supposed offenders by the parties aggrieved, and to protect the innocent, falsely charged, as well as to convict the guilty who are deserving of punishment. He does not realize that disregard of law in special instances fosters lawlessness in general. He does not appreciate the fact that for men to live together there must be some tribunal to which all members of society can appeal when their rights are infringed, or when they are charged with criminal acts, and that every time an individual or a collection of individuals ignore this tribunal and assume the exercise of its functions themselves, they weaken the power of the constituted authorities, and encourage disregard of the fundamental conditions of social life.

Senator Tillman talks like an ignorant man, dominated by anger and revenge, unable to take rational or judicial views of this subject. Action from impulse and the unreasoning mob spirit, and not on principle and by regular legal procedure, is what he advocates.

This seems to result from his hatred of the negro race. He says that he is a friend of the negro. Indeed! Would a friend of the race clamor for the shooting and hanging of negroes charged with crimes, without trial, without even the semblance of a trial? Would a friend of negroes applaud such shootings and hangings by frenzied, excited, furious, irresponsible mobs, whenever and wherever they occur?

Tillman would treat the negroes the same as he does dogs, horses, and cattle, that is, he would avoid inflicting upon them needless suffering, without provocation of some kind, and he would deal with them kindly, so long as they should remain contentedly in a servile condition, acknowledging by their acts their natural inferiority and subordination to the whites and show no ambitions or aspirations to rise in the social scale, and no desire to be measured as individuals by their mental and moral worth.

If they commit revolting crimes he would have them treated just as dangerous animals are treated, killed without trial, and as if they were not men, and were without rights except such as the whites choose to grant them.

It is a little too much to say that Tillman feels as kindly toward negroes as he does toward dogs and horses, for his mind has dwelt so long upon the negro question, upon the sexual and social phases in which contemplation and discussion he has conceived the negro to be a brutal, lustful creature, to be kept in subjection with the lash and the haller, whose very presence in the country threatens the purity of the white blood and who must be in constant subjection, subjugation and fear lest he work himself into the society of the dominant race, that Tillman's attitude toward the negro has come to be one of aversion, contempt, and hostility. He can be kind to individuals of the race such as he employs at his home, but his feeling toward the race as a whole is one of honest dislike and hatred. He cannot discuss the negro question without denouncing and abusing the colored race, and using bitter invective against those who, while deploring assault by blacks upon white women, and by whites upon black women, denounce lynching, and demand a fair trial for all violators of the law, whether they be white or black.

It is not a question of miscegenation, nor an association of the races on terms of social equality, as Tillman is accustomed to assume. People, generally, from choice and instinct associate with members of their own race, avoiding association with those of other races. Education, wealth, and personal influence in individuals serve somewhat to lessen the race feeling, but with the masses it is so strong that even among individuals of two types so unlike as are the Caucasian and the negro, the influence of culture and wealth can do but little to break down the social barrier between the two races. When, therefore, one pleads for justice to negroes charged with crimes, to ask him if he wants to see negroes associating with whites, with the consequent mixture of races, is to exhibit, if not spiteful imbecility, at least marked feebleness of the thinking power.

Those who are in secret sympathy with negro slavery as it once existed in the country, and are "cussing" the negroes in season and out of season, do not show a just or democratic spirit. Putting forth their ideas as "democracy" is simply ridiculous. They are not democrats. They are political Bourbons; they are social "survivals;" they are intellectual fossils. True democracy does not seek the degradation of any race. But it seeks to protect all men of every race, color, religion, and condition, in their right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and to secure for all, as far as posible, equal opportunities in the struggle to obtain the necessities, comforts and luxuries of life.

TRUE CHRISTIANITY.

Jesus Not an Ideal Personage—His Teachings Will Not Bear the Light of Modern Criticism.

In The Progressive Thinker of July 13 is an article by C. E. Ingram, under the heading "A New Evangelism." While I do not doubt the sincerity of Mr. Ingram, I think he is much mistaken in regard to the teachings of Christ and "true Christianity." Mr. Ingram says:

"The teachings of Christ, as handed down to us through the Scriptures, were grand and beautiful in their sweet simplicity, as were all the teachings of this nature before this time; but what a vast difference there is between his teachings and the teachings of that religion that was built up for him in his name. The sweet, loving precepts of the lowly Nazarene have nothing in common with the latter. His teachings are heavenly in their pure conceptions, and are soul-purifying and uplifting in their sweet grandeur—full of love and hope, faith and good works, not vaunted up, doing good at all times when and where possible; while the latter is debasing to the human soul that is touched with its influence, and while it has carried civilization to many nations, yet it has also carried to them the torch of destruction, torture, murder, rapine, and, in fact, all the known evils of so-called civilization."

As for "the teachings of Christ as handed down to us through the Scriptures" being "grand and beautiful in their sweet simplicity," we would be pleased to know what particular teaching Mr. Ingram had in mind. His "Sermon on the Mount" is impractical, absurd and immoral. He taught "Take no thought for the morrow [the future], etc.

Every seed planted for a future crop, every house built, and, in short, every other thing for the good of mankind has been done contrary to that teaching.

Even a dog will bury a bone, that he may have it to-morrow. No animal so foolish as to heed such a precept.

He taught, "Resist not evil." I, being an Atheist, believe we should resist even the temptation to do evil ourselves, and also resist others who would do us evil, otherwise we encourage them in evil doing.

"But I say unto you that ye resist not evil, but whosoever smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also."

In this we are forbidden to protect ourselves from bodily assault or injury. A woman would not be allowed to protect her virtue if assaulted. "Resist not evil," one "sweet, loving precept of the lowly Nazarene."

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved (regardless of his sins), but he that believeth not shall be damned (regardless of his virtues); that is another of his "sweet, heavenly teachings;" that is "soul-purifying and uplifting in its sweet grandeur."

He is made to say, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another," and in contradiction of the same bit of heavenly, love-inspiring, soul-uplifting sweetness he says: "If a man come unto me and hate not his father and mother, and brother and sister, and wife and children, yea, and his own life [self], he cannot be my disciple." Again: "Think not that I come to bring peace. I come not to bring peace, but a sword. To set the son against the father and the father against the son, and the mother against the daughter * * * and a man's foes shall be those of his own household."

This meek and lowly Nazarene was the most arrogant character that we ever heard of. He claimed to be the very God. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." He claimed the Deific power to forgive sin, and to delegate that power to others. So why not the priesthood sell indulgences? Why not forgive sin as well before as after committed? He was lord and master of his disciples.

His teaching of "believe or be damned" is responsible for the inquisition, with all its horrors. Most, if not all, of the crimes, bloodshed and cruelties laid at the door of the modern church had their incipiency in the false teachings of Christ; and it is a well known fact that the farther the church and the people stray from the teachings of primitive Christianity, and that mythical personage, the better they are.

Compare the church and the people of to-day with those of a hundred years ago. Christ claimed to be greater that Solomon. Very many more such sayings and teachings might be cited, but those will suffice.

It is claimed he taught universal brotherhood, but on one occasion he said: "I proceed forth and come from God, but you [his audience] are the children of your father, the devil, and his works you will do."

Strange brotherhood that, but quite meek and lowly! But I must bring this to a close by saying it is nauseating to hear and read of such a character being lauded as a worthy ideal.

Seeking to Improve Conditions

Stirring Words from the President of the Missouri State Spiritualist Association.

Sophia B. Seip and Brother Francis hit the nail several times on the head, in The Progressive Thinker, number 924. The causes leading up to the arrest and prosecution of Sister Noyes and others lie deeper than the mere desire on the part of some petty officials to prosecute Spiritualists or Spiritualism. We are but reaping what we have sown. The result was inevitable. We have been so busy denouncing and endeavoring to reform the orthodox, the Christian scientist, the Theosophist, that we have neglected to keep our own house clean, and now for the protection of the community our neighbor is doing it for us, and we don't like it a bit.

We have been so busy locating the weak points of our neighbor that we have entirely neglected to locate and remedy our own. And we have a few.

1. Confusion as to what Spiritualism really is.
2. Lack of co-operation.
3. Lack of proper regulation.
4. Fraud and commercialism.
5. Selfishness, and a lack of love for humanity.
6. Ignorance and undeveloped mediumship on our platforms.

In the first place, what is Spiritualism to us as an organized body? A religious Cult, a scientific philosophy, or a commercial enterprise? I imagine I can see some of you smile, but wait; I am perfectly serious I assure you.

I am well aware of the fact that we are incorporated as a religious body, but I know also that many of our brightest philosophers and thinkers dispute the religious side and contend that Spiritualism, per se, is a scientific philosophy, and should be studied and investigated as such. The religionists, however, contend that while Spiritualism, per se, can be scientifically demonstrated and its philosophy is in accord with science, yet it is first of all a religion; in fact, the religion of all religions. As for the commercialists, they adapt their position to the company they are in and use both sides to the fullest extent of the law; and the press, public, city officials that we so often say do not know what Spiritualism is, give us up in despair, often in disgust.

One of the first questions asked by city authorities when protesting for our rights, DEFINE THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN YOUR MEDIUMS AND THE FORTUNE TELLER. That should be easy to say. I admit it should be, but under existing conditions is it, if you are truthful? For my part, I frankly confess that the only difference I can see between the religious medium, head of a religious society, who passes out cards with the words, "Business Medium" printed thereon, has a large sign on the door of his or her home, and advertises in the papers, is not favorable to the medium. The one pays the city for a license to conduct, either honestly or dishonestly (as the case may be), a commercial enterprise. He or she is perfectly frank—nothing at least hypocritical about them; they are out for the almighty dollar, and don't care who knows it. The other under a religious cloak has the same object in view, the almighty dollar, but in order to cheat the city out of the price of a professional license, in order to more easily reach the public and in order to ride on half fare on the railroads, they hypocritically assume a religious guise.

Mind you, I do not here question the genuineness of their mediumship; but the fact remains that business cards given out at a religious meeting, a charge at the door, are business methods, or rather, methods of conducting a business enterprise, and no stretch of the most vivid imagination can make it otherwise; and when we as an incorporated religious body not only permit this, but even endeavor to defend them in it, by making the false statement that they are practicing their mediumship as part of their religion, and should as religious workers be exempt from the payment of a city license, we are placing ourselves in a very peculiar (to put it as mildly as possible) position.

If we are to be known as a religious body, in the sacred name of real religion, let us eliminate from among us such grafters. Let us check with a firm hand, the sensational psychological side-show run at ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents per, in the name of Spiritualism, or let us not complain when the intelligent public, the press and city officials, refuse to take us seriously as a religious body. But you say: "Brother McArthur, you are unjust. There are but few societies and mediums resorting to such methods." Thank God, that's true. But there are just enough to damn the innocent and place the consistent conscientious medium in the position Sister Noyes is in Los Angeles, Cal.

In the name of those dear self-sacrificing souls who have trampled self under foot and are giving up the best years of their lives in order that organized Spiritualism may be built up, and the world be cheered and uplifted through a knowledge of spirit return; in the name of those societies who scorn to use such methods but are damned with the bad just the same, and in the name of our beloved Cause, which has been under a blight so long on account of such things being done in its name, I earnestly urge that steps be taken to regulate these crying evils; that we define plainly, fairly and squarely for the press, public and different city authorities, WHAT OUR CONCEPT OF SPIRITUALISM REALLY IS, and what we as an organized body stand for. The time has come when organized Spiritualism for the sake of its future standing and prosperity SHOULD DEFINE ITS POSITION ON THESE VITAL QUESTIONS.

Can we expect the public and government to draw the line between our workers and the fortune teller, when we do not? Just recently a bill was defeated by a sister State Association that was aimed largely at the bogus medium and fortune teller, but on account of this lack of proper regulation, it was necessary in order to defend the legitimate worker to fight also for the commercial grafter. I do not believe from conversations held with the city officials and lawmakers that they have any desire or disposition to infringe upon the religious rights of the Spiritualists, or interfere with, or prevent the genuine psychic from honestly exercising his or her powers as a religious demonstrator, but as long as we cannot ourselves honestly explain the difference and have no rules rigidly defining and drawing the line, just that long we shall be classed with and fought against as traffickers in the affection of the mourner for his or her departed, endeavoring under the guise of religion to cheat the government out of the price of a commercial license.

For us to deny that these things are true, and MUST be remedied, preferably by ourselves, if not, of necessity by the authorities, is to close our eyes owlwise to the sun. Let us face this fact soberly and earnestly. I know that the temptaion to add another society to the organization, with its per capita dues, etc., is great. I know that the inducement to a poor, struggling society to resort to sensational methads in order to draw a crowd; and fill up the treasury is strong, but count the cost. Such methods draw for awhile I admit; so does a Side Show. The world is filled with people looking for amusement; but does it make desirable converts? Does it make the world brighter and better? Does it attract the student thinker? Does it make you my brother and you my sister proud to say to the world, I am a Spiritualist?

Our ranks are teeming with a brand of amusement-loving, sensation-hunting, seance-chasers, who were won over by sensational methods, and must be fed by that brand of Spiritualism (?). They are totally ignorant of our beautiful philosophy, and could not give an intelligent definition of what Spiritualism is, outside of a blind faith in the phenomena. When their faith in some particular medium is destroyed by an exposure, or they become surfeited with that kind of amusement, they throw over the whole thing, and tell inquiring friends with an owllike air, "Yes, I investigated Spiritualism thoroughly for over two years, and there's nothing in it." And for once they are right, for such, there is nothing in Spiritualism; they are not ready.

Some of us complain that the press and public are prejudiced against a belief in spirit return, so much so that everything pertaining to Spiritualism is barred from the press, whereas there never was a time when the public were more generally interested in phenomena and Psychic Research Societies for the purpose of investigating and teaching it, and students and thinkers are joining by the score. Here in St. Louis there are three or four classes conducted by college professors, and more forming; but they steer clear of the brand labeled Spiritualism. WHY? Again the most powerful manifestations are occurring at the homes and through the organisms of people who know nothing of Spiritualism or mediumship, indicating plainly that the angel world is not depending on or even using the Spiritualists to the extent they could. WHY?

Understand, I am not blaming the National Board for the failure of the State Associations and Spiritualists at large to do their duty. Year after year that fearless leader, Harrison D. Barrett, in able articles and his annual messages has called the attention of the delegates to these evils and urged that they be remedied, only to have his petition denounced and the matter laid over for some future time. WHY?

Are we afraid to face it? Are we fearful, some of us, that if we express our honest opinion, some of our lecture engagements will be cancelled? Can anyone give a logical reason why a medium, because he or she is one, should be excused or defended in wrong doing? I know the old question will be asked, "Don't you want the medium to live? Yes, but not as a religious hypocrite. If she is practicing her mediumship in order to make a living, her place is among the fortune tellers. It is true that the speaker and medium should and must be supported, but that should not have been THE cause of their entering the work. The true worker is the one who gives out without a thought of self or gain because of their love for humanity.

I know that almost all of our leading speakers and mediums have gone on record as being opposed to questionable methods, but how many of them have done anything to check the rising tide of fraud, greed and ignorance? How many when the opportunity presents itself to ACT avail themselves of the opportunity? Why do so many (and I could name them) accept engagements to occupy jointly the platform with those who they know to be tricksters? ARE THEY CONSISTENT? Is that not an endorsement by them of the fraud? Oh, for a little courage, a little self-sacrifice. These are the things that are causing the intelligent self-respecting Spiritualists, many of them, to quit the ranks in shame and disgust. These are the things that make the public view us and our profession of righteousness with a suspicious eye.

I know these statements will not be relished; truth seldom is. I know that my position will be misunderstood and even misrepresented; be it so. I want to say that I pen this article in no spirit of fault-finding, but with a sincere desire to assist (as much as in me lies) in placing our beloved Cause in its proper position. I am not fighting the wrong-doer. I have carefully refrained from indulging in personalities, (although I have the ammunition). I am fighting the conditions that make these things possible.

But it has often been argued, radical action will destroy the movement. If Spiritualism can only be built up through fraud, falsehood, greed and selfishness, then it is unfit to live. But that argument is as false as hell itself. I think one of the best answers I can make is to cite you to the unflinching fight made by The Progressive Thinker against fraud and all questionable methods, and its attendant success as a result. Four Girls in One.

The Saint, the Shadow, the Devil, the Woman —The Wonderful Multiple Personality of Christine Beauchamp That Puzzles Medical Science—A Study for Occult Students.

The saint, the shadow, the devil, and the woman [as set forth in the Chicago Tribune] all dwelt together in the capacious bosom of one Christine L. Beauchamp, who was none of the four, a composite of them all, and as yet an undiscovered lady when the physician was called to find her.

Otherwise put, Miss Beauchamp was a young woman of multiple personalities happily discovered and put together by Dr. Morton Prince of Tufts College Medical school and the Boston City hospital and thus saved from the unhappy fate of the salpetriere in Paris, where the multiple personalities people live together hopelessly entangled. The saint, the shadow, the devil, and the woman come and go in kaleidoscopic succession, many changes often being made in the course of twenty-four hours.

With each change her character becomes transformed and her memories altered. That is to say, to the real original or normal self, the self that she was born and intended by nature to be, she may be any one of the three different persons, different in train of thought, different in views, beliefs, ideals, habits, temperaments, different in acquisitions, tastes, habits, experience, memories; Miss Beauchamp the saint, reticent, ascetic, introspective, bookish, religious, or B 1 in the doctor's books; the shadow, or B II, who was Miss Beauchamp the saint in the hypnotic state; BIII, the devil or Sally, an impish romp, who despised books and had little culture, who was at first thought to be a second hypnotic state, but later proved to be a distinct personality, a subconscious self, and lastly, B IV, the woman, or as Sally said, the saint, self-willed and high-tempered, inclined to learning, but no religion. B 1, whom the world knew as Miss Beauchamp, the student at a New England college, knew nothing of the other personalities; B IV apparently knew something but really nothing directly beyond isolated impressions of B I, and nothing of B III, Sally. B III or Sally knew all about the acts of the other two, but the thoughts of B 1 alone.

Nervous Shock Scatters Her Parts.

In childhood the girl had lived alone in a dream world, unloved by the mother whom she worshiped from afar At 13 her mother died, producing a profound shock upon her nervous system. Later on she was the victim of an accident, and by that time the mischief of disintegrating her personality was nigh achieved.

In 1898 Dr. Price found her. Miss Beauchamp generally was known to be a semi-invalid, liable to periodical breakdowns. That is all that was and is known except to a few. Yet she managed to get on somehow.

The home life was particularly trying. There were apt to be two or more baths, for IV would never believe there had been one unless she took it herself. A trivial matter, but what answer was she to make to the other inmates of the house when told she just had taken one bath? After the bath came dressing. Suppose it was B I who began and suppose Sally had not hidden some of the most important articles. When nearly dressed B IV as likely as not would arrive and then off would come everything, to be replaced by clothes to the latter's taste. The hair would be done all over in another way. Lucky it was if B I did not come again before finishing and all did not have to be done once more.

Different Personalities Cannot Agree.

Then came the family breakfast, involving difficulties. Next the family papers, exercises and letters. Where were they? Had Sally destroyed them, or IV, or B I?—somebody always objected to something—and so on. Before the day began there was three hours' hard work, requiring unending patience and much strength.

B I and B IV both had learned to write shorthand and used the typewriter. Sally could do neither. During the instruction B I and B IV often would change with each other and, of course, each would be oblivious to what had gone before. Yet they managed to become proficient. The knowledge of shorthand enabled B I and B IV to keep notes of engagements and duties so that when a change took place the one coming could keep or perform them. A memorandum was made of every task; this enabled either with the help of a few inferences and when necessary a little "fishing" to go on with what she found herself doing. If a letter it was not difficult with what already had been written and the memorandum to finish it. If the clew was insufficient a note in shorthand to herself would await the change of personality. In the absence of a memorandum sometimes no amount of inferences or guessing would suffice.

Social Life Maze of Complications.

Social life with the infirmity successfully disguised was difficult but possible. B I and B IV were unusually reticent about themselves and Sally was only too anxious to be thought Miss Beauchamp to disclose the secret of her own existence. While the varying moods made Miss Beauchamp a "strange, incomprehensible" character no one suspected that they represented alterations of personality.

The chief difficulty lay in the hostilities between personalities. B IV's determination to manage her life in her own way, even to the arrangement of the furniture and her mode of dress, was one of the great troubles and came next to Sally's interference. When her health was bad, and insomnia and anxiety had done their work, the successive transformations might be a dozen a day. The wrangling lay almost entirely between IV and Sally. Poor Miss Beauchamp no longer was a factor. Sally disregarded her as insignificant and said she was "no fun." She would not battle, but patiently, religiously sought to do penance for her sins—the sins of her other selves.

Lays Plot to Conquer.

Finally IV became determined to down Sally—to "conquer this thing," to continue the sole personality and obtain her freedom. Sally would call IV all kinds of names, saying that she had no sense of honor, no moral sense, or anything else. IV declared Sally to be untrustworthy, a child without sense. They showered each other with criticisms. If all this had affected only Sally and B IV it would have been comical enough, for neither of the two possessed feelings to be hurt, but poor Miss Beauchamp, B I often caught a blow intended for one of the others. One night Sally piled all the furniture, everything movable, on the bed and then left in favor of IV. But IV foiled her. She rolled herself up in a steamer rug and slept on the floor. The joke and the misery come to Miss Beauchamp, for instead of waking in the morning as IV she awoke as Miss Beauchamp, to whose lot it fell to put all the furniture back to place.

War Leads to Delivery of Ultimatum.

Finally IV issued an ultimatum to Sally. It ran as follows: "No interference with mail. No letters to Dr. Prince or myself, except in the case of myself, when they may be absolutely necessary to give information. No more snakes, toads, spiders, and such absurdities. No more hallucinations whether of sight, touch, or hearing. No more nonsense concerning Dr. Prince. Also she must not receive or spend any money beyond a fixed weekly allowance which shall be given her—and to keep it separately and spend it as she may choose. She must not destroy any notes or interfere in any way with the work to be done. She must allow free choice of friends, and determination of food, drink, and wear as well as place of abode."

Hostilities opened at once. Sally now confiscated all the papers belonging to B IV which she could lay her hands on, including many pages of lecture notes difficult if not impossible to replace, and dogged her steps with hallucinations. As B IV walked the streets she found herself with black moving draperies, an endless procession of black-robed figures, most of them with countenances that changed horribly from moment to moment.

The climax came when Sally took to physical torture. After scratching the arms full length with a sharp pointed instrument Sally bathed the scratches with alcohol and made them sting. Then she rubbed in lemon juice, saying it was good treatment.

"Sally" Resents Refusal of Recognition.

One of Sally's grievances against IV was that the latter refused to recognize her as a real person and regarded her only as delirium. Then IV's air of superiority was more than Sally could bear and stung her to the quick.

With astuteness IV now proposed to Sally to recognize her as a real person and to make various other concessions provided Sally in return would do certain things. IV would also concede to Sally: 1. Half the family funds to spend as she pleased. 2. Half the time. 3. The right to employ her time in her own way and after her own tastes. In return for this Sally was to: 1. Keep IV fully informed of everything that took place while Sally and B I were on the scene. 2. Help IV in awkward situation when pressed for matters of which she was ignorant—such as when suddenly coming to herself she would be ignorant of what had occurred a moment before when she was Sally. 3. Prevent B II from giving Dr. Prince any information which IV did not wish him to have. 4. Combine with IV to get rid of Miss Beauchamp by suppressing her letters, preventing personal interviews between her and the doctor, and generally terrorizing her by misinformation, threatening letters, and a dozen other ways. 5. Conceal all from Dr. Prince.

Coalition Formed by Two.

All this agreed with Sally's wishes. A coalition was formed between Sally and B IV against B I and Dr. Prince. They planned a trip to Europe. Poor Miss Beachamp was in despair. The financial consideration alone of the European trip was distressing. Yet she had promised to leave with a Miss K. who had arranged accordingly. She appealed to the doctor for help. Dr. Prince's idea was that if B I and B IV could be fused into one character, a fusion which would be the resurrection of the original Miss Beauchamp and the restoration of the original mental relations. Sally could sink out of sight and disappear into her original subconscious abode if she had one; because, among other reasons, with the synthetizing of the dissociated personalities into one personality a considerable part of Sally's field of consciousness, that is, the motor part, would also be amalgamated with the main personality and Sally's field would be so far despoiled that there would not be enough left to constitute a personality capable of independent spontaneous activity.

Elimination Process Decided On

"To dispose of Sally in this way after our long friendship seemed cold blooded, and I confess to certain qualms. The choice had to be made, and the law of psychology condemned Sally. Sufficient of this plan was told B IV to obtain her co-operation. More than this he did not dare disclose, for if Sally got wind of the whole scheme, as she certainly would if I revealed it all, for she heard whatever was said, she would do everything in her power to thwart my endeavor to get rid of her."

Accordingly, B IV or B I, as the case might be, was hypnotized daily and the proper suggestions given to B II. As a result, a personality was obtained and kept in existence which seemed to be a combination of I and IV. She remembered her life as I and as IV. She had lost the bad temper and willful self-determination of IV and the emotional idealism of I. She was just a normal, healthy minded person, and when she was in existence Sally sank out of sight, squeezed and imprisoned, helpless within the "bastile of the healthy mind, and unable to get out." The real Miss Beauchamp clearly distinguished the various periods when she was B I and B IV and recognized her different characteristics in each.

Combination Checked by Every Strain.

It seemed to her that when she was B I she was simply distressed and tired, while when she was IV she was comparatively well and buoyant. Physically she was well. The neurasthenia had vanished in the twinkling of an eye. In place of pains, fatigue, and insomnia she boasted of a joyous feeling of well being, of freedom from every discomfort, of peaceful nights and freedom from disturbing dreams. She was free from impulsions and obsessions; she exhibited no abnormal suggestibility.

The real Miss Beauchamp at first was not permanent. She had the same emotional and psychical makeup which was permanent in I and IV. After continuous exposure to mental and physical strain of a sudden emotional shock her personality at first tended once again to disintegrate into separate selves. And all the old friends appeared with multiple mental life. But after experimenting a period of years—six or seven in all—Dr. Prince solidified the real self to such a degree of mental cohesiveness that she has remained unchanged for six months and promises so to remain as long as she is guarded from strain.

Six Months Without Disintegration.

And Sally? "With the resurrection of the real self she goes back to where she came from, imprisoned, unable either to come at will or be brought by command. Automatic writing, speech, and such phenomena cease, and it has not been possible as yet to communicate with her and determine what part if any she plays in Miss Beauchamp's subconsciousness, or whether as a personality she exists at all. When, however, as a result of some mental catastrophe, she appeared again as alternating personality, her language implied a persistent existence as a subconsciousness like that of her early youth and as described in the autobiography. Nevertheless the resurrection of the real Miss Beauchamp is through the death of Sally."

Of Sally, her life and her doings, the real Miss Beauchamp knows nothing, excepting indirectly. Of this part of her mental life she has no more memory than has I or IV.

IMPORTANT LESSONS.

As Given Me by My Spirit Teachers Thirty-seven Years Ago.

The spirit of universal inquiry is abroad to obtain definite knowledge on all lines of mental exercise past and present. All that is now received by the world through its numberless avenues, as higher truths, also that which pertains to the lower branches of study in man's school-course, is criticised and investigated, as the direct result of the force brought to bear upon the minds of humanity by said spirit of inquiry.

So-called Holy Writ is being questioned and carefully the records are retraced, to learn whence originated existing errors, and to what motives were or are due the interpretations which changed the original true meaning into error.

It is well to ask: Is truth Persian, Egyptian or any of the older cults? Or is that truth which bears the Jewish, Greek or Christian label? We would say there is truth in all and error in all. All the world's bibles, like all the world's people from the remotest past to the present, are related, linked together. From age to age, as the world moves on, men have borrowed from what was produced by those before them, as mankind is also thus perpetuated; but it is a marvelous truism that none of the earth races knew exactly their places in their relationship to God and Nature, and do not, or have not thus far rightly interpreted their inborn devotional or religious nature. Even these moderns, mentally en rapport with their elder brothers and sisters, in the immortal worlds, do not know where they are, and have failed, and will fail, to give clear statements of their ethical and religious platform until they cast out of themselves and out of their movement the selfish spirit, or rather all selfish motives. Then will they become all illuminated to see wherein they err and come together and reason upon all points of difference that are due to the fact that all are in different degrees of development, and the deficient must be shown by comparison the superiority of truth over error, also that truth is known only by its beneficent effects and by its power to create harmony and maintain order in the progressive onward march of adding new thought and truth, or, rather, gaining a clearer view and understanding of truths as they have been, are and ever will be. As long as mental limitations forbid a clear grasp of truth by the majority of mortals, just so long will these controversies continue to affirm and deny beliefs and acquired knowledge, and especially does this hold good in a doctrinal or religious sense.

The question of immortality is not in dispute, nor has it ever been by even the savage earth races. All ancient and modern nations long before the Christian era believed in man's conscious existence beyond the grave. Then why do modern Spiritualists lay such stress on that one fact, as if it were entirely new and they its only custodians? Dive deeper, friends, and grasp the full truth of this latter day spirit outpouring which is for all people, wherefore its thought, its spirit and purpose does infiltrate into all minds and systems of thought and religions.

Man, the thinker, impelled by the spirit of universal inquiry, discovers the missing link as well as the weak ones in the ethical systems in use, and slowly, but surely, one set of errors after another is discarded, or exchanged for that which reason approves and conscience declares true.

Up to date humanity has largely been alien to God, in spite of its ceremonial worship, and thus at enmity with itself, in blind zeal becoming the adversary of God's moral order and good citizenship, creating for itself a tempestuous atmosphere or condition through which it was compelled to pass by a conspiracy of crude forces. Now, however, a change is in progress and no matter how it seemeth, the progressive march is onward in steady steps along the true lines now.

CRITICAL ANALYSIS

It is Coming on in the Realm of Physics, as well as in the Realm of the Psychic and Occult.

To the Editor:—The scientists are advancing along the line of material research by exceedingly careful analytical investigation. Along the spiritual and occult equally as painstaking investigations are being made. The following, as set forth by John O' Laughlin, will be read with great interest:

[Special.]—The weather man is working industriously nowadays to make himself infallible. Not only is he studying meteorological conditions close to the earth, but he has started an investigation of the air at an altitude of ten miles. In adition, he is seeking to discover a secret which nature thus far has zealously guarded—the mechanics of storms.

The Smithsonian Institution has just made an additional grant to Dr. A. Lawrence Rotch, director of the Blue Hill meteorological observatory, just outside of Boston, for continuance of his work in collecting records of temperature, pressure and air currents ten miles above the earth. Dr. Rotch has flown kites as high as 15,000 feet with instruments attached, but through the use of rubber balloons of various sizes to which are attached small parachutes with baskets carrying self-recording instruments it has been possible to get records at much greater heights.

Experience has shown that as the balloon ascends and atmospheric pressure lessens, the bag expands until, reaching the limit of its tension, the rubber breaks and releases the parachute with its burden. This floats gradually to the ground, to be picked up and returned for a nominal reward.

The thermometers have registered in some cases 85 degrees below zero Fahrenheit eight miles above earth. At about seven miles relatively warm stratum was entered, which was found to be at higher level in summer and autumn.

May Solve Mystery of Storms.

Prof. Willis L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau, who has been making similar experiments at Mount Weather research observatory in the Allegheny Mountains, has found that at an altitude of 3,000 feet above Mount Weather it is just as warm at midnight as it is at midday in July in the hottest weather. It is the intention of Prof. Moore to scatter observation balloons made of rubber and paper throughout the West, then to pick out a given storm or a given cold wave and explore it. Prof. Moore thus describes his proposed experiment:

"We will say there is a storm extending from the Mississippi river to Denver and from Duluth to northern Texas. By telegraphic orders I will direct three of the stations in each quadrant of the storm to liberate a balloon, say at 9 o'clock. They will shoot straight up through that storm and the instrument carried in the parachute will record pressure, temperature and humidity. When the balloons get up to an altitude of ten miles they will explode. We can explode them at ten or even fifteen miles.

"Then the instruments will descend slowly to the earth with the records. They will be sent to Mount Weather, where, for the first time, we will be able to study the mechanics of the storm itself. No other government in the world could plan a system like that, because they have not stations under one central authority, and, with the exception of Russia, have not sufficient territory.

Effect of Dust Motes in Air.

The Mount Weather station promises to provide meteorological data of highest importance. It is intended there to measure the earth's atmosphere to find out exactly the quantity of solar energy that reaches the earth and the quantity absorbed by the air.

The air is full of dust, and it is intended to count the number of dust motes. As many as 80,000,000 of these motes have been counted in a cubic centimeter—about one-third of an inch. In theaters, hospitals, etc., there are about 5,000,000 motes in the same space. These dust atoms are nearly all vegetable and are separate and distinct from germs, but Prof. Moore asserts that germs attach themselves to dust motes.

"We have learned one important function," he continued. "It is this: if you were to eliminate dust motes from a room—if there were no dust in the air there—every person in it would be like a star stuck in a black firmament. On a perfectly moonless night if you look at the stars they are like bright, glittering objects stuck into a black background.

No Light Without Motes.

"If there were no dust motes in the room, each person would be visible, but the interval between would be inky black. You would see walls, but the space between the walls would be inky black. You could not illuminate the room without dust motes.

"The motes refract light. They take up light and scatter it and diffuse it, and thus illuminate the whole space. You say, 'What has that to do with meteorology?' We have gone further, and we find that without this same atom you could not produce rain. The presence of dust motes in the atmosphere is such that probably every little minute droplet has a little atom for a nucleus. You could not get a fog without dust motes at the center of each little minute droplet.

"We want to study in the physical laboratory, and count up these motes. We want to take samples from here, from the Farallones, from New York, and so forth, and analyze them. We want to count them every day and determine their number. We want to count them before rain falls and even during the falling of rain. That is only one of probably, I might say, 100 problems that we want to investigate at experimental stations."

The scientists, too, are extending their investigations into the realms of Psychic Phenomena. Spirit Return, in its kaleidoscopic characteristics, is being investigated as never before. The various manifestations are being examined with great care, and a superstructure established as an ever-enduring monument to sustain the TRUTH that the spirit does live after the death of the physical body.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH

OR

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

Spirit Edgar A. Poe

Gives an Interesting Narrative of His Experience in Obsession, through Justin Hulburd, a Noted Medium.

He said, "Oh, mother, mother, why did you not come to me before and tell me this? I have been such a wretched man."

She said, "My dear son, I have tried so hard and was not successful in finding an instrument to convey my thoughts through to you until today; it was I, dear boy, that brought that happy feeling to your condition. They would not permit me on any occasion to talk to you only the present one. His band claims it takes too much of his strength and shows in his acting at night, the consequence of which is debilitating to his physical organization.

"Now, I am going to reveal a secret to you. The surprise of it no doubt will mystify you for a time. You have been obsessed, dear son, by the spirit of your grandfather who was a wicked man when he lived in a physical body, and still retains part of that wicked influence. Your father and myself, with the assistance of other loved ones have broken it up to-day. Now, my son, pray for the Power of Wisdom to enter your soul and build up a strong wall between you and that influence; that wall must consist of truth, inspired by a life of morality; its foundation must be chastity in its highest element, and the great stone that fills that niche placed over your mental ability must have in it the love of God working out through every lineament and aspiration of your life. One of the parties present knows the pangs of hunger sometimes brought on by a sensibility and pain of pride, when otherwise he might ask and it would be given unto him. On this occasion, dear son, it is my desire that you assist him by a present of money. When you present him with the money also permit your blessing to go with it.

"Now, Mr. Forrest, I ask you to perform a kind act for me; it will not go unrewarded. To-day in your room I heard you say to Mr. Poe you was going into the country with the little boy to try and break up the condition of my son following you around to different hotels. That condition is broken up. The favor I ask is to take my son with you also; the powerful influence which you possess, with the soothing influence of the little boy, my son can and will become a different man. Do not refuse to grant me this request. We have broken up the influence of his grandfather, Abraham Winchester."

Mr. Forrest granted her that request, saying: "Madam, with the power of God and the holy angels I will exert myself to my utmost ability to save your son through the love I bear the children of God."

We returned to the hotel. I was presented with a check drawn to my order for three hundred dollars. I bade them all good afternoon and learned afterwards the three took a nap on the Forrest bed. After Mr. Forrest's engagement was finished, Mr. Winchester accompanied Mr. Forrest and little Puss to a hotel near the Delaware. He became a respectable citizen, loved his wife and children with the love of a moral man released from that accursed bondage called "obsession." He became known to many of the reading public as a temperance man, also in other lines.

One day while standing on the deck of a ferry boat crossing the East river from New York to Brooklyn, William Cullen Bryant approached me and said: "Poe, you are just the very man I want to see. I am on my way to visit a family by the name of Watson; they have a daughter who is quite a freak. I want you to go with me to see that young woman. She is either a freak in nature or under a powerful influence that perhaps you would designate as obsession. Mr. Sawton says 'it is a case of obsession.' He thinks she is influenced by an evil spirit to speak in the manner that she does."

I said, "Perhaps her parents would not like to have me call."

He said, "I most assuredly think they would. When I introduce you, you will find they are glad to have the pleasure of meeting Edgar Allen Poe."

I said, "If you think so, I will accompany you."

He said, "By all means, do."

When we had reached Mr. Watson's home we were ushered into the back parlor by a colored maid. I discovered after being introduced to the family, an old lady with white hair, a person that I would call a handsome grandmother. There were several others present on that occasion. I was personally attracted to that old lady; her voice to me was music in a high degree. She said: "Mr. Poe, I am glad you came to see my unfortunate granddaughter. Allow me to inform you: At certain times she is rational and reads beautifully; it makes me so happy to have her read to me. There is a great love existing between her and me."

While the grandmother and other members of the family spoke at different times, I noticed the said young lady whose name was Elizabeth, did not take any part in the conversation. While we were conversing her eyes seemed to roll in her head and at times looked very fierce. The grandmother made request, saying, "Mr. Bryant, will you please recite one of your compositions for us."

He did so. After he had finished and resumed his seat, the girl laughed in an idiotic manner and said: "I am sorry for you, poor fool. Why did you not stay out on the sidewalk and speak your part? You would collect more pennies there than you will here. We are all so poor and can't pay the rent. There is a man that calls himself Watson comes around every day to collect his rent. I am afraid grandma and I will have to go to the poor-house. You know I can sing and you will be the monkey; grandma can turn the crank of the organ, and I think we'll get rich; don't you think so, grandma? That will keep us out of the poor-house."

Just then Mr. Watson entered the room. I was introduced by William Cullen Bryant, and Mr. Watson gave us a cordial greeting. After that he placed a chair close to his daughter. When seated he held both his daughter's hands in his, saying at the same time, "How is my pet to-day?"

She said, "I am happy, Mr. Watson. My husband, Jesus, will pay you the rent."

Just then the beautiful granddaughter said, "Mr. Poe, will you do us a favor by reciting one of your poems? If you do we will look upon it as a great kindness."

I arose and recited a poem, after which the girl laid her head on her father's shoulder and laughed in a hysterical manner. She said: "John, I knew you would leave the wilderness and come here to-day. Tell these people I am God's sister and the bride of Jesus Christ. I am only here for awhile; grandma and I are going to make our ascension to-morrow morning; they will all be there to witness our grand triumph; the chariot will descend to earth accompanied by a host of angels." And then she commenced to laugh again in a hysterical manner.

I made the discovery I was looking on a strange personality; that personality was a beautiful young lady obsessed by a religious fanatic. Her father said: "When she laughs in that hysterical way she generally returns to her normal condition. Let us pray, friends, "We all knelt and prayed, repeating the Lord's prayer after Mr. Watson. When seated again we sang a hymn. The grandmother said, "See, my son; my granddaughter is returning to her normal condition. Let no one question her on what they have seen and heard."

She looked at us with a beautiful smile, and said: "Isn't this a happy gathering? I am so glad I got here in time to meet you all."

The grandmother said: "Sweetheart, Mr. Cullen Bryant, who is always so kind, had Mr. Poe accompany him here to-day to meet you, dear, won't you read for us."

She went to a table, taking up a volume of Shakspeare, handed it to her granddaughter. The young lady arose, opened the book and read several passages in a beautiful manner, showing the power of elocution.

The black maid came to the door and said, "Lunch is waiting, Mr. Watson." Through the invitation of Mr. Watson we all adjourned to the dining room. When seated at the table I was surprised to find such high cultivation in that young lady's conversation. The sociability there that day was one of beauty and refinement. The love for each individual of the family was apparent on all occasions.

During the afternon that evil influence had full control, and talked in a ridiculous manner. Its conversation was so silly, and I felt it must have been disgusting to the family.

During this vile condition the door bell rang. A Quaker lady and gentleman were ushered in. They were introduced to us; that is, Mr. Bryant and myself, as Mr. and Mrs Peck. I saw they were both lovely characters. Their conversation was elevating to all who heard it. Mr. Peck adressed me, saying: "Brother Poe, does thee not think it would be good for the young lady to make a change, go away from here to some other part of the country? I can see thou affirmest what I say. Thy confirmation speaks out of thine eyes. Thou feelest as well as I, friend, the change will be beneficial."

Mr. Bryant and myself on that question acquiesced with the Quaker gentleman. Mr. Watson kindly consented that his daughter should accompany Mr. and Mrs. Peck back to their home at Newark, New Jersey, where they had a beautiful place at the suburbs of the town. I heard afterwards the changing of circumstances and surroundings was of great benefit to Elizabeth Watson. They held their home prayer-meetings, and when the spirit moved any individual they went direct to Miss Watson and gave her a magnetic treatment. In time she was restored to her normal condition and perfect health reigned supreme throughout her physical body; her mental condition was restored to a sane equilibrium whereby she became a beautiful character to her family and friends, and also to the reading public.

The discovery was made she was obsessed by a female cousin who was a religious fanatic; her spirit passed from her body in that condition. She found her cousin Elizabeth was a sensitive, threw that obsessing power upon her, thinking she would get relief from her unbalanced condition. She not only suffered through that religious influence, it was her desire to compel her cousin to suffer also. When finally she was restored to a proper spiritual condition she saw the crime she had commited through the error in compelling her cousin to suffer as well as she. When realizing fully what she had done, she made confession to a spirit who assisted her to throw off that condition, whereby she was released and once more became a sane spirit. In Mr. Peck's home there was a strong spiritual power that brought around that condition. The relief was a joyful one to all present and prayers went up from all the guests.

On one occasion while riding in a Broadway stage I noticed one of the inmates was a very fine looking man and acted in a peculiar manner. He seemed to know me and addressed me, saying: "Edgar Poe, I always thought you lacked reasoning power, and I am glad the moment has come for me to tell you so."

I noticed the other passengers commenced to smile and that smile broadened out into a laugh. I left the stage at the corner of Bleecker St., and Broadway. I had only proceeded a little way when I heard footsteps walking behind me; my new-found friend that I had met in the stage came up and took my arm, saying: "Poe, your last poem was diabolical, and now I want you to reform and become a decent man. I will assist you in giving beautiful stanzas to the world."

I asked, "What is your name, friend? I have no place in my memory of your acquaintance before."

"My name is Robert Litchfield. I am a good fellow to become acquainted with. Don't you remember I sang at the Apollo Club, and you admired my singing? When you saw me in that stage I was on my way to visit my wife and children. I have been boarding at Trenton, N. J. I did not like my boarding house, so I came to New York to make my family a visit. I say, old chap, I was attracted to you and thought I would help to make the day pleasant for you."

I told him I was going to visit a friend and it was utterly impossible to take a stranger there; we have some private business to transact—that is the friend and myself—and must be alone," thinking I'd get rid of him in this manner. I found I'd made a mistake. He said, "That's all right, I can sit on the steps and wait for you."

It looked to me as if I was in a dilemma, and did not know how to get out of it. Then he said, "Poe, let's go and get something to eat and somethink to drink? I am chillier than all h—."

It struck me that would be a good way to get rid of my friend as he called himself. When we reached the Bowery he discovered a German Beer Saloon. It was then the noon hour and they were serving up hot lunch. We gave our order. After doing so I said to my friend "I will step out for a few moments, and then return." I did not return. I went my way in order to attend to the business I had in my mind. I dined with the family and left their home about eight o'clock in the evening. As I was walking down Broadway I discovered my new friend walking between two men. As soon as I had made the discovery I crossed over to the west side of the street and was not recognized by the friennd. In the morning while sipping my coffee at a restaurant on Broadway the waiter handed me the morning paper. I saw in strong headlines: "A lunatic had escaped the vigilance of his keeper. He was discovered on Broadway, and taken back by a late train to the Insane Asylum, Trenton, N. J."

Two years afterwards I was invited to be one of a party to dine at a club on West 14th street, New York City. There I discovered my new found friend of two years ago. He did not seem to recognize me, which pleased me much. About 11 o'clock a gentleman present said to me, "Do you see that man over there?" pointing to my new found friend.

"Well, Poe, his name is Litchfield. He was an inmate of a lunatic asylum over in New Jersey somewhere. They say he was obsessed by an evil spirit. They claim he is now cured of that evil influence and is all right again.

He said: "Edgar Allen Poe, do you believe that one person can become obsessed by another person that has died and left his body and gone to spirit life?"

"Mr. Chambers, I most emphatically do; at certain times I feel a queer influence coming over me. I seek the home of a friend where I am taken care of until I come out from under that condition; at one time, friend, I was obsessed by that influence, and found wandering almost in nude condition on Long Island. I was taken to an inebriate asylum, as they thought I was drunk. I remained there two weeks, and was kindly taken care of. God bless those charitable institutions; they are like a welling spring in a desert of calamity, where every poor Arab seems to be a civilized devil looking on the ruin of another individual in that desert of perishable hopes."

He said, "Then you, too, Edgar, have had that sad experience.

"All except being incarcerated in an insane asylum."

Mr. Chambers invited me to tarry at his home that night. I did so. About 4 o'clock in the morning that cursed influence took possession of my mental abilities and wanted Mr. Chambers to accompany me to a house of ill-fame that he might indulge in his perverted ministerial passions there. Mr. Chambers told me he locked the door of the room and upbraided that influence in such a manner that he commenced to cry. The influence quieted down, begged Mr. Chambers' pardon, and commenced to feel his shameful condition. He told Mr. Chambers that before his birth he was marked to become a villain. His mother was a licentious character, deceived his father, on all occasions pretended to be a devout religious woman, when she was only a harlot that bore a respectable man's name. She was covered with a cloak of seeming religious respectability."

Mr. Chambers said: "I am sorry for you, whoever you are. I did not believe this, that one individual could obsess another. I have realized it to my satisfaction to-night. Now I want you to leave my friend Poe, never return to obsess him again. You see and understand I have a strong will power, and with the assistance of others that will contribute to give their will power with mine, I am going to break this up. You understand what I am saying; see to it that you obey my command, and if spirits from your side of life can lend their aid I will thank them for it. From this moment henceforth I will bring my will power to bear; go and never return."

The spirit thanked him and said: "You are my friend. I have been wicked and through your power I can become a better man; assist me and I will reform. When I leave Edgar Allen Poe I return to a better condition in spirit existence. The prayers of yourself and your friends in the future, backed up by your will power, will bring me to a realization that I can become a better spirit. Behold! I see the light, let us pray."

He said the influence compelled me to kneel. He offered up a prayer, asking to be guided by the higher angels in spirit life as it was his desire to become a different individual. He knew if he was once released from that bondage and curse, that he came into the world with, a true Spiritual life awaited him. Dear friend, I was released that night from the power of that evil spirit, once more a happy man until a fate awaited me from which I passed from my body in the Clay of Baltimore.

THE PATHWAY of the Human Spirit, or the Pathway of the Spirit Traced, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? THE SUB-CONSCIOUS.

In Many Respects it is a Great Mystery, and Should be Carefully Considered by Every Occult Student.

Prof. Gustavus Snee Halderman, of Berlin, who has devoted forty of his sixty years to the study of psychologic phenomena, is in New York with the purpose of interesting societies or individuals which delve into the study of peculiar mental conditions, in his conceptions of the operations of the sub-conscious mind. Prof. Halderman was in this country about eleven years ago and made a particular inquiry into the remarkable case of a reporter on the old Mail and Express who was possessed of some form of prescience which alarmed him, and for which he could not account.

"The case, while rare," said Prof. Halderman, "was not without precedent, but it was of amazing interest. To identify him by name is not necessary. He is extremely sensitive regarding his mentality, for the reason that he fears that he may be regarded as untruthful or attempting to make capital out of a condition which he sincerely wished did not belong to him. He appeared to have a sensory sensation, if it may be expressed that way, about six or seven seconds in advance—that is to say, he could presage an action and which he was powerless to avoid—like the coming of a person into the room in which he was seated and what that person was about to say, or what movement or gesticulation he was about to make. I spent many hours with him in the editorial offices of the newspaper and saw this exemplified a score of times. He invariably broke into a profuse perspiration just before this second sight or clairvoyance, or whatever you wish to term it, was demonstrated.

No Reasonable Hypothesis for It.

"The sub-conscious is the most mysterious and inexplicable condition of the human mental machine. The most profound students are unable to present anything like a reasonable hypothesis to account for it.

In the case of a physical injury to the brain there are numerous instances of the subject losing his primary identity and becoming what is to all intents and purposes a new being under a new direction, but that is due entirely to some form of brain lesion which, when corrected in time by absorption, brings the subject back to his original mental equipoise. This condition is not to be confounded with the control of the sub-conscious over the conscious brain, if I may so differentiate between the thinking faculty which is voluntary, and that which is involuntary.

"In all highly-developed and sensitive mental organisms like those possessed by poets and painters and idealists generally, the subliminal, or mental process which is not, or does not, appear to be controlled by the directive power of the mind, is existent. I have been been fortunate enough to have discovered a score or more perfect examples right here in New York, and it is my hope that I may induce the majority of them to relate their experiences, or, if possible, to give a practical demonstration of the peculiar workings of this little known mental state.

"There is one gentleman in particular, a Wall Street man, who lives on one of the cross streets near Central Park, whom I am especially desirous of bringing forward if he will give his permission. He possesses a highly idealistic temperament. He is one of the kindliest men in the world, but at times thoughts of the most terrifying character intrude themselves upon him, and his conscious willpower is unable to drive them away. The suggestion comes to him involuntarily as to what the possible effect on his future life would be if he should slay his wife and children. He never has the slightest desire to commit such a deed, but the thought will arise in spite of himself.

Cannot Help Repeating It.

'I have met a lady, also a resident of New York, and whose name is familiar to nearly all newspaper readers, who, whenever she walks in her garden, has the thought come to her, 'the rose is not the queen of flowers, the rose is not the queen of flowers.' It is meaningless, of course, but she can no more help having that sentence run through her head at that particular time than she can help breathing. She has striven with all her might to resolve that she will not permit herself to think of those words, but they seem to intrude upon her inner self and against her will.

"Another instance, and rather amusing because of its trivial nature, is that of a musician whose studio in this city is well known. The moment he plays a bar from any of Wagner's music his sub-consciousness says, 'Who killed cock robin—Wagner.' As in the other instance, this thought is involuntary, but it cannot be stifled.

"Another and equally amusing case, but a proof, nevertheless, of the existence of the sub-conscious mind and its power to control a physical function, although it really sounds very foolish, is that of a newspaper editor who cannot pass a red-haired woman on the street without turning to look for a white horse. It does not matter how much he may be absorbed in study, nor how firmly he has made up his mind never to yield to the subliminal suggestion again, he invariably turns his head the moment he passes a girl with red hair. I could continue to give illustrations, without number, and all of persons perfectly sane and of strong, forceful minds. I cannot imagine a more interesting study for the student of metaphysics and I hope that my efforts may result at least in laying the foundation for an elucidation." PAUL McARTHUR.

DRAFT SPIRIT CODE.

Chesterfield Leaders Act—Prepare Declaration of Principles for the Spiritualists of the World.

The Spiritualists in attendance at the meeting at Camp Chesterfield, received, on August 10, the report of the committee appointed to draft a set of principles fixing the meaning of clairvoyance, mediumship, prophecy and growth in the spirit world and voted to refer the statements for favorable consideration at the regular meeting of the convention, August 30.

"We declare the following as fundamental and essential principles of the religion of Spiritualism, as believed in, taught and practiced by Spiritualists of this association and the world over:

"1. That to the soul, or real man, there is no death whatever; that what is commonly called death is but transition.

"2. That the normal condition in the spirit world is constant progression.

Spirit Communion.

"4. That we recognize the fact of spirit communion and manifestation in various methods and forms, through those who are designated as mediums, possessed of certain spiritual gifts, which were quite generally and definitely referred to and described by the Apostle Paul in his letter to the church of Corinth, among which are the gifts of clairvoyance, or discerning of spirits; clairaudience, or the hearing of spirit voices and the giving of messages from ecarnate beings; the gift of inspiration and of speaking, writing or otherwise manifesting under control; also to those so endowed the gift of prophecy, whereby the controlling spirit may look forward to events in the future life of individuals in the earth life; also the power by which an arisen friend may materialize or etherealize in partial or full form.

"5. That we believe in and strictly adhere to the efficiency and power of spirit healing through persons enrowed with psychic power, whom we designate as psycho-magnetic or spirit magnetic healers; either by the use of the medium's hands to direct and distribute the spirit healing forces or by the psychic force alone, independent of physical contact. We recognize the practice of this gift as important in carrying forward the gospel or religion of Spiritualism as it was in the days of Jesus and the apostles in establishing and the work of the primitive Christian Church. The practice of all of which spiritual gifts we consider sacred and binding upon Spiritualist teachers and mediums the world over.

Brotherhood of Man.

"6. That we further believe in and teach the brotherhood of all mankind and the practical exercise of true and unselfish love of man to man in all associations and affairs of life and the strict observance of the golden rule as taught by Jesus and Confucius as a perfect manifestation of divine spirit in man."

That there are some, perhaps, many Spiritualists who will not subscribe to all the statements set forth in the resolutions was evidenced by a number of contrary votes on the passing of the resolutions to refer with favorable consideration to the convention. The scope of the fourth and fifth sections is believed to be too broad and should be more specific. Copies of the resolutions will be forwarded to other camps of Spiritualists in session throughout the world.

The legal difficulties experienced by Spiritualists within the last few years in securing bequests and protecting mediums has made it imperative that some expression of belief be formed and approved.

In his lecture this afternoon, Dr. Marvin made a plea for the support of mediums that they might be afforded an opportunity to follow their calling unburdened by those needs that are dependent upon pecuniary support. He contended that a medium that must depend for daily sustenance on her divine work could not always obtain the best results.

sas City, Mo., said at the Pisa Chautauqua on August 4, that the press and reformers like Governor Folk, had done more to eradicate graft and better humanity than all the churches. Brother Francis, by his fight for reform among the camps, by his exposures of the tricksters and frauds, has done more to clean our ranks and protect our rostrum than all of us put together.

If we are to continue as a religious body, let us live up to the principles we advocate as a religion. If a majority decide that we are to be a scientific body, let us drop the titles of reverend, form schools and classes for the investigation of phenomena under strict scientific test conditions, and use our rostrum for scientific lectures only. Let us be consistent and honest in what we do above all things.

I think it was brother R. F. Little of Seattle, Wash., who suggested in an able article some time ago, that a committee of representative Spiritualists from every State be selected or appointed to meet and discuss ways and means whereby these evils could be remedied. Their conclusions could be presented to the N. S. A. convention for adoption or rejection. As Sister Seip has intimated, there is such a rush during convention, that a majority of the delegates are not prepared to act. PAUL McARTHUR.

A Powerful Strange Force

That Would Do Away With the Mails, Telepathy and Drugs.

Would Be But Little More Startling Than the Marvelous Things Done by People Who Have Tried This Wonderful System.

How Prominent Men and Women Use It to Influence the Minds of Others—Heal Themselves and Others of Chronic Diseases, Nervous Disorders and Habits as If by Magic—Any One Can Do It—Distance No Barrier—One Person's Control Over Another Now Fully Explained.

How Every Man, Woman and Child in the World Can Have "The Secrets of Magnetic Force, Health and Power" Absolutely Free.

Professor F. T. McIntyre, a well-to-do scientist of this city, has created a sensation in the hypnotic world. Through delving down in the realms of nature's mysteries he has discovered a delicate but powerful system that seems destined to revolutionize the theories of the most noted authorities on Mind Force. Some people look upon him as a man possessing a strange power, for he has told them how to influence people far and near and to heal themselves and others of their ills as if by magic. He tells them how to project their thoughts, develop a powerful mentality and build up the mechanism of the body and brain. Doctors and magnetists who have tested the workings of his new discovery admit that it surpasses anything in the history of psychic power.

In explaining the method Professor McIntyre says: "I am convinced that everybody can accomplish the things I have done if they understand the system. It would be a grand thing if every man, woman and child in this country learned the use of this wonderful system. There should be no more disease, immorality, drunkenness, despondency, separations, poverty or failures in life. I have sent free illustrated pamphlets to people in many parts of the world, which explain the principles of my new discovery, and I find they can do the same wonderful things I have done, and for which some persons think I possess a special power. I have sent these printed pamphlets out without any charge whatever, as I am anxious to have every one try the wonders of this new discovery. The letters received from persons who tried it are the same. Many are loud in their exclamations of surprise and thanks, and say they never dreamed such things possible. I receive many fine presents and enjoy working for the uplifting of mankind and science. The kind letters received from grateful hearts more than pay for the interest I take. I will send a copy of my free book to every person who writes me without any charge whatever."

Professor McIntyre has a basketful of letters, from people in many parts of the world. They are, indeed, startling. Mr. James Kubal, a prominent business man of Chicago, writes the following:

"I never dreamed such things possible. If I had only known of this sooner. This system has made a different man of me. I shall give up business and make more money through the use of this system than I can in my business. It has brought back my sight. I can see without glasses, and work without them, too. It has overcome my backwardness, and I can now handle my customers in fine shape. I did not know I was so full of the magnetism. I think your system wonderful."

Mr. Eugene Devenson, Baton Rouge, La., writes: "Having tried your system, I unhesitatingly pronounce it to be and to do all you claim for it."

Rev. E. G. King, pastor Christian Church, Upper Lake, Cal., writes: "I cannot recommend your system too highly, and I am willing to answer any inquiries in regard to it."

Dr. H. A. Lounsburg, Wheatly, Ontario, Canada, writes: "I have thoroughly investigated the methods and inventions of Professor McIntyre, and can say that his system is scientific and surpasses anything in the line of therapeutics that has come to my notice."

Fred S. Brett, Apartado 285, Guadalajara, Mexico, writes: "I have done wonderful things in influencing people with this system. Have had over 50 persons under my control and compelled them to do startling things. I advise everybody to try it. This system is truly marvelous."

This free book is full of startling explanations and pictures, showing that any one can master, in a short time, the power to control and sway the minds of others. It describes the strange phenomena of Psychic and Hypnotic Influence. Mystic Healing, Psycho and Suggestive Therapeutics, Personal Magnetism, and a combined, simple system of reading the characters of others, though thousands of miles away. It gives you the key to the development of the inner or dormant forces of concentration, force of character, will power, memory, determination, ambition, enthusiasm, inspiration, continuity of thought and the ability to throw off the evil effects of disease and despondency.

It is, indeed, one of the most amazingly interesting books of the age, beaming with interest from cover to cover, and all who receive free copies of it can be thankful. It points out the road to financial and social success; it reveals astonishing facts that have been overlooked by the public for many years.

If you wish a free copy of this wonderful book write a postal or letter to Professor F. T. McIntyre, Dept. 1720 No. 126 West Twenty-Fourth street, New York, N. Y. All who write will receive it; no one will be disappointed. It is sent by mail, postage paid, absolutely free.

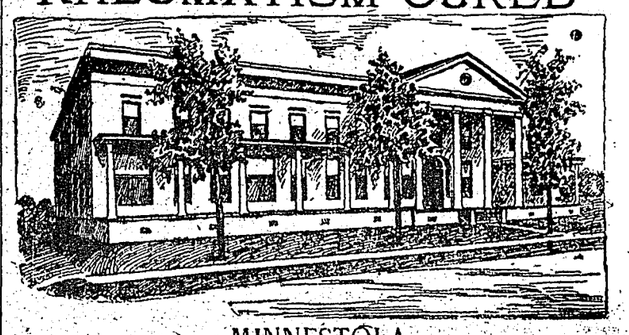
SIX HISTORIC AMERICANS.

A Book That Every American Freethinker Will Delight to Own.



By John E. Remsburg.

The work consists of two parts, "The Fathers of Our Republic," and "The Saviors of Our Republic." In regard to Paine's religious views, Mr. Remsburg establishes the negative of the following (1) Was Paine an Atheist? (2) Was he a Christian? (3) Did he recant? Page after page of the most radical freethought sentiments are culled from the correspondence and other writings of Franklin and Jefferson, which show that these men were as pronounced in the rejection of Christianity as Paine and Ingersoll. That Washington was not a Christian nor a believer in Christianity. In support of Lincoln's infidelity he has collected the testimony of more than one hundred witnesses.

The book is handsomely bound in cloth, giving fine portraits of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Paine, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant; also portrait of the author.

This book contains 365 pages, printed on heavy paper, well bound in cloth. Price, $1.25. For sale at this office.

Clairvoyance.

The following is a cablegram, sent out August 6 by the Associated Press, all the way from Christiania, Norway, A sub-head says: "Scientists discover a lad who possesses sixth sense." Read:

"A 14-year-old boy, John Flottum, who is alleged to possess a sixth sense, is a subject of discussion throughout the whole of Norway. On several occasions he has shown where missing persons and horses, and articles lost for years, could be found. At present he is trying to find a little girl in Christiania, supposed to have been kidnapped by gypsies. He does not advertise himself in any way, but his fame has spread far beyond his home parish. The Christiania papers publish full accounts by reliable eyewitnesses of his feats.

Physicians and scientists are unable to explain his phenomenal accomplishments. At first they were very skeptical, but they no longer refuse to believe that he possesses an unusual gift. The boy draws maps of localities in which he has never been and by these maps people are able to find lost articles and persons. One dead body was found with his aid after hundreds had searched for it several days."

It would be supposed the collector for the world's news, in Norway, had just heard for the first time of the marvels of clairvoyance, which is as well an established fact as any other scientific truth. It is those only who have had no practical experience in investigating who doubt the reality of the phenomenon. Possibly they have come in contact with frauds, and have come to a false conclusion by deceptions practiced on them.

The general interpretation of this wonder of science is, that the well-attested cases of clairvoyance are but mind-reading. We challenge the universe to account for phenomena which have come under this writer's observation on that hypothesis. There may be cases in which thought transference may act a part, but there are others which cannot be accounted for in this manner.

Whose mind was this Norway lad reading when he found missing persons, horses, and articles lost for years? Whose brains are employed when he draws maps of localities he never saw with normal vision to aid in finding lost articles?

Skepticism is on a rampage when it controverts so well an established fact as second sight.

Making Mirth of the Preacher.

The New York Mail makes mirth of Rev. Copp's late discovery that hell is in the sun. It says:

"Now we know why April, May and June of this year were the coldest on record. The heat of the sun is kept up by the burning of sinners, the sun being really the seat of the infernal regions; and the world has been getting so much better recently that the supply of sinners for purposes of fuel has in a considerable degree failed, and abnormally cold weather on the earth and other planets is the result. Such, at least is the inference to be drawn from the important discoveries made by Rev. Zeb Hetxel Copp, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian church in Washington, and minister in charge of the Bethany Mission Chapel in that city."

A Wave Mountain High of Crime.

Reports from all parts of the country, and more particularly from the great cities, represent a wave of crime is rolling over us unparalleled in previous history. Why is this? and what measures are necessary to arrest it? These are subjects of earnest thought by every lover of his race.

The politicians represent we are living in a period of universal prosperity. They point with pride to our mammoth industries, giving employment to multitudes of laborers. From every quarter the toiler is in demand, and harvests are calling for help and offering large reward for labor, and yet the great wave rolls on unchecked.

Not petty crimes alone, but millions are frequently involved. Suicides follow—the wrecked and the wreckers meet in a common grave, and still every offense known to our laws goes on. The courts use their powerful arm in vain. The prisons are overflowing with convicts, and the wail of starving families comes to our ears from every quarter.

Crime is not confined to the lowly. Every walk of life furnishes offenders. He who occupies confidential relations in government circles; the bank president and the cashier; the priest in his sacred robes; the churchman, glorifying as a lover of the cross, and professedly imitating the master, whilst lovely woman, whom all adore, fall victims to this overwhelming tide of wrongdoing.

Religion seems no barrier. The principal victims brought to justice, 95 per cent of them, say official reports, have been taught in Sunday schools, and nearly all subscribe to the dominant creed.

Whilst it is true the uncultured masses contribute more largely to fill our prisons, yet, sorrowful to relate, the scholars are there, as are even former professors in our colleges and universities.

One terrible fact stares us in the face, which we cannot overlook if we would: The foreigners, and the most criminal element of all, come from southern Europe. They are coming to our shores in unprecedented numbers. They do not come to cast their destiny for life with us. They do not affiliate with our people, and most of them make no effort to acquire our language. Their purpose is to gain a few hundred dollars, return to their place of nativity, and live in affluence on their quickly acquired gains. Depraved in morals, and clannish, they aid each other in concealing crime and preventing punishment in our courts.

Until we know the direction the moral world is drifting, it is impossible to successfully set on foot methods for reformation. While looking to any system of religion as the savior of the race, at the same time shutting our eyes to the encroachments crime is making in the world, uprooting the social fabric, we are guilty of a wrong which must be remedied. Crime has prevailed in every age of the world. Accepting Bible narration as authentic, the patriarchs and the wise men who are presented as our exemplars, every one of them, were criminals. Noah and Lot were drunken; Jacob was a fraud and liar; Moses a murderer; Joshua a land pirate and a wholesale assassin; and the Lord, who, it is claimed, directed Moses, Joshua and Gideon in their marauding expeditions, was as vile as they. He who is hailed as a man after God's own heart, had criminal blood on his hands. And "the wisest of men," Solomon, with his vast riches, justly punished would have been stoned to death. Under our laws he would have died in a penitentiary. There is not a Bible character who could be imitated in these modern times without imprisonment or death on the gallows.

Accepted as "The Word of God," and the lives of those ancient times reflected on this age of intelligence as our exemplars, what else can be expected but disregard of the moral law?

We see it illustrated in criminal practice. Statistics show a majority of our criminals in our penal institutions were members of Christian churches, the most rigid church—the Catholic, and parent of the entire brood, leading the van; while in America, the Protestant sects are most largely represented by the Methodists. And, awful to relate, 95 per cent of all convicts in the penitentiaries were educated in our Sunday schools.

Just think of it—139,951 murders and homicides were committed in the United States since 1885, and only 2,286 brought to justice! Perjury of witnesses makes prosecutions of high crimes merely farces. Our judges are not vile, but the technicalities of law rob the prison and the scaffold of its most deserving victims.

Justice—prompt, certain, inexorable, should be administered in every case for the infraction of law in times like these.

Fame is not got by seeking it. All such pursuit is vain. It may very well come about that a man will succeed through tact and various artifices in making for himself some sort of name. But if there is no inner worth, all will prove empty and ephemeral.—Goethe.

Duty is carrying on promptly and faithfully the affairs now before you. It is to fulfill the claims of to-day.—Goethe.

REVOLUTION.

By the late Wm. Denton.

Truth is shining; earth's awaking;
Freedom rising, chains are breaking;
Tyrants on their thrones are quaking,
For their reign is nearly done.
Knowledge coming, error leaving;
Pen and press their past retrieving,
Swiftly fly their shuttles, weaving
All the nations into one.

Priests and creeds are retroceding;
Men the guide within are heeding;
Every one his garden weeding;
Headlong bigotry is hurled.
Love upspringing, hate is dying;
Men rejoicing, knaves are sighing;
Deadly curses fast are flying
From a renovated world.

Postal Cards.

The Postmaster General his issued an order allowing the first third of the direction side of postal cards to be used by the sender, the other two-thirds to be used for the address only. A very thin sheet of paper may be pasted to the card, which may contain either writing, or printing, or both.

Had the government succeeded in preventing its officials from obliterating the writing on postal cards, and compelled them to limit their defacing marks to the address side of the card, it would have done the public real service. We have frequently received communication on postal cards which were impossible to decipher because of the needless defacements on the side reserved to the writer.

Just Think of It!

Rev. Madison C. Peters, late pastor of one of the leading Baptist churches of New York, is reported as saying that with an investment of five millions of dollars, to which was added $400,000, the seventy Baptist churches in New York, had a net increase last year of only NINE MEMBERS. He is also represented as saying the other churches of the great metropolitan city of the new world did little better during the same period.

The churches must build on a better foundation, else go to the wall.

A New Disease.

"Psychic Epilepsy" has succeeded brain storm as a medical term. A New York physician has just been cleared of the charge of brutally assaulting a man and women on the street on the plea that he had been subject to attack of psychic epilepsy from childhood, and that on recovery he had no knowledge of what had occurred. Just how the ailment differs from ordinary epilepsy is not made clear, but it will undoubtedly prove to be a convenient malady in criminal procedure.—News Item.

Fun Alive.

From half a dozen to a dozen children, all clothed in holiday attire, with ages ranging from three to five years, in the center of a very dusty street, each kid trying to see which can raise the largest cloud, may be set down as fun alive. The merriment seen on every face tells of real enjoyment, and dwindles to insignificance the joy of the politician who has just triumphed over a rival in the acquisition of an office to which both aspired.

CHARLES B. BROCKWAY.

He Is at Last in the Coils of the Law.

A late number of the Los Angeles Times says: "At least four Angelenos and probably many more, have been lured to financial losses by the oily tongue of Charles B. Brockway, alias Edward K. Earle, alias Edward Fay, alleged clairvoyant and astral seer, whom the police arrested Friday on a charge of grand larceny from J. D. Brown, 78 years old, of Fargo, N. D.

"Captain Auble, in deference to the personal feelings of the wronged individuals, withholds the names from publication, but he said last evening that four complaints had been made to him. One man is said to have parted with $600, another with $650, and a woman gave the seer $300. An inmate of the Soldiers Home of Sawtelle was also victimized to the extent of $12.

"Brockway, alias Earle, alias Fay, was arrested by Captain Auble and Lieutenant Murray, Friday. He was identified by the daughter of J. D. Brown, Mrs. Zoe M. May, who recognized the man on the street. It is alleged Fay, or Earle, as he was known in Fargo, swindled Brown out of $300 in Fargo just three years ago. He will be taken back to the North Dakota city for trial."

This man Brockway is no doubt one of the most skillful "ledgerdemain-mediums" in the United States. He can almost deceive the very elect in his manipulation of pellets, containing written questions, and in consequence has been able to "draw the wool" over the eyes of many. We will give further particulars next week.

Platitudes against sin are as harmful as applause for sin.—Anon.

I belong to the great church that holds the world within its starlit aisles; that claims the great and good of every race and clime; that finds with joy the grain of gold in every creed, and floods with light and love the germs of good in every soul.—Ingersoll.

Sacred are the lips from which has issued only truth. Over all wealth, above all station, above the noble—the robed and crowned—rises the sincere man. Happy is the man who neither paints nor patches, veils nor veneers! Blessed is he who wears no mask!—Ingersoll.

Plain Words from Lily Dale.

Dr. Geo. B. Warne writes from Lily Dale:

"Will Spiritualists of the United States help build up periodicals wholly in sympathy with New Thought, whose founders are playing for our subscriptions, but going from camp to camp misrepresenting the workers at previous centers visited?

Have not individuals a right to refuse to subscribe without being afterward subjected to villification and a cowardly species of blackmail because they will not stand and deliver up one dollar each?

One such ambitious person visited Lily Dale, pestered our workers by importunate solicitations, appealed for pictures so as to play to their personal vanity, and went away to run down the camp and its workers because unresponsive to the selfish desires of this literary light. She spoke meanly of women who did not bow to her in either physical, mental or spiritual endowments.

I personally incurred displeasure by saying frankly in private that I had no use for the publication because it did not stand for Spiritualism pure and simple.

The same individual tried to get control of the Sunflower, saying that if successful it would not continue to be an organ of Spiritualism.

Why should such people demand subscriptions of us?

PROF. HYSLOP IN CALIFORNIA.

That the Spirit World Answers Our Appeal, is the Testimony of the Great Scientist, When Delivering an Address at Berkley, Cal.—Dr. Hyslop, of the American Society for Psychical Research, Startles His Audience!

Dr. James H. Hyslop, Secretary and campaigner for the American Society for Psychical Research, lectured last evening before a great audience in Hearst Hall at the University of California. [Says the San Francisco Bulletin.] His subject was, "Psychical Phenomena and Life After Death."

Dr. Hyslop declared again and again that he had no doubt the dead could communicate with the living, and said that he already had scientific data tending to establish this assertion. He hopes, through the society which he represents, to obtain before his death complete scientific proof of his assertion.

Professor Hyslop was formerly professor of logic and ethics at Columbia University. He is a scholar of world-wide repute, and since he retired from the faculty of the University to take up the scientific study of psychic phenomena, he has been the most famous man in that line of work in the world. Hence, when he asserts that he not on believed that communication with the spirits of the dead was possible, but that he himself, through mediums, had so communicated with his wife and others, the interest aroused among the great throng of University people gathered to hear the lecture was great indeed.

Dr. Hyslop referred to a tacit agreement he made before the death of his companion and co-worker, Dr. Richard Hodgson, that they would try to communicate with each other after one had died. Hodgson died in 1905. Dr. Hyslop went to a woman librarian, a medium. She gave him a bit of a message from his friend. Dr. Hyslop said: Three days later he went to the famous medium, Mrs. Piper. She wrote, while in one of her trances, a message from Dr. Hodgson, which said:

"I tried to give you such and such a word."

Two days after that, Dr. Hyslop said, he tried it again and got a whole sentence from Dr. Hodgson. Then he wrote to the son of Professor James, the great Harvard psychologist, and got a sitting with him.

"Through him," said Dr. Hyslop, "I got the identical sentence which I got through Mrs. Piper. There is a corroboration of facts which can't be attributed to chance."

Dr. Hyslop referred to the fact that most of the matters in the messages he got were trivial, and that very few gave any idea of the life beyond the grave. But, he added, the trivial facts were the only ones possible of verification here on earth, and were therefore the only ones that appealed to scientific men. Several times, however, he said, spirits had begun to tell him of life after leaving the earth and always ended in a tantalizing way by saying they were getting into a dreamy state.

Dr. Hyslop is a rapid and entertaining talker. He is by no means of the long-haired variety of mystic dreamers. He appears to be an energetic, vigorous man, with a keen sense of humor, and plenty of good, hard, practical sense. He devoted much of his lecture last evening to explaining the enormous cost of scientific research work. He wishes to interest people with money in the society with which he is connected, so that more data can be secured along the lines on which he has been working.

The lecture has aroused more discussion in Berkley than anything that has occurred here in many days. After the lecture last night the streets around the University grounds were full of interested folks discussing and arguing the points brought out by Dr. Hyslop. All one could hear was references to psychic phenomena, ghosts, plain spooks, mediums, cases, scientific proof, materialism, idealism, organism, telepathy, apparitions and the like.

Dr. Hyslop is the guest, during his stay in Berkley of Charles Keeler, the poet. He will deliver a second lecture on Friday night, August 5.

People may outgrow natural ignorance, but ignorance carefully cultivated, polished, propagated, and called divine truth, can rarely be outgrown, because it paralyzes the power of growth.—Moncure D. Conway.

A good Christian should never go to law; rather should he give up his coat and his pants, and everything that he hath. Churchmen never go to law; they are the most docile and easy creatures in the world on matters of business.—Voltaire.

ANOTHER DANGER SIGNAL!

AN ADDRESS TO SPIRITUALISTS.

The Progressive Thinker Has Sounded the Danger Signal!—Our Mediums are Liable to be Arrested at Any Time, and Then Have to Expend Hundreds of Dollars to Free Themselves from the Meshes of the Law—Without The Progressive Thinker These Facts Would Not Have Been Known to Spiritualists Generally—Read Carefully What a Noted Medium Has to Say.

To the Editor:—Spiritualism in general and my phase of mediumship in particular have been so freely criticised by a few people, the pulpit and the press of New Castle during the four months last past; and all who desired, it seems, had their say if they made any effort so to do, and in consequence of the criticisms of the religion which best fits my consciousness, and the aspersions made by some of these critics as to the morality of my efforts or endeavors to demonstrate in an humble way the possibilities of my religion to others, I feel it my duty to myself and the religion I represent, to clear myself of the uncalled-for odium cast upon my labors and myself by those who themselves admitted that they were unfit to distinguish between "good and evil," in this particular field of endeavor, for the ladies in cross-examination in the alderman's court—all who endeavored to testify against me—said that they never had readings of any kind before, either from other mediums, palmists, astrologers or fortune tellers. They all admitted, however, that they had preconceived the idea that I was violating the law; therefore, without any knowledge whatsoever pertaining to my religion, and only having biased minds toward my calling, they turned themselves loose upon me, coming to my home nurturing untruth in their hearts and baffled me in my efforts to give them truthful messages. My friends on the spirit side of life and the friends of honest investigators send their messages of love through me as their instrument by the law of vibrations—a natural law, not a supernatural power—and only when harmony exists and an honest purpose to receive "the light that shineth in the darkness," can the spirit friends use this "law of vibration." The law of vibration works everywhere the same.

Like all natural laws it is immutable. I can best bring this law to the consciousness of all by referring you to shouting in a valley. There the law of vibrations returns to you an echo. Should you shout an oath in the valley, would it bring back a prayer in the echo? Or should you utter a falsehood, would you receive from the echo a truth? Wireless messages are to-day sent all over the world by the use of this law of vibrations, and those messages can become jumbled or falsified by opposing partisans who have their instruments adjusted to come in chord with others.

This is not to be construed as an apology for giving these ladies untruthful readings, but as an admission on my part that they may, by or through their own condition, have received in their messages jumbled statements that could, through an uncharitable construction, be designated as not exactly the truth. They were many and I was but one, and for this reason it was then, and is now, impossible to rebut their testimony. In the messages received by my accusers were many things of a remarkably truthful nature, but as they had not "charity," they only mentioned the things which they thought were detrimental to my well-being. "A tree is known by the fruit thereof"—and the jury readily saw that it bore not "charity."

I do not now, and never have during my life in this mortal body, laid a claim to infallibility. Neither do I lay claim or pretend that my spirit friends cannot err. There never was a person in the flesh but was accused of erring, whether he did or not. No two lawyers see the law exactly alike, and yet neither may err in its interpretation or perception.

Very few doctors diagnose exactly alike and there seems to be enough common sense in humanity to make allowances for their different opinions upon the same thing. But I am held up to ridicule, dragged into court, made to spend several hundred dollars, preached from every other pulpit in the city in derision. Why? All because a dozen women had the caprice to complain that some things which I said were untrue, while hundreds in this city can vouch for the absolute truth of the messages received from their spirit friends through my mediumship and thus mocking these would-be upholders of law and order.

Oh law and order! What a great panacea you have been and yet are for all manner and conditions of men? You have always helped out the ward-heeler when all other remedies failed.

You have put a white robe on every hypocrite on this terrestrial ball, and have given them the special privilege to be the "salt of the earth."

You have been the "stock in trade" of every pot-house politician from Cain to Tallyrand, and from Tallyrand ad infinitum.

But, as Isaiah of old said, you do at times "become a stench unto God."

At the alderman's court the testimony of the prosecution developed the fact that they did not know for what reason they had attacked me; but between then and the quarter-session trial by jury they "read up" and then came to the knowledge (in their minds) that I had practiced "necromancy," which, according to standard dictionaries, is a pretended conversation or communication with the dead. They admitted in quarter-sessions court that they had learned this since my preliminary hearing. So their case at the outset against me must have been some kind of a "feigned issue," and in this connection allow me to explain that never by thought, word or deed, spoken, written, printed or accomplished, did I cause anyone to be impressed that I spoke to the "dead" or pretended so to do. I, like all other people, speak only to the "living," whether they be in the body of flesh and blood—the physical body—or whether they be in the spiritual body. Should any of the sermonizers of this city deny that there is a spiritual body, they must place the veracity for the truth of St. Paul in jeopardy—read his first epistle to the Corinthians, chapter 15, verse 44, for Bible authority on this subject.

Dictionaries say "dead" signifies "to be deprived of life"—"lifeless;" Worcester's dictionary says that "dead," as applied to spirituality, means "devoid of spiritual life."

It would, therefore, take an absolute fool to use upon an enlightened people any pretense to be able to speak with the "dead." It should not and could not attract any person or persons by making such claims.

Even God ignores the dead—for my authority as to this I shall here quote Jesus Christ, as recorded in the gospel according to St. Matthew, chapter 22, verse 32, clause 2: "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." In the first clause of the same chapter and verse, Christ proves this statement by referring to Exodus, chapter 3, verses 6 and 16, as follows: "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob."

Now the inductive reasoning: If Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were "alive" or "living" at the time when Jesus Christ made the reference aforesaid, although they having put off the mortal body between about 1,700 and 1,800 years before this reference was made by Christ, or if Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were living when God spoke these words to Moses, which must have occurred about two hundred or more years after the last of these patriarchal Hebrews had disrobed their fleshly bodies from their spirits or egos and had mantled themselves with spiritual bodies, it naturally follows that God, who conserved their lives for that length of time, is no doubt still preserving them, and by the same law or process will preserve their lives through all eternity. And if these lives were and are thus preserved, why not the lives of others? And if others, why not some of our friends, relatives and other dear ones? "Death" of human beings is now considered by all intelligent Christians as merely a mythical superstition and as a misnomer for the true beginning of a purely spiritual life.

That any W. C. T. U. woman would figure in my persecution was a surprise, both to my Spiritualistic friends and others, because Laura G. Fixen, who happened to be the vice-president of "The Illinois State Spiritual Association," is the president of the Illinois W. C. T. U. State organization, and she, like myself, is a Spiritualistic medium. I do not wish to hold out the impression that I am her equal in any way, but only wish to show that this gifted woman is in the same vocation.

Mr. Chambers, the additional counsel for the commonwealth, stated that I attracted people to my residence by an advertisement. My advertisement can only be named such because I paid for its insertion in the local papers. There was nothing in it to attract the attention of any one excepting such as had a desire to call on me. It was only placed in the paper as a card, for the convenience of people who wanted to know where I lived, and it was only intended to save my friends from ringing other people's door-bells who were in quest of my whereabouts. The door-bell trouble was the first one I encountered in this city, and I hastened to correct it by placing my card in the newspapers which always read about as follows:

"Medium—sees ladies only: hours 10 a. m. to 7 p. m. Mrs. E. H. Marquette, No. 29 Neshannock avenue."

There was nothing misleading in this advertisement, nothing persuasive and nothing attractive. I did not lay any claim in it to be able to do anything at all. In fact, it was such an advertisement that would pass the "ethics" of any medical association or bar association in the land.

There is but one word in that whole card which refers to my vocation, viz: "medium."

If you, dear readers, will take the trouble to refer to your dictionaries, you will find that the word "medium" is "that through which a body not in contact with another, must pass to reach it;" or words of explanation to that effect. This defines the word in its most general and comprehensive sense. The word "medium" in the narrower sense is applied to persons or things through which spirits in spirit bodies can reach spirits in the mortal bodies. You will see, therefore, that the use we put this word to, as Spiritualists, is very apropos, and does not in any way violate its original and broad significance.

You will not find that this word "medium" is defined as something or someone having or claiming supernatural powers; nor will you find that it means "necromancy" outside of the brains of a score or so of people in New Castle.

The New Castle News, April 3, printed about a column of matter in which, among other things, were these statements: That I boasted of two previous unsuccessful attempts to cause my arrest, and, that I on that date did predict that the prosecution would fall short of convicting me.

As to the aforesaid "boasting," I wish now to refer the originator of that news item to the fact that on June 24 a jury of 12 of my peers, and yours, declared me "not guilty" of necromancy; "not guilty" of violating the laws of this commonwealth, thus proving that I did not boast but predicted my own future correctly on the 3d day of April.

Very respectfully,
MRS. ED. H. MARQUETT.

Writes a Message to Her Mother.

My name is Lucy Marion, and I am writing this message to my dear old mother. She believes in spirit return, and when she reads it, she will understand, and know that it came from me. I am so rejoiced that I can return to earth and communicate with the dear ones I was forced to leave behind when I came to dwell in the spirit world. I want my mother to know that I am much happier now than when I was living on the earth plane, and much better off. I do not suffer now; the pain and misery that used to cause her so much sorrow and anxiety is all gone, and I am not separated from her by an infinitude of space, but am often with her, and doing what I can to brighten her declining years. She does not always know when I am with her, but she sometimes feels my presence, when she sits alone in the twilight, and sings the old songs we used to sing together. I want all the dear earth friends to know that I remember them with love, and I am so rejoiced that there is a way of communication between the two worlds—the material world and the beautiful world of spirit. God, and the Efficacy of Prayer.

The Attributes of God and the Efficacy of Prayer Carefully Considered by Wm. Van Waters in a Lecture Before the First Spiritualist Society of Walla Walla, Wash.

"We must learn to appreciate that God's blessings are always ready to be bestowed, and if we do not benefit thereby, it is because of our ignorance or non-receptivity. Man tightly closes the shutters, then loudly prays for sunlight; he shuts himself in a hermetically sealed compartment and then sounds a tearful petition for fresh air. The entrance of the sun's rays awaits only the opening of the blinds; the life-giving ozone will push its way in and fill his apartments if given opportunity."

Among the masses to-day there are but few atheists in proportion to the number to be met with forty or fifty years ago. This is owing to the leaven of the philosophy and movement of Modern Spiritualism, which had its birth in 1848, and which has clearly demonstrated the fact of soul existence and the continuity of life.

The man or woman who does not believe in a great Over-soul, or Supreme Intelligence is now but rarely encountered.

Yet as humanity continues to grow into a more general recognition of God, it also grows more skeptical regarding the characteristics imputed to Deity by the hordes of Bible expounders and religious enthusiasts, whose manners and speech would imply that they are on the most familiar terms with their creator—in fact, shaking hands with that being night and morning.

These zealots assume that Deity is masculine.

That "He" makes careful record of every earthly occurrence, no matter how trivial—even noting every sparrow's fall.

That "He" can be moved by earnest prayer to grant a special dispensation to the supplicant, even though the concession may necessitate the temporary suspension of the law of cause and effect.

That God is an expression of all good, of loving mercy, of exact justice.

By "good" is meant those acts, qualities or conditions that contribute to happiness or development.

By "merciful" is meant that condition of mind that would mitigate suffering, even though perchance deserved.

By "justice" is understood that quality of mind which seeks to reward or punish in exact accord with merit or demerit.

Does this character of Deity, as seen through finite eyes, square with these qualities? Let us see:

For every blessing accorded humanity, God apparently has an injury at hand. The life-inspiring sunlight that vouchsafes the world's harvest is, at the very time when scattering its blessings, hatching up a storm or tempest that will leave desolation, famine, wreck and death in its path.

The earthquake that, in the endless past, helped to pulverize the rocks and form a soil in which vegetation might germinate, to-day wrecks an entire country, turning fertile plains into deserts, killing thousands of people, the good and the bad, the young and the old, the innocent child, the saintly parent, the dumb brutes in the fields and beasts of the forests. The volcano spares nothing within its malevolent reach.

With rare exceptions, might has triumphed over right throughout the centuries. Surely every good does seem to have its antithesis.

It is generally accepted that God is the author of all force, all life, all action—in fact, the author of all that was, is, and is to be; that God is all and all is God. Hence it follows that Deity is responsible for the so-called bad as well as the so-called good in this universe.

Is God merciful?

Nature, in the manifestation of her laws, knows no mercy. The falling tree will crush an infant as readily as it will a ferocious beast. The penalty for transgression of natural law is always exacted to the remotest extreme; there is no escape. A sleeping child is, by some accident, transformed into a misshapen cripple, beyond all human skill to correct. Nature exacts the penalty in a life of suffering and misery, exhibiting an indifference equal to that of the soulless rock. As Nature is God and God is Nature, wherein does anyone discern any mercy in Deity? Man frequently forgives; Nature, i. e., God, never. Every debt against Nature must be paid to the uttermost farthing.

Is it an exhibition of mercy when God overwhelms a beautiful, populous island with volcanic hell, blotting out, without even a moment's notice, thousands of innocent lives?

Is it justice for God to visit the sins of the parents upon the innocent, irresponsible offspring? Is it justice for God to create a class of virtuous, loving, industrious people and, at the same time, create another class to prey upon them, torture, and even to slay them?

Man terms such acts as bad, as merciless, as rankly unjust when committed by his own kind. Why should he invert all his opinions of right and wrong when judging of the acts of Deity? Can it be that in so doing he is hypocritically trying to propitiate God's favors in thus stultifying his intelligence and reason by calling black white and white black? Is it not a point of wisdom to conclude with the immortal Humboldt, that the "Universe is governed by law," by laws that are co-eval with God; laws that never have, never can deviate "in the estimation of a hair;" that effect must continue, as in the eternal past, to follow cause, though the lives, happiness and well-being of all humanity be jeopardized; that whatever opposes—by accident or design—the operation of natural law, will be ground beneath God's juggernaut, whether insect, man or angel?

From centuries of experience and study man has learned how he may avoid many of the evils and catastrophes with which Nature (God) has surrounded him, while at the same time appropriating Nature's blessings. But man's immunity from such evils comes wholly from his own exertions, no aid ever having been vouchsafed from "On High"—the assertions of miracle-believers to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Even admitting, as claimed by many, that God is omniscient, foreseeing at creation the ultimate development, throughout countless centuries, of a race of beings even vastly superior to the humanity of to-day, it is the height of folly to assume that Deity had in mind "at the beginning" the trivial incidentals of existence, such as the fall of a sparrow, a leaf whirled by the breeze or a mole on my lady's neck. Such assumptions are nauseating to common sense, and I revert to them here only because the "religious" atmosphere is saturated with rot of this character.

Why should it always appear necessary, when discoursing upon spiritual, moral or religious topics, to assume to tell your listeners what God thinks, what God wants and what God will do? Is it not a mark of wisdom to conclude that as infinite duration and infinite space are wholly without the pale of human conception, whether of man or archangel, so is the Infinite mind incomprehensible in every respect to the finite?

This trend of thought naturally leads us to inquire into the efficacy of prayer. Prayerful supplications to Deity have never been known to arrest or subvert the laws of nature in the remotest degree, notwithstanding the unreasonable assertions of superstition and ignorance. Prayer often aids the supplicant, but not through any outward manifestation. The answer must always be strictly within the pale of the natural law. Prayer may inspire courage in the faint-hearted by causing a belief that God is going to extend divine assistance. Prayer often operates to divert the petitioner from his evil ways, in that he believes that he must make a showing of virtue in order to obtain God's favors.

Fervent prayer for health and strength is sometimes followed by seemingly miraculous recovery from disease and weakness; but the change is through the operation of ever-present law, and not because of any special divine dispensation.

All about us are helpless, unfortunate beings, misshapen dwarfs, the maimed, the blind, the crippled, and the toiling victims of man's greed, whose very existence is a more powerful prayer for help than any lip or tongue could ever utter. Is it not presumptuous, yea, sacrilegious, to assume that the heavenly Father will pass all of these by to bestow a blessing upon some pious petitioner, simply because the latter pleads vociferously for divine assistance, while the other remains silent?

We must learn to appreciate that God's blessings are always ready to be bestowed, and if we do not benefit thereby, it is because of our ignorance or non-receptivity. Man tightly closes the shutters, then loudly prays for sunlight; he shuts himself in a hermetically sealed compartment and then sends up a tearful petition for fresh air. The entrance of the sun's rays awaits only the opening of the blinds; the life-giving ozone will push its way in and fill his apartments if given opportunity.

Science was forced into assuming space to be filled with a subtle atmosphere, which man designated as "ether," in order to account for the transmission of light vibrations and other phenomena. In the same manner the metaphysician has been led to account for certain spiritual phenomena by the assumption that we are immersed in an ocean of magnetic ether, which vibrates with an intensity unknown to anything outside of the higher spiritual forces. The existence of this ether is postulated wholly upon the recurrence of certain phenomena (effects) for which there is no apparent logical cause, outside of this theory.

Students of psychic law are aware of the existence of an emanation from all living organisms, which has been designated as the "spirit aura." This aura corresponds in purity, color and vibratory potency to the spirit from whence it emanates.

Whenever we can, by any means, raise the tension of our spirit aura to a degree corresponding with the ever-present magnetic etheric atmosphere, there will be an immediate influx of these potent, health-giving, etheric vibrations, that will continue so long as the harmony is maintained. It is common knowledge that any wire or string on a harp, piano or other stringed instrument, will vibrate in response to a tone corresponding in pitch to the tone which that particular string gives forth. Only that string will vibrate which is in harmony with the given tone. This explains why that particular spirit aura with a tension corresponding to that of the magnetic ether will vibrate in response thereto, while other spirit auras of a lower tension remain insensible to such influence.

As certain destructive germs are rendered immune in the presence of fresh air and sunlight, so are disease and despondency changed to health and cheerfulness by these all-potent vibrations. Like the air and sunshine, this palpitating ocean of magnetic ether ever surrounds us, ready to invigorate our beings as opportunity offers.

Any benefit to be derived from the presence of this magnetic ether depends upon one's own self; upon one's receptivity and spiritual condition. Whenever these health-imparting vibrations do electrify our entire organism with their presence it is not a "Special Providence" or a special dispensation of Deity, for God is not partial in the bestowal of favors.

How we may make ourselves amenable to this potent influence is a problem fraught with great import. Fervent prayer is often conducive to high aural vibrations, especially if several join together in earnest supplication. Hence the prayer-meeting may have the same result as the Spiritualist seance.

Inspiring music momentarily raises the aural vibrations to a high pitch; enthusiasm has a like affect. All beings feel at times, when inspired by some deep emotion of love, or admiration for a noble deed, the influx of this magnetic current, as it thrills and electrifies the whole being. This is the effect of a momentary high tension of the spirit aura, permitting the influence of etheric vibrations.

Arisen spirits give forth vibrations corresponding with those of the magnetic ether; hence, whenever we become in harmony with the one we are in touch with the other. The best mediums are those whose aural vibrations are readily raised to a high potency. Whenever the mortal succeeds in bringing about this "superior condition," as Andrew Jackson Davis terms it, the spirit friends are able to manifest their presence in some manner.

But there must be some scientific method by which humanity, as a whole, may be able to render itself amenable, or receptive to this higher vibratory force. It is now definitely known that right living, pure thoughts, loving, earnest endeavors to help others, abstinence from intemperate language, intemperate habits, and critical attitude of mind—these, coupled with a desire for spiritual knowledge and spiritual gifts, long continued in, will bring one into a spiritual condition where he or she is in tune with the higher spiritual forces, or as Trine puts it, "In tune with the Infinite." Eventually, by persistent observance of this line of thought and action, the aural vibrations will become a second nature, so to speak, when health, strength, confidence, love for all will possess the physical and spiritual man.

REINCARNATION.

The Theory Philosophically Considered from the Standpoint of a Spiritualist.

Reincarnation, or pre-existence, has been the subject for innumerable discussions, essays and lectures; yet, after all, it is still but a fanciful theory. It has no philosophical basis to rest upon; neither is it required as a working hypothesis to explain any phenomena of Nature or mind. But why it is believed in admits of a philosophical explanation.

There is no doubt that many teachers and writers, both ancient and modern, have believed it to be a reasonable doctrine, furnishing a solution for many life mysteries that could not otherwise be so easily explained.

Pythagoras, the heathen philosopher, believed in pre-existence. He claimed to have been reincarnated on various occasions; that in one reincarnation he was Euphorbus and killed at the siege of Troy. Many learned French Spiritualists, led by the teachings of Allan Kardec, believed in it, and it is claimed that to-day the majority of French Spiritualists are reincarnationists. Quite a few noted American Spiritualists believe it to be true. W. J. Colville, who translated Allan Kardec's book "Genesis" into the English language, believes in it, and teaches it in his lectures; so does Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, and many others who are prominent in the ranks of Spiritualists. Noted writers of all ages have referred to it vaguely. Wordsworth, in his "Ode on Intimation of Immortality," alludes to it thus:

"Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting;
The soul that rises with us,
our life's star,
Hath had elsewhere its setting,
And cometh from afar," etc.

Tennyson writes about it in this fashion:

"Moreover, something is or seems
That teaches me with mystic gleams,
Like glimpses of forgotten dreams,
Of something felt, like something here;
Such as no language may declare."

In Lockhart's "Life of Scott" is published an extract from Sir Walter Scott's diary, showing that the great Scotsman was at times influenced by the philosophy of pre-existence. It is as follows:

"I cannot tell, I am sure, if it is worth marking down, that yesterday, at dinner time I was strongly haunted by what I would call pre-existence, in a confirmed idea that nothing which passed was said for the first time; that the same topics had been discussed and the same persons had stated the same opinions on them. The sensation was so strong as to resemble mirage in the desert. . . . It was very distressing yesterday, and brought to my mind the fancies of Bishop Berkeley about an ideal world. There was a vile sense of want of reality in all I did and said."

There is an innate power in the human mind, which pictures to itself scenes and events of the future. Many intuitive natures in their daydreams, or at night in the slumbers, see panoramic scenes of the future through which years hence they are destined to pass. Such experiences are so real to many that they cannot separate them from experiences received through their five senses when in contact with the outer world. There is also a phase of mediumship akin to this mental endowment, in which the information is conveyed to the medium in pictures impressed upon his brain. All external objects may be used for this purpose, and ingeniously grouped together in scenes and events resembling the experiences of everyday life, to convey the information the spirit wants to impart. Many persons have this power of mediumship, possessing an art gallery in their inner consciousness, hung with pictures innumerable deposited by spirit friends. Such pictures, though they fade with time, are never wholly blotted out from memory. Swedenborg and Judge Edmonds both possessed this form of mediumship; there are many instances of it recorded in the Judge's book.

This vague consciousness some persons feel of having seen and heard things before, when they view and hear them for the first time, which Theosophists think are scenes of a former existence awakening in the memory, is in reality but the picturing power alluded to above—either gathered by the intuition of the individual or impressed by the agency of spirits. The same power will also explain the vision some have on the "astral plane."

There are other reasons advanced, however, by Theosophists, to prove reincarnation. They say: "If God be just to all his creatures, he must of necessity give them equal opportunity and development. What justice get idiots, fools, or children who die young?" they ask. "But allow reincarnation to be true, and you give each individual an opportunity to return to earth until he has received all that there is coming to him according to the law of divine justice."

It is plain enough that there are many differences among the individuals who make up the human race. They are as many and as varied as the causes which operated to bring each individual into being. But this ought not to convey a sense of injustice to our mind, but the reverse. Each individual at birth has all there is coming to him and no more, according to the law of justice. If he be poor and deficient in makeup, and several grades below the ordinary, he but represents a certain state of progress of the human race. But there is no injustice done him by God or by man. The deity has ordained that no one shall gather figs from thistles any more than he shall get a perfect organization from imperfect parents and social conditions.

Reincarnation, if true, furnishes no key to the solution. Those who are unfortunate and unhappy in one incarnation may be so in every other incarnation. In this world of effects none are safe from the hand of disaster or misfortune. We are, at best, but creatures of circumstances, and often at the mercy of the elements. Choice and free will we have in a small degree, but, generally speaking, conditions over which we have no control shape our ends. The most perfectly organized and happily situated are not safe from the hand of affliction. Diseases and accidents innumerable stalk about like a thief in the night, and enter homes unexpectedly, blighting their happiness and prospect in this life forever.

Theosophists, in trying to solve some of life's mysteries, have accepted theories woefully in opposition to Nature and reason. Reincarnation is a moth-eaten theory—as old, I suppose, as history, and remains to this day but a fancy of the mind. Yet Theosophists hold on to it and make it prominent in their teachings. There is an awful weariness in the thought of having to return to earth again and again, and to learn the primary lessons of life each time—such as learning to walk and talk decently, not to mention the first lessons at school. But it never happens. Every time a child is born a new soul comes into being. The body and the mind of the child grow up and mature together. The child has nothing at birth but a few common instincts; it has to learn all that it knows from experience. This fact ought to be plain to every Theosophist, and practically disproves their theory that an intelligent and matured ego has entered the body of the child.

The mysteries of providence and the decree of destiny work strangely in the lives of some. We have to learn our lessons and bear our crosses, though we weep. What but our spiritual philosophy can console the unfortunate and unhappy—those who are unlovely in appearance, or mentally afflicted through no fault of their own, will some time, if not in this life, then in the other world where there are no accidents, be beautiful and realize their fondest hopes and longings.

THE POSSIBILITIES OF MEDIUMSHIP.

Selected From the Writings of Prof. J. S. Loveland.

The comparative anatomist, from a fossil bone, will reconstruct the animal and tell its habits, though it existed thousands of ages ago. So the psychometrist will hold in his hand a piece of broken stone from some buried city, and read from its pictured page of history, character, and customs of its inhabitants. Or he will grasp a piece of paper whereon some one has traced a word, and describe the writer as to person and character. Or he may go into a room and see pictures of those who have left no material ones behind. He knows that "all houses where men have lived and died are haunted, not by their ghosts, but by the impressions made while they lived therein.

Can we conceive any limit to the possible action of man through this force? Why can we not come into communication with spirits and also inhabitants of other worlds? It might require the aid of spirits to institute a system of telepathy with other worlds. It is substantially demonstrated that we are influenced by other worlds, not only in a general sense, but in the special one that we are personally affected. Many laugh at the claims of the astrologist, but are we quite sure that the planets do not affect us? Even so careful a philosopher as Reichenbach is constrained to say, in reference to his discoveries in odylic influence: "It shows that we stand in a connection of mutual influence; so that, in fact, the stars are not altogether devoid of action on our sublunary, perhaps even on our practical world, and on the mental processes of some heads."

Even a late Christian writer, after considering these principles, exclaimed:

"What a center of influence does man occupy. It is just as if the universe were a tremendous mass of jelly which every movement of his made to vibrate from center to circumference. It is as if the universe was one vast picture gallery, in some part of which the entire history of this world, and of each individual, is shown on canvas, sketched by countless artists, with unerring skill. It is as if each man had his foot upon the point where 10,000 telegraphic wires met from every part of the universe, and he were able, with each volition, to send abroad an influence along these wires, so as to reach every created being in heaven and earth. It is as if we were linked to every created being by a golden chain, and every pulsation of our own heart or movement of our own mind, modified the pulsation of every other heart, and the movement of every other intellect. Wonderful, wondrful is the position man occupies in the part he acts! And yet, it is not a dream, but a deliberate conclusion of true science.'

When a distinguished Christian, Prof. Hitchcock, of Amherst College, could write such words as these forty years ago, (now fifty years) is it not time "when spirit phenomena have confirmed the "conclusions of true science?"

We have the very agent by which all these manifestations are made, revealed as a universal principle. The deep, underlying principle of spirit phenomena is made manifest. The mystery of ages is solved. The naturalness of all supposed miracles is demonstrated. The hitherto inscrutable phenomena of the spiritual nature are brought within the scope of scientific research as really as physiology. Indeed we say that spirit manifestations constitute one branch of the physiology of the spirit body. And this, taken in connection with the universality of the relationship demonstrated, puts a new aspect upon all life. The influence of present action upon the eternal future is no longer an affirmation of faith, but a demonstration as positive as any of the deductions of science. * * * *

Mediums are the great pathologists who lay bare "the hidden things of darkness by the clear shining of spiritual light. * * * *

There are those who will stand and look at the human stomach, rotten with alcoholic ulcers, and turn round and pour deadly fluid into their own. There are those who would not be convinced of a future life of the risen dead should they meet them at every corner. The way of hell will be taken by some, even though its flames scorch and burn at every step. There are others who, seeing and hearing, will pause and learn the way of wisdom.

Again: Mediums are the keys to the grand organ of universal being. Wisely fingered, the anthem of harmony shall sound its echoing notes through the depths of immensity, while folly must cause the jarring sound of discord. The field of effort, a vista of infinite possibilities, opens up and stretches away in the unmeasured distance of unrecorded time, until lost in the mellow, palpitating light of deathless bliss.

* * * * * * * * *

Will Spiritualism die out? yes, if some dread spell shall change the tides of human life, and turn back their onward flow. Yes, if the constitution of human nature can be altered so that reason and love shall abdicate, and man be something else than man. If the voices of the immortals can be hushed in eternal silence, if human ears no longer list thereto, or human love respond no longer in harmony to their most kindly greeting, then may, then will it cease to be. When Spiritualism dies, man will die. Philosophy and science will be buried in the same grave, and the pall of eternal night will fall upon the realm of life. The songs of eternity will cease, its music be hushed in eternal silence. All suns will cease to shine, and worlds will wander darkling in he abyss of endless night. Spiritualism is at once the pedestal and apex of human progress. It permeates all law, all force, all substance. It supports and bounds human hopes, and fills the cup of human bliss. * *

THERE IS NO DEATH.

Science Proves the Immortality of the Soul.

The beautiful and enduring philosophy of Spiritualism is proved by scientific truth. All the thinkers of the world have arrived at the conclusion that there can be no such thing as the destruction of either energy or matter. While they have all been compelled to concede that it is impossible to obtain any knowledge of the essence of mind or matter, yet their indestructibility has been demonstrated.

Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, in his Elementary Lessons in Logic, over a quarter of a century ago wrote that, "It is now believed by all scientific men that force cannot be created or destroyed by any of the processes of nature." Mind must certainly be accepted as one of the elements of universal energy or force; while the individualized soul is one of the molecules of universal spirituality. Nothing is better established in science than that nothing can be destroyed.

I read from Ribot's Heredity that "Nothing is lost; nothing that exists can ever cease to be. In physics this is admitted readily enough; the principle is well established, and confirmed by so many facts, that doubt is impossible. In morals the case is different; we are commonly so accustomed to regard all occurrences as the results of chance, and as subject to no laws, that many at least implicitly admit the annihilation of that which was once a state of consciousness to be possible. Yet annihilation is as inadmissible in the moral as it is in the physical world; and but little reflection is needed to see that in all orders of phenomena it is alike impossible for something to become nothing, or for nothing to become something. Such a miracle is neither conceived by reason nor justified by experience. We may, indeed, state such a proposition verbally; but as soon as we pass from words to things, from vagueness to precision, from the imaginary to the real, we cannot form an idea of any such annihilation in external or internal existence."

And from "Future Life," by the learned Elbe, we read, "We know that we are impotent to create or to destroy the minutest material atom, and we can induce no new manifestation of energy without at once causing an equal quantity under another form to disappear. We remarked that the law of indestructibility applied not only to matter and energy, but also to all events of the past, which also become indestructible when once they have been recorded in the vibrations of ether, and we have every reason to suppose that the law holds good of phenomena purely immaterial in appearance, such as thought, seeing that the ideas which we conceive appear also to be inscribed in the unending vibrations of the invisible ether. We recognize, in fine, that nothing whatsoever in the universe can elude the inevitable operation of the incorruptible law which eternally preserves the memory of the past; and we are hence justified in concluding that the living, and especially the conscious, forces must also be amenable to the same law, for it scarcely can have determined to preserve the memory of our most insignificant acts and yet be unwilling to preserve the being who is their author."

The above extracts are given to show what is the consensus of scientific judgment as to the indestructibility of both energy and matter.

The experience which the individual soul gets in its journey through this incarnate life is a part of it, and, like all else in the glorious Universe of God, is indestructible. The individual soul is as immortal as Infinite Power itself. Truly did Longfellow write "There is no death, what seems so is transition."

From the foregoing scientific truths it follows that the claim that the blood of the Savior will cleanse the world from sin, is a mere myth. As remarked, the individual soul is perfected by its earthly experience, and when it makes the change which we have learned to call death, it enters upon the journey beyond, as it left its carnate existence. If we would wear a crown of glory or any other crown in the "sweet by and by" we must earn it; if we would be happy over there, we must fit ourselves for it here. In this life we cannot learn the secrets of the life to come, and it is well that it is so. It is time to solve the problems of the after life when we get there.

But as long as we can know that our soul life is immortal, we can bear up under the trials of our earthly lives; and accept such trials as the means by which we will be fitted for a higher and broader state of existence over yonder.

AFFLICTIONS OF THE EYE

Successfully Treated By "ACTINA"

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned.

There is no need for cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no risk or necessity of experimenting, as many people report having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Mrs. T. F. Moyle, Waterford, Wis., writes:—"About two years ago I was taken with iritis in both eyes and nearly went blind and it was thought an operation would be necessary. I sent for an Actina last April and it has taken all the inflamation out and my eyes are now well.

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept 342L, 811 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive absolutely free a valuable book, Professor Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

J. Q. Adams of 344 Pennsylvania avenue, Wichita, Kan., wishes to correspond with mediums, or those gifted with the power of manifesting the genuine phenomena, as public slate manifestations; materialization under test conditions; trumpet and fire test phases.

Geo. A. Letford of Florida, is visiting at the Camp this week. Mr. Letford is better known as the Drummer Medium and his messages of love from friends "across the river" are beautiful. He will assist in the message work during his stay.—Vicksburg, Mich., Herald.

Mr. Kirchner writes: "Mrs. C. Kirchner has returned to her home after being absent a week in Philadelphia, where she had gone to bury her only child, who was called to the spirit world on August 11. While we regret the loss from this plane of our loved one, we have the assurance that she still lives, and will no doubt manifest herself to all with whom she can come in rapport. We tender our thanks to the Spiritualists of Chicago and elsewhere for their sympathy and kind thought."

Minnie E. Harvey writes: "The Golden Rule Spiritualist Society held services last Sunday night in its hall, 378 So. Western avenue, in Star Lodge Hall. Mrs. Nellie Kusserow was the speaker. The message bearers were Professor Banks, late from England, and Mrs. Golden, a German lady. Sunday night, August 25, Mrs. Nora Hill, pastor of The Golden Rule society will be the speaker. Her many friends will be glad to have her with them again. She has been visiting her sister, Mrs. Salter of Muir, Mich., and is at present in Clinton, Iowa. A mass meeting will be held in Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue, beginning Saturday night, August 31, and will be continued the next day, Sunday, September 1. Services in the afternoon and evening. The speaker of the first night of the mass meeting, August 31, will be Mrs. Maud Lord Drake. She will give messages, assisted by home talent. Sunday afternoon, September 1, the speaker will be Prof. W. F. Peck of St. Louis. He will also speak in the evening."

Ferd. C. Suhrer writes: "At the conclusion of Miss Elizabeth Harlow's address before the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists on Wednesday evening, August 28, in Hygiea Hall, an informal reception will be tendered this gifted orator under the auspices of the Fraternal Daughters. Refreshments will be served and all who wish to remain may do so. At a recent special meeting of the trustees of the Fraternal Order it was decided to engage Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond for the first three Sundays in October. The first Sunday evening will be devoted to an account of the Peace Conference at The Hague, from which she has just returned. It was also decided to have with us in November, Mrs. Lillie, the well known worker in spiritualistic ranks. F. O. O. S. at Chesterfield. Anderson, Indiana, August 11. The attendance at Camp Chesterfield to-day was the largest of the season. Special cars over the interurban lines brought large numbers of people from surrounding cities. In the afternoon Harrison D. Barrett, President of the N. S. A., and member of the F. O. O. S., addressed a congregation that filled the large building. The management invited the F. O. O. S. officers to demonstrate their work, and kindly offered the auditorium for the purpose, which was gladly accepted. Services commenced at 7:30 with Dr. Alex. Caird in the chair. After the usual opening services, Mrs. Mamie Helyett of Boston, was initiated. Those taking part in the ceremony were Dr. Alex. Caird, H. D. Barrett, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Bloom, Mrs. Henrietta Lichtig and Dr. Webb. The work was highly appreciated by the large audience, who felt that 'Things seen are mightier that things heard,' and we trust the seed sown will bear fruit. For the next hour F. O. O. S. mediums, Mrs. Caird, Mrs. A. W. Bloom, Mrs. H. Lichtig and Mrs. M. Helyett demonstrated their ability to read from sealed letters, a novelty at this camp. We are pleased to note the absence of sensationalism at the camp, and it is appreciated by residents and visitors. The mediums report liberal patronage, and a more searching investigation for truth than in previous years."

MARRIED.—A pretty home wedding was celebrated August 10, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Macdonald of Muncie, Ind., when their daughter, Miss Beatrice, was united in marriage to Mr. John V. Fulks, the ceremony being solemnized by Sarah A. Crossfield.

The bride was beautifully gowned in cream silk, and carried bride's roses. After the wedding a four-course supper was served in the dining room, which was decorated with ferns and roses. Many beautiful presents were received. Mr. and Mrs. Fulks will make their home in Union City, Ind.

W. J. Colville, having completed highly successful engagements at Lily Dale can now be adressed in care of Spiritual Book Concern, 87 Washington street, Chicago, where he is now giving lectures and lessons in Spiritual Science.

BEAR IN MIND that the editor of The Progressive Thinker is in no wise responsible for the views expressed by contributors. He may or may not, agree with their respective views.

Emma A. Ellis writes: "The final social of the Band of Harmony was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Druliner on Thursday, August 15. Quite a large number were present, and the afternon was given over to "tea cup" readings, music and social concourse. In the evening we were entertained by selections on the cornet by the son of the host and hostess, accompanied on the piano, by Miss Tresness. Progressive euchre with handsome prizes concluded a very charming day."

Georgia Gladys Cooley passed through the city Saturday, August 24, enroute to Clinton, Iowa, Camp meeting from Lily Dale. How she managed to pull loose from her loving friends at the Dale deponent saith not. She was retained by the people of Lily Dale several days over her contract with the management, as a telling indication of the way her work was appreciated there.

A. P. Courtney writes from Minneapolis, Minn.: "There has recently been organized here an independent Spiritualist society to be known as the Minneapolis Psychic Society. It has engaged the First Unitarian Church, corner of 8th street and Mary Place, for its Sunday evening services, commencing September 1st. It has been very fortunate in securing the services of Mrs. Carrie Willar as spiritual message bearer, which, in connection with trance lectures, is an assurance of successful meetings as well as the uplifting of our philosophy. Known fakers and immoral representatives of Spiritualism will not be tolerated on our platform. We leave them in the hands of those who have proven themselves adepts in fostering such characters upon the citizens of our city as teachers and exemplifiers of Spiritualism."

Mrs. Helen Stuart-Richings has been engaged to lecture at Grand Rapids, Mich., for January, February and March. Her present address is Eden, Pa.

The Illinois Sunflower Club will hold a Tea Party on the Afternoon of August 27, at 70 East Adams streeet. A reading by one of the mediums will be given with each Cup of Tea. Come and bring your friends.

Mrs. Susie L. Thompson, No. 348 Oakley Boul., a well known medium, will hold a circle at her home on the evening of August 27. The proceeds are to help defray the expenses of a worthy medium who has had a severe illness. Mrs. Thompson and also the afflicted medium, are both workers in the Sunflower Club and members, and their friends are urgently requested to give their aid.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague are at Haslett Park Camp meeting in Michigan, this week.

Haslett Park Camp.

To the Editor:—It is with pleasure I take my pen once more, after a period of several months—months in which I have been deprived of and hungry for spiritual things, to report once more the proceedings of our camp at Haslett Park, and also a visit I paid to the camp at Vicksburg, Mich.

Again this year, as last, I preside at the camp from which I write. It was also my privilege to preside at the Vicksburg camp while there. It is a pleasure to again look into the faces of our friends and clasp their hands after these intervening months since last camp season; also to sit again and listen to the inspired teachers of the day.

At Vicksburg Will J. Erwood in his own masterly way, pointed us not to the heaven afar off, but to the duty of each one to assist in establishing the kingdom of heaven here and now. He impressed his his hearers with the fact that "Life is real, life is earnest, and the grave is not the goal," but that the goal was to be found in the development of all that is high and noble in human character, in the constantly progressive movement of the soul toward better things. Mr. Erwood touches the very soul of things, and his listeners find their finer, better qualities coming forth and taking possession of themselves.

Sunday, August 4, was the opening of the camp at Haslett Park. The sun shone upon us as it only can shine after a rainy day, and a goodly audience gathered to hear the speaker of the day, W. D. Wattles, of Elwood, Ind. Mr. Wattles with his unique manner of reasoning presented vital truths upon the questions of the day. His family was with him. They are a quartette of excellent singers and furnished our music while here, which proved to be a very enjoyable feature of the program.

Mrs. Abbie E. Sheets, of Grand Ledge, Mich., is our present speaker, and we are enjoying her work very much. With her inspired words she brings to her audience a feeling of upliftment and power. She points them to the cause of things, and to the laws of being. Sunday, August 18, completes her work here, and we are looking forward to the coming of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Sprague this week. They will be with us until the close of the camp, August 25.

Among the visitors at our camp we would note Dr. A. B. Spinney of Belding Mich., and Geo. A. Letford, well known as the "drummer medium." Mr. Letford never goes visiting but what he takes his work with him, and undoubtedly has made many converts to the truth of Spiritualism. He followed Mr. Wattles' lecture with messages while here.

Dr. Spinney gave us a fine address while here. He does not view the world through a narrow crack in a wall, behind which he has hid for safety, but his vision is broad and universal, and he has no fear of Mother Grundy. One can hardly afford to be narrow after hearing him.

Each of the above speakers are doing their work in their characteristic way, but through it all, and above it all, Truth rings out its clarion notes, calling men away from sordid materialism to look into the soul of things, to seek for the cause, to study underlying principles, and to promote the brotherhod of the race. We are made to feel with Sam Walter Foss: "Let me live in a house by the side of the road,

Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good, and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the scorner's seat,
Or hurl the cynic's ban,
Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man.

ORTHODOX SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

A Spiritualist Lady Has an Experience, and Offers Remarks.

To the Editor:—Having read, from time to time, articles concerning sending our children to orthodox Sunday schools, I have had some experienec with one of these earnest Sunday school workers this afternoon, who was taking the Sunday school census, and I wish to send a few thoughts in regard to same.

Quite an argument arose as to my disbelief in sending my child to the orthodox Sunday school, and to my belief in the occult; although the lady admitted she knew nothing, only had heard that such people received messages by table tipping and chairs dancing around the room; also that unless I accepted the gift of Christ as my Savior and salvation, and believed the entire Bible and all its mysterious teachings, I would be eternally lost. That it was not by WORKS and RIGHT CHRISTIAN LIVING that I would be saved, but by simply taking Christ, as his blood was shed for the atonement of my sins, "For without blood there is no remission of sins;" and that if I tried to live right, and by good works try to enter heaven, I was the same as a THIEF and a ROBBER.

Friends, this was getting pretty strong, to be classed among such a class of people, but my spiritual guide boldly came to my rescue and explained a few things for me, wherein the lady arose to go, saying, "Dear sister, I fear you are on dangerous ground, and will sink into the bottomless pit that burneth with fire and brimstone" (for living right).

When, oh when, will the true Spiritualists band themselves together for the rights of their beliefs and establish societies and children's lyceums all over the country, where the young may be taught TRUTH and REASON?

My baby boy is not quite three years old, yet, when he hears the church bells ring and has been told its meaning, and is also asked to come and join the cradle roll in the Sunday school, his little mind is already at work in wonderment as to why mamma doesn't take him to Sunday school and church.

I am sure a city the size of Danville ought to have an established church for its children, for SURELY THERE MUST BE SPIRITUALISTS IN DANVILLE, yet through these summer months I read the orthodox announcements for service and Sunday school in the daily press, but no Spiritualists'.

While I may be branded a "thief and robber" in trying to enter the pearly gates by my firm belief in Spiritualism and its teachings, I feel that it is my duty to teach my boy the TRUTH, as it has been shown me, and hope soon to remove to a place where we will not be in the field comparatively alone, but where he will grow up in PURE SPIRITUAL ATMOSPHERE, and his little mind never tainted with such superstition as the Sunday school teaches.

May Nature's choicest blessings be yours, dear readers, and may our editor long live to proclaim the truths of spirit return through The Progressive Thinker.

Yours for the truth,
MRS. EDNA UTTER WARD.

THE DIVORCE QUESTION.

A Lady Gives Her View of the Causes and Cure.

A current magazine contains an able article on "The Evil of Divorce," from a churchman's point of view, by Cardinal Gibbons. As the newspaper by agitation stimulates thought, having a tendency to solve the problems of life, we venture to submit our earnest opinion.

Let us deal with conditions of our own country, for to members of a republic, monarchical forms of government are wrong.

The settlers of America were induced to come here for fame (by discoveries), gold, religious liberty, etc. During and after the Revolution, history relates little concerning divorce; homes, lands and occupations were all-important. The desire for gold promoted the slave-trade, and a civil war resulted. When peace reigned once more, gold again became the incentive. Husbands and wives worked hard for this object, and their wants being simple, the acquired fortunes were bequeathed to their children. Through inventions and manufactures living became complex; more gold must be gotten to maintain modern comforts and luxury. Consequently husbands devote less time to the family. Wives spend extravagantly to gratify vanity in the adornment of themselves and children. Husbands look for enjoyment of clubs; wives and children also seek for pleasure away from home. Children are left to the care of not always intelligent, intellectual servants. What sort of moral training does that imply? Men and women of refinement are not demanded for our households because their worth, apparently, is not known. Cheap help is considered good enough.

The so-called pleasures which draw parents from home, in many cases, lead fathers and mothers apart, causing numerous divorces.

If parents will devote more time in study for the home, and less for gold and what it brings, the children of the next generation will make nobler men and women and parents will not separate so frequently. The future offspring, when united will emulate their childhood's memories of happy homes, and divorces will be fewer.

But as long as selfishness is fostered in our children by the gratification of every desire money can procure, and gold, instead of good will, is king in our minds, divorce courts will flourish.

E. K. EAGER.
New London, Conn.

Letter from Helen Stuart-Richings.

Some of my correspondents seem to have lost track of me lately, so that their letters, as related to my movements, remind me of a game of "hide and seek."

Well, here I am, my friends, at Parkland, Pa., the four-year-old home of the Parkland Spiritualist Camp Association. I was fortunate this summer in being able to secure for a few weeks just the quiet retreat my dramatic and literary work requires for its preparation, and came to Parkland toward the end of July.

This gave me an opportunity that seldom offers, of hearing some of the speakers on the Spiritualist platform. Mr. and Mrs. Kates appeared here on July 28 before pleased audiences. Mrs. Kates tests seeming to give special satisfaction. Various local mediums occupied the platform on the two following Sundays, and the writer is to lecture on the 18th and 25th, when camp closes for this season.

A bazaar, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid, was held for four days last week and brought the Association nearly $200.00.

There is a feature of some of the bazaars and fairs held by Spiritualists, against which I feel that protest—earnest protest—should be made, namely, the selling of chances. The other churches are awakening to a realization of the principle involved, and many voices are being heard in pulpit and pew against a method of raising money that may instill in the minds of our young people the fatal love of gambling. Surely Spiritualists should not be among the last to put upon it the stamp of their disapproval.

One lady here, the very efficient secretary of the Camp Association, stood out at first alone against this practice; now she has the support of others whose attention has been called to the matter, and together they controlled a table in the recent bazaar, of which it was announced that from it no cigars would be sold, and no article "chanced off." As demonstrating the power of the spiritual law, when obeyed, to care for its servants, it may be noted that the receipts at this table exceeded those of any other.

This statement may give offence to some of my Parkland friends, but we are weak-kneed, indeed, if seeing a wrong we fail to condemn it lest we offend. Love of truth should be above fear of man. This taking of chances and selling things, the use of which we condemn, is not an uncommon practice among our societies, and the writer believes that all that is needful is to set our people thinking on this question to bring about a much-needed reform.

If I were able to attend the coming convention I should bring up this subject for discussion. As it is, I hope someone else will do so.

I am in the same home that gave me shelter while I was in Parkland last summer. You may recall my telling you of the pretty little home set in the midst of clinging, climbing vines, hedges of privet and hydrangea, and beds and banks of flowers innumerable.

A fine grove shelters the house on the northeast, and here the robins, threshes, flickers, and many other birds I know only by their song, give us early morning and evening concerts. "Floral Heights," as this delightful spot is called, is on the highest ground hereabouts, its wide lawn sloping down to the privet hedge that separates it from the road. I sleep in a nice airy chamber with four windows (next to all-out-of-doors—I love windows), one to the east, two to the south, and one to the west. Everything about it, and about the whole place, is clean, sweet and wholesome.

My host is a fine old Quaker gentleman, Joseph Fish—"Josie," as his daughter calls him, in the simple Quaker fashion. He is 83 years of age, but, although not very strong, still able to work about the place, cutting down weeds here, using the lawn mower there, trimming the hedges, gathering peaches from the orchard west of the house, or bringing in garden truck, and always in the same even, placid way. We have grand chats on spiritual matters, and his gentle "thee" and "thou" are like a benediction.

Elizabeth, his daughter, is a fine woman—worthy daughter of such a father. She decorates the camp platform with green vines, and fills jars and vases with her choicest blooms. The sick are remembered. She has a lyceum that meets in her home every Saturday. It has over thirty members, but not one sees a birthday pass without a lovely basket of flowers, beautifully arranged, from their "dear Miss Fish."

And Elizabeth's flowers bloom all the more luxuriantly because of her generous spirit, and "Elizabeth's Garden" is the most beautiful spot in Parkland.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

Passed to the higher life, August 4, 1907, Mrs. Sarah Ann Best, wife of the late John A. Best of Heuvelton. She was seventy-two years of age, and for many years an enthusiastic supporter of Spiritualism. Her departure was rendered the more touching because of her blindness, which for thirty-eight years she had borne with such exemplary patience and cheerfulness. Her many friends join in sincere sorrow with the three children (Elmer E. and Mary J. Best of West Potsdam, and Mrs. Monroe Ritter of Heuvelton), who deeply mourn the loss of the true friend and mother.

HARLEIGH HAMMOND.

The angel of Death came to us and robbed us of our beloved daughter and Sister Laura. She suffered greatly. We take this opportunity of extending to the flower girls of the Lyceum, and for the beautiful sprays which they carried, our sincere thanks. Last, but not least, our sincere thanks are due to Mrs. Rev. Dr. E. B. Price for the beautiful orations delivered, which crept to the depth of everyone's heart, and which in time to come will be long remembered. Again we extend our sincere thanks for condolence and sympathy offered.

CHAS. H. GROOSE,
and Family, St. Louis., Mo.

Geo. W. Eichelberger passed to spirit life on August 14, after a prolonged illness. He was an old and highly respected Spiritualist, and for the past twelve years has been prominently connected with the movement in Chicago, and a staunch supporter of The Progressive Thinker. Funeral services were held at the home, 586 E. 60th street, and were conducted by the writer, assisted by the Rev. Libby. His devoted wife will sadly miss his staunch support, but will know of his spiritual presence. A good and faithful soul has been born into the higher life.

JULIET H. SEVERANCE, M. D.

Columbus M. Law of New Philadelphia, Ohio, passed to spirit life August 12, aged 55 years. Brother Law was converted to our great philosophy of life from the Lutheran Church, a few years ago, of which he was a devout adherent, but which did not satisfy his soul. Recently he became a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker, and an earnest investigator as your correspondent is well aware, and now has a whole eternity to explore the great future, of which he has the initiatory. We deeply regret to lose him so early in life from our city.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

A. E. F. and others:—Q. Can you surely promise us the Golden Sheaf?

A.—The Golden Sheaf is surely to be published this autumn. Already the number of subscribers assures its issue, and that in a manner that will be pleasing to those who have given their names. The MS. will be given to the printers in two weeks, and it is very desirable that those who desire the book at once send their names, that the size of the edition may be determined. We have arranged to make an Edition de Lux, silk cover, gilt top, gold embossed, and fine paper. The generous response of our friends has warranted doing this, and making the book an elegant example of the printer's and bookbinder's skill.

We thank the friends who have so confidently subscribed. Many have ordered five and even twenty-five copies, looking ahead, they write, to use them for gifts the coming holidays.

Mrs. L. A. writes:—"Do they have bells to ring for religious purposes in Turkey?

A.—The call of the Muezzin takes the place of the bell in Mohammedan countries.

Bells have been in use, as some form of clanging instrument from remote times. How significant they were in a religious sense is difficult to determine. The Buddhists and Chinese make much of bells and gongs in their religious ceremonies. Bells have more significance with Christians, yet it is not an easy matter to find the source of the superstition attached to their use. Probably the primitive idea of the Christians was the same as that of the pagans, that its clamor scared away the evil spirits ever lurking around to ensnare the believers.

This ringing of church bells is eminently Christian and altogether heathen in origin and significance.

Lyceum:—Q. Why is it that the Lyceum movement flourishes so vigorously in England and languishes in this country?

A.—Although the Progressive Lyceum had its advent here, and for a time seemed destined to become an important movement, its English branch has become strong and vigorous while in this country the organization languishes. The cause of this is plain. The Lyceum depends on the efforts of individuals, and is not backed by an organization, as are the Sunday schools. For a time our Lyceums had strong men and women as leaders. These grew old or wearied and none took their places. The Spiritual societies have, as a rule, looked with jealousy on the Lyceums, quite different from the fostering care of the churches toward their Sunday schools.

In England there has been almost directly opposite conditions. Mr. and Mrs. Morse published the Lyceum Banner almost at their own cost, and rallied around the movement unselfish and devoted people. Alfred Kitson, with remarkable ability as an author, furnished books of songs and music and was head and front of the movement, devoting all his energies to making it successful. It is not to be wondered at that he stands at the head of over two hundred societies.

It has not been by passively waiting the "dear spirits" to do something, but by earnest, persistent effort that this splendid result has been gained.

Mr. Kitson says: "Oh! that the American Spiritualists would waken up to the fact that Spiritualism is something more than test and phenomena hunting—that it is educational and reformatory in the fullest and grandest sense of the word. The truest and best reformation is that which is laid in the hearts and minds of the children. Oh! what a glorious opportunity they are missing in neglecting to train and educate the children. May they awake to a realization of its importance before it be too late, is my fervent prayer."

These are golden words of one who has devoted his energies to emphasizing this truth. The Lyceum is the one vital movement expressive of the new methods of thought and culture, and it seems to me that its neglect is treason to the cause of right.

ONSET CAMP MEETING.

Abstract of Report Sent Too Late for Last Week's Issue.

Thursday, August 1st, Rev. F. A. Wiggin was the speaker of the day.

After singing by Mr. A. J. Maxham and invocation by Mr. Wiggin, he spoke at length upon the Conditions and Concerns of Life. He elaborated extensively upon this theme, and his lecture was much appreciated.

Friday was conference day, and a very enjoyable one was held.

Saturday, August 3, was Massachusetts State Association day. The vice-president, Mr. Hatch, decorated the auditorium beautifully with yellow and white, and red, white and blue, and Old Glory, and Dr. Prentiss gathered flowers for the platform, and everything was made beautiful for the occasion. The meeting was presided over by the President, Dr. G. A. Fuller and he welcomed all the friends to the meeting. Mr. A. J. Maxham then sang and F. A. Wiggin gave the invocation. Miss Susie C. Clark, one of the directors, made the response to the call of the president, and was followed by Carrie P. Pratt, Rev. F. A. Wiggin, Dr. Fuller, and others.

Kate Ham then gave messages, which were all recognized. Mrs. Hattie C. Mason then spoke earnestly of the work of the M. S. A., and said that all mediums and workers should join and co-operate with the State Association. A vote of thanks was extended to all who so kindly helped in making the day a success—to Dr. Prentiss for flowers, and to the Onset Bay Grove Association for the use of the Auditorium. The meeting closed with singing.

Mr. Terry of Washington, D. C., sang a solo; Mr. A. J. Maxham sang several selections during the meeting.

Notwithstanding the downpour of rain the largest morning audience of the season was in attendance.

The New Bedford Band preceded the lecture with a fine concert.

The speaker for the morning was Mrs. Mary T. Longley, secretary of the N. S. A., and she received a fine reception on being introduced by chairman Fuller.

At 2 o'clock the Temple was Crowded and the large audience was well paid for coming out in the storm.

The Speaker was the Rev. Wilson Fritch of Attleboro, Mass. Mr. Fritch is a good speaker, and is always sure of a large audience. After singing by Mr. Maxham, Mrs. Longley gave a soulful invocation, after which Mr. Fritch took for his subject "Wireless Superseded." Only a verbatim report could do justice to such a lecture.

Monday another large audience was in attendance. Mr. Fritch was the speaker, delivering an instructive lecture on "Religion."

Tuesday Mrs. Juliet Yeaw was the speaker of the afternoon; she is one of our of our pioneer workers, yet she is still a power of strength to our cause.

Wednesday was Equal Rights day, and Mrs. J. Willis gave a fine violin solo. Mrs A. J. Pettengill spoke of the needs of the hour. Mrs Eager gave some statistics and Henry Blackwell; the veteran suffragist gave a remarkable adress for a man of his years, giving very interesting statistics.

Thursday the speaker of the day was Dr. Wm. A. Hale, and he spoke on the subject of practical Spiritualism, and handled the subject well.

The Opera, "Charter Oak" was a very great success in every way and everyone here is enjoying the fine weather and we are sending out the best thoughts to all friends of the West. Mrs. Kate Ham gave a test seance on Wednesday evening, one very fine instance noticed by the writer was of a gentleman in the audience after receiving a message from his mother, said in a deep-toned voice with such a note of reverence, "Thank you, mother, I am resting." It was such a pleasure to see some one recognize the presence of the spirit mother instead of the medium—this was a refreshing incident.

Sunday, August 11, was a most beautiful day and a big crowd. The New Bedford Band opened the exercises with a fine concert before a large audience. At the close of concert Chairman Fuller introduced Mr. Albert P. Blinn, secretary, New England Camp Meeting Association, as the speaker for the morning. Mr. Blinn received a good reception and opened the meeting with an invocation. He took for his subject "The Divine in Nature, the Mysteries of God," delivering an exceptionally able lecture.

He claimed that we should live so we can show the world that Spiritualism is worth living for as well as dying for.

After another concert at 1 o'clock, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond spoke before the largest audience of the season. Mr. Maxham opened the meeting with singing, after which Mrs. Richmond was introduced and received an ovation. The speaker preceded her address with a soulful invocation, and then took for her subject, "Peace and Arbitration," and gave a very interesting address, and pleased her listeners. A verbatim report was taken of this lecture, and it will probably appear in The Progressive Thinker later.

Mrs. Kate M. Ham of Haverhill, followed the lecture with communications, and gave a great many, and all were recognized by those receiving them. She is one of the most popular mediums that we have at present, and is always sure of a large audience. She held a large seance in the Arcade this evening, giving a great many messages.

Monday, Mr. Wilson Fritch was the speaker and after an invocation and singing by Mr. A. J. Maxham, Mr. Fritch took for his subject, "God; What Is God, and How We Can Know God, and the Best Method of How to Reach God." His discourse was a masterpiece, and a large audience convened to hear him. Tuesday Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond was the speaker. She answered several questions briefly and then took for her subject "Conditions in Spirit Life. She told of the wonderful mechanism that were used to operate the mediums. She said all forms of spirit life are results of conditions within us. You possess that which you create. She told of the work of the spirits, and how they employed themselves; the missions they were engaged in and what powerful things they were able to do by projecting their thoughts upon the human mind.

She closed her lecture with an impromptu poem—"Spirit Child, Mother and Love."

Wednesday was Library Day and many speakers were present to add their voices for the opening of the Library during the winter for the benefit of those who reside here during the year. This is an important matter, and some money and pledges were made to assist this worthy cause Onset is still dressed in her gayest and best, and extends her hands to all to come and join us at this most delightful spot.

Not In Favor of Reincarnation.

An Earnest Woman's Views on the Reincarnation Theory, and Kindred Subjects.

Man is ever seeking to gain more knowledge.

He would solve the mysteries of the heavens and the earth.

He is studying, investigating, experimenting, inventing.

As a result marvelous advancement has been made in the arts and sciences, in discovery, and in the literary and industrial world.

Men are devoting their whole lives to subjects both profound and insignificant. But of man himself very little is really known. Physiology tells us all about the physical man; but what of the mental, the thinking, active powers that have given to the world so much knowledge; that have set the wheels of progress moving at such a rapid pace? Who can tell us all about this strange force: the human mind? Who can say as to whom or what is responsible for the multifarious degrees of intelligence, of goodness and sinfulness that are made manifest among the children of men? Why some should possess such wonderful brain power, such spirituality of mind, while others are unteachable idiots or occupants of a prison cell?

We have reached a place in our history when we should have some scientific knowledge on this subject. It should be determined beyond a doubt if a man makes or chooses his own mentality; if he can at will elect to be a Roosevelt, a Rockefeller or a rag-picker, a Lincoln or a Booth? Or if some outside influences are helping to shape the minds of men—are fashioning the mind of the criminal as well as to form the mind of the gifted musician or poet. Or if the human mind is a plastic force or substance, and can, like an old garment, be made over at any time.

Individual opinion or any present method of reasoning cannot settle the question.

People are yet to learn the fallacy of human reason, that this so-called reason is as liable to lead people into error as it is to guide them into the right way of thinking and doing.

When the human reason can lead people, and intelligent people at that, into believing all manner of absurd and ridiculous things; can teach one person that a certain creed or question is true and tell another that it is absolutely false, which it has been doing since history began, it would seem about time the world was guided by knowledge instead of theories and speculation.

Justice will continue to be almost a meaningless term, and as no work of reform can be lasting until the world learns more about the natural laws governing human life, governing the human mind.

Now I do not pretend to know all about the mysterious mental formations, or all about the different influences that are working to make up human character, but I have, after some experience and years of study of the human mind, learned something about heredity and prenatal influences, and I know that these influences can as easily produce a sinner as a saint; that they can as easily deform the human mind as they can disfigure the human body; and that some persons born under these influences are as helpless as though hypnotized.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox touches the key-note of this truth. When speaking of prenatal influence, she says: "It is the suppressed state of the mother's mind that does the work." That works for weal or woe.

Others have and are coming to know of these influences. Science has made some discoveries along these lines, and some writers for The Progressive Thinker, The Arena, and other publications, are adding their testimony. The benefit such knowledge will yet be to the world—to humanity—must be determined by intelligent and progressive minds.

For years I have been trying to possess my soul in patience, waiting and believing that higher intelligence and abler minds would come forward to guide the world into the light of a new day; a time when it would be considered as important to educate parents as it now is to educate children; a time when mothers would be tenderly guarded, and protected from brutal and drunken husbands; a time when little children would not be pushed into the world with nerves shattered and minds distorted; a time when many wrongs would be righted and when reformers would be seeking to remove the causes instead of trying to remedy the effects.

And, too, I have been believing that my mission was only to wait; but I can no longer remain silent and continue to read The Progressive Thinker, for there is inspiration in every number. I have been a reader of this interesting paper for nearly two years. It was the name of the paper that first attracted my attention, and it seemed to me that a happier or more auspicious title could not have been chosen for any progressive publication, for progressive thinking leads away from creeds, bigotry, and all limitations into the broader fields of liberty, investigation and advancement.

I had read only a few numbers of this interesting paper when I felt impressed that here were the people I had so long been seeking; that here were the soul-inspired who were to help redeem the world. And, although the Spiritualists as an organization had never engaged in any works of charity, and of late so much fraud among mediums had come to light, I continued to read and enjoy The Progressive Thinker, and to still believe that here were some of the great minds that were to take an active part in the next step of human progression.

Then all at once that ancient and hideous doctrine of reincarnation looms upon the Spiritualistic horizon—a doctrine that, if accepted by the civilized world, would soon block the pathway of human progression, crush out all sympathy for suffering humanity, smother every kindly impulse, and make mankind but little above the brute creation.

Personally I know nothing about the people who are believers in Theosophy, and have never felt any particular interest in their teachings more than to hear what strange things some people were able to believe; but to learn that Spiritualists are believing this awful thing quickens my mind to action. Now I cannot rest until I know why Spiritualists have chosen to enwrap the beautiful truth of immortality in a garb so repulsive.

I will admit that my mind was not fashioned in a way to believe, without evidence, any and all sorts of doctrines; so the first and most important part to me would be the proof that reincarnation was a truth; and then, if true, or even believed to be a reality, how would it benefit mankind? Would it make people better or happier? Would the star of hope shine brighter for each soul if they could know that sometime they would not know anything; then after centuries of oblivion they might again come forth—might blossom out into a bird, or worm, or some other interesting expression of life?

Now let us view well this hope-destroying doctrine, and so make sure of its advantages to humanity. If I am correctly informed on the subject, Theosophy teaches that Karma—a supposed natural law of progression—sends people back to earth for an experience they require, for their spiritual growth; that they must return to earth hundreds, or perhaps thousands, of times, or until they have experienced every agony and every happiness and have committed every crime in the calendar.

Now this being true, any work of charity would be nothing less than a sin. To help the widows and orphans, the blind and helpless, would be only to cheat them out of their wretched but necessary experience, and thus drive them back to earth.

So the greatest kindness we could possibly show the unfortunate would be to teach them the importance of making haste in their career of misery or iniquity, that they might the sooner reach the worm or insane period, for to believe all this jargon would be enough to unbalance the mind of anyone.

And then this "brotherhood of man" doctrine is far-reaching in its ties of consanguinity. It puts the human family into such a tangle of relationship that we could never know as to whom we might be, or as to whom we might belong. Think of the thousands of brothers and sisters we must have had, and the numerous fathers and mothers; and some of these same parents might now be reincarnated as our own children, and then those children could occupy the unique distinction of being their own grandparents and grandchildren at the same time. There is hardly a limit to the amazing muddle of this double-and-twisted brotherhood.

But the crowning picture of hideousness is what it would make of mother and babyhood. It would make of these a nightmare. For any refined and sensitive mother to believe that disembodied spirits were so lost to all sense of decency and respect for others that they would dare invade the privacy of her home, watching over and contending for the possession of her body, would be enough to drive her wildly insane. Race suicide might well become popular. Then, when she held her little one in her arms she could not look upon it as a little bud of humanity—it would be only some dried-up old mullen stalk of creation. And a mother could never know if she were singing her lullaby to some Fiji Islander, Hottentot, or murderer, or rocking to sleep a Shakspeare, Columbus or a cannibal.

What an indignity upon motherhood, and despair for the world!

If all this were true, we have no parents or children. Progression would be at a standstill. Everything is as it should be and everybody are just where they belong.

For picturesque hideousness and hopelessness the doctrines of reincarnation certainly stand alone.

Now, in all sincerity, I would ask if this is the teaching of pure Spiritualism? If so, its mission on earth is ended, for the world is in need of help, hope and encouragement, and this kind of teaching can give none of these.

Now I cannot say that I repudiate Spiritualism, for I know that spirit return is a truth. This knowledge of immortality came to me without the aid of any personal medium. It was one of the truths I gleaned when in search of something to satisfy an inquiring mind, and reincarnation was never any part of this truth as given to me. How I became a Spiritualist while living among an orthodox people, and some of my studies and investigations while progressing away from orthodoxy into infidelity, Spiritualism, through different cults, and back to the beautiful truth of life immortal, makes a story I would like to tell to the readers of TheProgressive Thinker.

And there is more I wish to say regarding the teachings of Theosophy, though first I would like to tell our friends something about the peculiarities—the freaks—of human reason, which make it seem so important that we now have knowledge to guide us along life's pathway. And then there is another story about the contradictory, and so, perhaps, unreliable statements of the unseen intelligences. Now I wish it to be remembered that whatever I may say is for a purpose, all in the interests of humanity; that never in my mind has there been a desire to bring about a discussion merely to antagonize another's thought.

Yours for humanity and truth,

Rome, N. Y. C. CURTIS GARDNER.

THE DARKER SIDE.

Beside a winding path there is a pool
Where often when the stars are all aglow
And when the evening breeze is sweet and cool,
I watch the silent ripples come and go.

There I may see the jewels of the sky
Reflected where the inky shadows cease;
And feel the touch of zephyrs flitting by
And hear the whispered messages of peace.

I never seek the silent pool by day,
For if I found it dark and foul with slime
The joy it gives me would be swept away,
Its mirrored worlds would cease to be sublime.

We do not view the canvas from behind
To see the picture which is made to please;
Why should we look beneath our joys to find
Unlovely truths or hidden miseries?

LIFE and REMINISCENCES OF Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

By Edward C. Smith.

"The Record of a generous life runs like a vine around the memory of our dead, and every sweet unselfish act is now a perfumed flower."

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL was a great and brilliant man, he was the greatest genius of his age. His place is beside Shakespeare, Voltaire, Goethe and Shelley. He was a great Lawyer, Politician, Reformer, Orator, Critic and Philosopher. His wonderful gift of language touched with the spirit and charm of poetry aided by his powerful gift of wit and humor, made him the most formidable foe the church has ever had.

He was great because he was honest. He shook the world with his eloquence and reasoning. His arguments were never answered. As a Lawyer his arguments were always so convincing that he won his case.

He knew many things by learning and more by intuition.

He was an intellectual Giant, and it is very probable that the wonderful combinations he possessed, the world will never see again.

The author who was a close friend and great admirer of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, was assisted by near relatives who collected a great amount of valuable data, and in no other way could this information be obtained. The writing of the "Life and Reminiscences" was purely a labor of love; and it is useless to say has been written in the fairest and kindest spirit, every detail having been carefully recorded. Much of this data was collected and revised before the Colonel's death, and great care was taken in only recording after careful research.

This valuable edition has been aptly illustrated with many beautiful half-tone illustrations of the Colonel in different periods of his life. Also portraits of his sisters and brothers, family, father and mother, together with a geneological chart, also many valuable reminiscences. The work is well written, handsomely bound, and beautifully printed. All admirers of the Colonel will welcome its publication.

THE NATURE CURE

BY PHYSICAL AND MENTAL METHODS, ILLUSTRATED.

A Bridge from the Old to the New; the Dawn of a New Day in Medical Practice. A Clear, Short-Cut Treatise on the Cause and Cure of Disease.

By MARVIN E. CONGER, M. D.
Assisted by ROSA C. CONGER, M. D.

The light is turned on to objectionable medical mysteries, latin prescriptions, dogmatic theories and dangerous experiments of the present expensive medical practice.

Every pains has been taken to make the leading points so plain that all, young and old, may easily understand. Condensed facts, short, clear-cut paragraphs are some of the attractive features of THE NATURE CURE.

The new and better methods of curing the sick and preventing disease, have never been so clearly stated in plain English for the plain people, as in NATURE CURE.

Our Definition of Medicine.—Any method or remedy that will remove, alleviate or modify pain and restore the sick to normal condition, is practical medicine.

Stripped of mystery and deception, the study and practice of medicine can be carried to success in every intelligent home. NATURE CURE will lead the way to certain success.

The best medical practice is the one that will cure in the least time with the least risk and expense.

Nature Cure is a true exponent of the practice of medicine as defined, and stands squarely upon truth and demonstration, rejecting theories and experiments wherever health and life are endangered.

The book contains 375 pages, and is finely illustrated; the mechanical and artistic work are the very best. Bound in fine English cloth, marble edges, $2.00; common cloth $1.50.

Nature Cure teaches how to heal by simple home remedies.

It teaches how Nature cures.

It does not use poisonous drugs.

It does not endorse dangerous experiments with the surgeon's knife.

It will save money in every home.

It is entirely free from technical rubbish.

It teaches how typhoid and other fevers may be cured at once.

It teaches how pneumonia, la-grippe, diphtheria and other forms of disease considered dangerous, may be cured in twenty-four hours.

It is, as a medical book for homes, THE BEST, and is up-to-date in every particular.

There is no similar book, no medical, hygienic or reformatory doctor book that compares with THE NATURE CURE.

LILY DALE CAMP.

A Vivacious Account of Various Doings at the Noted Eastern Camp.

As the flower is the concentrated essence of all the sunshine and rain, and all the chemical forces and vibrations the plant has been able to gather unto herself, and as the flower lives its life of beauty, giving out its fragrance, then yielding its seed, so, indeed, is Lily Dale—this beautiful flower on the plant of Spiritualism, blooming and giving out its divine fragrance of sublime truths to a weary, waiting world and a hungry people.

The harvest time is near and the promises of the flower will be verified in the seed, fruitful and filled with life-giving essence and power. As the dainty thistle-down gives wings to its seed, sending it to the four winds of the earth, a veritable Swastika, so will the seed sown at Lily Dale this summer enrich the world and strengthen the cause everywhere.

As the various changes of the kaleidoscope, each hour brings a new revelation—a new presentation of the many-sided questions most helpful to the physical, mental and spiritual man, and whether the hour brings a lecture—deep and broad in spiritual philosophy, or with proof strong as holy writ, of spirit return through some phase of the phenomena, whether it be one of our morning classes, which soak the brain in mental lye to make it more pliable and receptive for more, or whether the time be devoted to learn from Mrs. Rorer, that demi-god of the stew-pot, how to do housework easily, keeping dust from furniture by refraining from sweeping the carpets, and eating the plates clean so as to save dishwashing, or whether it was Mrs. Francis Baker who taught you Arts and Crafts, including the weaving of waste baskets which would hold water, binding books, though you could not write them, or painting flowers with their natural odor, or whether the time was spent purely in pleasure or recreation, the hours pass so quickly that they seem to begin on western time and close on central time, thus closing as soon as begun, meeting itself coming back—just so it gets started.

The week closed the splendid work of Mrs. Russegue and Mrs. Richmond, and brought in another star in W. J. Colville. He shines for all and three times daily.

The event of the week was our Woman's Day—the greatest day in all the year. The weather was ideal and the grounds and house wore their Sunday clothes. At 10:30 the symposium was called to order by Mrs. Humphrey, our president, who made some most fitting remarks and then introduced Mrs. Judge Tilden and Augusta Armstrong, Mrs. Sarah T. Rorer, Margaret Gaule Reidinger, Mrs. May Price, Laura G. Fixen, Mrs. E. L. Nicholson, Mrs. M. J. Stevens, Mrs. F. H. Spaulding and Mrs. Clara Watson. Each presented the "woman question" from a different standpoint. They say a woman never knows when to stop, and yet in 72 minutes 11 women spoke.

Miss Norma Pritchard rendered one of her soulful solos and Mrs. Augusta Peterson and her blind sister, Mrs. Ida Fowler, and Mrs. Dr. Batdorf, another sister, sang a trio accompanied by a zither.

In the afternoon the Woman's Day oration was delivered by Mrs. Mary Seymour Howell, one of the oldest and most prominent workers for the suffrage cause in New York State. The auditorium was overflowing with people who for over an hour hung on every word which fell from this orthodox Spiritualist. She depicted woman's struggle to a larger life and greater liberty, and it was pronounced the most spiritual lecture ever delivered from our platform on Woman's Day.

Mrs. Margaret Gaule Reidinger—wait till next week, for to tell of her is a tale all by itself; it takes volumes to do justice to "our Margaret."

The ring in the cake was yet to be uncovered, for the woman's dance in the evening was to crown this "glorious" day with a halo of pleasure not to be forgotten. The six-o'clock trains brought hundreds of beautiful bouquets pinned on fair maidens, as they came with their partners, for the women invite the men to dance with them for that occasion and pay the way for both. Artistic programs had been prepared with water lilies embossed on the covers. Over a thousand people crowded into the auditorium, the big drum sang a solo and the ball was on. The grand march was led by the president, Mrs. Esther C. Humphrey, dressed in a gown that looked like sea moss and moonshine, garnished with her sweet and queenly personality and fitted with a train cut low-neck at the top.

John T. Lillie, our chairman, was her partner. He was a masterpiece of the tailor's art, done in black and white; his coat was a cross between a Prince Albert and a claw-hammer, the skirts being longer behind than before; his waistcoat was buttoned all the way up (which wasn't much), and his immaculate shirt beamed—as did his face. Solomon in all his glory was not clothed half so elaborate as was our fashionable chairman, leading the march with his fair partner, lending dignity and assurance to the rest. The flower committee and the trustees followed, then come over one hundred couples, all rigged in their gladdest clothes.

Our famous orchestra furnished the music. The violins strained and stretched their strings until they snapped; the flute was tied in knots and the base viol ripped its 'inners" out—sandpapered them and put them back again. This demoralized the rest of the instruments and they broke loose, whistled and tooted, fiddled, groaned and laughed, shrieked and played hide and seek with the notes, but it made delightful harmony, and the people—you should have seen them—gray hairs and blonde curls side by side—everybody was young and everybody on their best behavior; they waltzed and hopped, glided, stamped, sached, tripped, marched and tip-toed—two-steps, three-steps, four-steps, a thousand steps; they danced on their own toes, or on their neighbors' toes, and it was all a part of the program. No barnstormers ever had more fun on straw floors than we had, dancing the Virginia Reel; it didn't make the least difference whether you danced with your own partner or somebody else's, or whether you reeled alone, the wheels turned and kept turning till everybody was wound up convulsed with laughter. We had always supposed that quadrilles were square dances, but that night they were not—they had forty-seven corners and as many centers. Sets sprang up like mushrooms, then overflowed all outdoors—and then some. Nobody could hear the caller, but even if we could, we wouldn't have cared; he was paid for that, anyhow; that was his business and not ours. We didn't need to be told "alleman left"—we just naturally lefted; "swing your partner"—we did, if our partner was there; but if not, we danced with any left-over, just to be sociable and show them you didn't care; "balance to corner"—yes, indeed, to all forty-seven of them; "first couple forward"—every couple was first couple at that dance; "all hands around"—you did, around with all the hands you had, and then wished for a hundred more to match all the feet you felt crawling up your shins or trustingly resting on your "pet corn." You "Grand-right-and-lefted" twice around, and a few more for good measure. You felt secure, for you couldn't fall—where would you fall to? There was no room for you on the floor, that was crowded, holding up dainty number ones with high heels dancing with 8½ pumps, and though the floor was considered "well brought up" and highly polished, it was very noisy and splitting with merriment over our doings. What if skirts were torn, collars wilted and feet ached—it meant something to tuck a month's unalloyed bliss into three and one-half hours.

At midnight, when the last strains of "Home, Sweet Home" had died on the air, a living, loving, laughing stream of humanity leaked out into the park as fresh as a candled egg, many flowing to the depot, where special trains were waiting to take our jolly, welcome guests home.

The engines gave a few toots and snorts, their bells rang, then with a loud guffaw they belched forth a glad au revoir and went out into the night with their happy human freight, leaving us behind—alone. We went home, to bed, to dream it all over again.

Lake Brady Camp.

At Camp Brady on August 11, Dr. W. O. Knowles spoke on questions handed in by the audience. He prefaced his remarks of the morning by reading "Not Understood;" and those of the afternoon by one called "Death," by Ella Dare. Dr. Knowles is a practical speaker and always answers the questions to the point. He and his wife made many friends at Brady. He followed his afternoon lecture by messages, most of them being fully recognized.

Mr. J. Madison Allen of Springfield, Mo., was a visitor for the day at Brady. He spoke for a few minutes after the messages were given. He was on his way to Boston, Mass. He has been a worker for Spiritualism for over fifty years.

On Friday evening Dr. Knowles united Mr. Roberts, a member of the camp association, to Mrs. Jones of Ravenna, in the bonds of wedlock. The newly married pair have the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

We may live without art,
We may live without books,
But civilized man
Cannot live without cooks.

Mrs. Mary Gaskell, Mrs. Mary Fisher, Miss Russell and Mr. Morledge returned Friday from a trip to Lily Dale. They were gone a week.

Queen City Park Camp, Vt.

Another week of spiritual refreshment from the spirit world, supplemented by the uplifting influence of Nature's beauties at their best in our environment, has gone into the past.

A course of lectures by Rev. F. A. Wiggin of Boston, began August 6, the interest in them being augmented by the spirit messages, which he gives after each address. What every investigator especially wants is some personal evidence that dear ones passed to spirit life can and do return and communicate. It is more to heartehungry ones than the ablest discourse.

August 8, the afternoon address was delivered by Mrs. Laura Cummings of Hardwick, Vt, who afterwards gave very interesting and satisfactory psychometric readings from the various little personal articles handed up for that purpose.

August 9, 10 and 11, Rev. F. A. Wiggin again occupied the platform afternoons; Mrs. Cummings giving the forenoon address Sunday, August 11. Attendance has been very good at nearly every meeting, and much interest evinced.

August 13, Rev. B. F. Austin opens an engagement here extending over ten days. He has become well known to the campers in previous years, and his advent is looked forward to with great satisfaction by those who before enjoyed his lectures. It is probable, however, that he will have to share his popularity with Rev. F. A. Wiggin hereafter.

Mrs. Effie I. Chapman will give the spirit messages during the last two weeks of camp-meeting.

Something is doing every evening; concerts, entertainments, everything that bright, lively young people can think of and execute. Prof. and Mrs. Gibson give two concerts during the season, which will surely be musical treats. The campmeeting is remarkably successful in every way this year, and apparently there is a larger number of people staying on the grounds than in several years.

T.

Lake Pleasant, Mass., Camp.

The best and largest attended services of the convocation were held last Sunday, beginning at 9 o'clock with a class lecture by J. Clegg Wright, and continuing with lecture by Mr. G. W. Kates at 10:30 followed with messages by Mrs. Kates.

At 2 o'clock Mr. Kates commenced the afternoon service with a splendid lecture and Mrs. May S. Pepper-Vanderbilt followed with some remarkably convincing messages; the Temple being filled with people, and at 7:30 John Slater of San Francisco gave a test seance in the Temple with an audience nearly as large. The lectures of the day were masterpieces and the message work of Mrs. Kates, Mrs. Pepper-Vanderbilt and John Slater was indeed phenomenal.

On Monday interesting conferences were held, with Hon. A. H. Dailey, R. F. Churchill, Geo. W. Kates, Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds, J. Clegg Wright and Mrs. Zaida B. Kates as the speakers. With such a list of workers to draw from, all of our conferences have been spirited and enthusiastic, and the most successful for years.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing gave an "Ikabod" seance in the evening and as usual Ikabod proved unique and entertaining.

The Ladies' Independent Society opened its Annual Fair Tuesday afternoon and its bountifully supplied tables were pretty well cleaned out the first day. Among the notable donations were two very handsome bed quilts, one of which was given by the ladies of the Independent Liberal Church of Greenwich, Mass., and the other by the Helping Hands of the First Spiritual Union of Norwich, Conn.

We are beginning to feel that the fire which devastated our grounds may turn out to be "a blessing in disguise," for, though we miss many of the old faces, the campers still left are proving "friends indeed" and where indifference reigned a year ago or antagonism, to-day we find active interest, encouragement, and support.

Never were the campers, cottagers and management so united as now.

The enthusiasm to rebuild that exists seems almost a marvel. Two new cottages were started last week as announced in our previous letter, and two more have commenced since. Before next spring over fifty cottages will be built in the burnt district and every one is an improvement on the one it replaces.

Camp closes next Monday and the present week is full of interesting events. The work of Edgar W. Emerson, May Pepper-Vanderbilt, J. Clegg Wright, and Wm. A. Hale is making a powerful impression upon the skeptical mind and is attracting big crowd to the grounds.

We have been somewhat hampered this year on account of insufficient hotel accommodations, but another season will find a great improvement.

The camp meeting of 1908 will open on the first Sunday of August and continue till September 1, and some of our best workers are already engaged. Elizabeth Harlow will be our speaker for the opening Sunday in 1908.

After the fire, it was very doubtful about the advisability of holding this season's camp meeting, but every speaker was retained and success has been the result.

Next year we will open the season with fairer and brighter prospects than ever before.

A large part of the association debt has been canceled, the buildings remaining are all in excellent condition and the campers and management are working hand in hand for "dear Old Lake Pleasant."

The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

OUR CHILDREN.

Hints From Practical Experience for Parents and Teachers.—By Paul Carus.

In this little book "Our Children," Paul Carus offers a unique contribution to pedagogical literature. Without any theoretical pretensions it is a strong defense for the rights of the child, dealing with the responsibilities of parenthood, and with the first inculcation of fundamental ethics in the child mind and the true principles of correction and guidance. Each detail is forcefully illustrated by informal incidents from the author's experience with his own children, and his suggestions will prove of the greatest possible value to young mothers and kindergartners. Hints as to the first acquaintance with all branches of knowledge are touched upon—mathematics, natural sciences, foreign languages, etc.—and practical wisdom in regard to the treatment of money, hygiene and similar problems. 207 Pages. Price, cloth, $1.00.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., AUGUST 31, 1907 NO. 927

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

O'er the river He silently came;
Over that river of mystic flow,
Where once He crossed, 'mid the baleful flame
Of the priestly hate so long ago.
He saw a light in a building grand,
Built with stone and with tapering spire
The wint'ry wind that His vestments fanned,
Brought echoes from the sweet-toned choir.

"They are rend'ring unto Me," he said,
"Their praise as the Son of God, Divine;
As they bend to Me in prayer the head,
I'll enter into this church of mine."
Then tight'ning the cord that held His gown,
He entered in through the folding door.
The usher stared with ominous frown,
He'd never seen such a man before!

"Say! what want you, wand'rer here?" he cried.
"Behold thy Christ!" the wanderer said;
"Who, once, for thy sins was crucified!"
But the scornful usher shook his head,
Found him a seat in the corner, dim;
And placed the unwelcome stranger there;
The worshipers frowned and stared at Him,
Then drew away with a haughty air.

"Father, forgive them!" the stranger prayed;
"Their worship is cold—they know not Thee!
From the poor, despised they shrink, afraid;
In their hearts they know not Me!"
Slowly He faded away in air;
The worshipers wondered where He went,
And glanced tow'rd the empty cushion, there,
Then straightway forgot the incident.

He wandered on thro' the busy street,
Still on 'mong the falling flakes of snow,
Nor crushed 'neath the tread of sandaled feet,
And noticed not by the human flow.
Another church, with its brilliant glare,
The wand'rer greets, from another clime,
While clear-toned bells to the list'ning air,
Are ringing their merry Christmas chime.

"I will enter here," the Wanderer said,
"It must be filled with a love and cheer;
Coldness and hate must surely have fled—
They worship the Son and Father, here."
He entered within the doorway wide,
But was stopped beside the inner door,
By an usher, with disdainful pride.
Who'd only scorn for the clothes He wore.

"Is Thy worship, too, an empty show;
Lip-service all that is offered Me?"
"Who art thou, wanderer?" "Wouldst thou know?
"I am Him," he said, "of Galilee."
The usher grasped at His garment's fold,
And, 'neath the light of an entry lamp,
Cried, as he thrust Him into the cold:
"This is no place for the common tramp."

From church to church went, this Christmas night,
The "Son of Man," but they knew Him not;
And turned Him forth from the cheerful light,
As for admittance he vainly sought.
"I'll depart," He said, "away from Earth!
I've come too soon by a thousand years!
False pride—as of old— prevents my birth;
Humanity's blind with hate—and tears!"

He cast his glance down an alley-way,
Tow'rd the dull rays of a smoky lamp
That swung in the wind and seemed to say:
"Come! We welcome here the 'common' tramp."
The stranger said: "I will enter here;
At last, perchance, I have found a place
Where God's great spirit is ever near,
And they welcome all of every race."

He entered the door and someone said:
"Welcome, Brother!" with extended hand;
And then to their midst the Wand'rer led,
And sate Him down with the mission band.
There were those whose clothing, worn and stained,
Clung to their forms with an uncouth air;
But the grace of God their hearts had gained,
When they welcomed Him who entered there.

HOME LIES THE OTHER SIDE.

Tomorrow I have wastes of sea to ride,
Long wastes, beneath the blue and boundless dome,
And wild the wind and white the breakers comb,
But yet I fear not shoal or swelling tide—
Home lies the other side!
Some other morrow I shall sail a tide
Vaster and darker, but in farther skies,
Through breaking mists what shining heights may rise,
And in great quietness I shall abide
With home the other side!

A SPIRIT MESSAGE.

In Answer to a Question in a Sealed Letter.

To the Editor:—Something like five years ago through myself as a writing medium, I got several messages from a number of my friends who had passed over, among them some from B. W. Bartholomew, an adult friend of mine when I was a boy in Vermont.

For the past few years I have received no communications from "over yonder," until the 14th inst. On that day Dr. H. B. Cole, a prominent Spiritualist and physician of this city; came into my office and handed to me a plain sealed envelope, and said that it contained some questions, which he was informed by a medium that through me he could obtain an answer, if I would sit that evening. I took the envelope, and in the evening sat alone in my office, and holding the sealed envelope in my left hand and writing with my right hand, wrote as I was impressed an answer to Dr. Cole's question. I enclose the questions and answer; also letter from him.

I knew nothing whatever about the questions, their substance, by whom asked, to whom directed or anything else, until after Dr. Cole came into my office the next morning, and in my presence tore open the sealed envelope.

This answer seems to open up an important line of thought, and in some respects entirely new to me. At all events I thought it of sufficient importance to send to you.

CARL C. POPE.

Black River Falls, Wis.

Answer to Dr. H. B. Cole's Sealed Questions.

"Mr. Bartholowew, when does individual life begin? How does it progress. H. B. COLE."

This grand universe in which we live is a wonderful creation, and Infinite Power empraces it all, while, in turn, it constitutes Infinite Power, and the individualized soul is the highest manifestation of Infinite Power.

The soul has been the insoluble mystery of centuries, and is likely to remain so for untold centuries to come. You have noticed what we have all observed that the mental characteristics of children on earth in most cases, are unlike those of their parents. Their automatic peculiarities will resemble those of their parents, but their soul life is strikingly dissimilar. This is because the soul exists entirely superior to, and independent of, the parents.

At birth Infinite Power breathes into the body of the child a living soul, and that soul commences its career of immortality. Its grand potentialities are boundless, and the term of its existence eternal. What seems to be death is but the passing from the trials and experiences of earthly life to the great beyond. Why, in the bright lexicon of the universe there is no such word as death! At birth the living soul enters the body and enlists for all eternity. Its march is onward, and the significance of our individual life is what we make it. The greater our love for our fellows, the broader and more charitable our conduct, the greater will be our own happiness.

Man should not make light of his earthly life or waste its grand opportunities. That life is of the greatest importance. In that life the living soul commences its career of individualization; and if the opportunities are produced as they should be, and the foundation for eternal progress securely laid, the heavenly superstructure of Love and Charity will follow over yonder.

Earth life is not a wilderness of woe, it is not an unmeaning struggle. It is rather, the glorious beginning of the individual life of soul. Don't waste the precious time given you to prepare for the duties which await you beyond the grave!

Heaven is a condition—not a locality, and the soul may be as happy on earth, as in the various stages of its after life, if it deserves so to be. Yes, heaven is a condition, and not a place, and if your sight was clear enough you could now see troops of angels hovering around you and inspiring you to write. The beautiful earth is the abode of the discarnate soul; and the angels communicate with the earthly pilgrims, not with the coarse speech of the body, but with the sweet language of impressions.

Make the best of the opportunities of earthly life. Conceive, as the truth is, that your individual soul is immortal, and is now experiencing the realities of the first stage of its existence. Appreciate the great truth that your soul is what it makes itself, and resolve to reach the highest plane of excellence possible, and with these high ideals make up your life record, and all will be well."

"BARTHOLOMEW."

Hon. C. C. Pope, Black River Falls, Wis.—Dear Sir:— Having been investigating along several lines of thought for awhile, I was impressed, August 14, to ask a question of one of our spirit friends, seal the same, and give to you for an answer. We had not had any conversation for some time, and never in this line, of thought. You did not know the question, or to whom I applied.

H. B. COLE.

Black River Falls, Wis.

DON'T GRUMBLE.

I know it's hard to be cheerful
When everything goes dead wrong,
And to smile when you say, "Good morning"
To some fortunate one in "life's" throng.
But think of some poor creature
Who a heavier burden bears,
How much better off you are than he!
Even with all your cares—
Don't think you're the only "lemon,"
Or that your lot's the worst,
But start each day by thinking
Of something pleasant first.

The Passing of a Soul to Spirit Life.

A True Story, as Told by the Ship's Physician, and Which Illustrates the Beauty and Poetic Grandeur of the Final Change That Projects the Soul Into a Higher Sphere of Existence, and Exhibits the Great Interest the Secular Press Is Taking in Occult Matters.

Doctors, as a rule, do not entertain superstitious beliefs, nor are they disposed to be susceptible to the influence of occult things, and the following experience of a ship's doctor is not related with the object of proving the rule by the exception.

The business of the doctor of medicine deals with the material and the physical, the psychical, the supernatural, the hyperphysical, and the divine particula aurae being left to the metaphysicians, thaumaturgists, sky pilots and "heap big medicine" men.

This story was told me in such intensely earnest sincerity that, even had I been inclined to be skeptical, I could not have helped being convinced of the narrator's honest belief in its actuality.

I am quite under the conviction that the doctor saw the strange manifestation just as it was described to me, and I do not in any way feel that it is my prerogative to raise a question of the why and the how.

The almost equally mysterious light and its movements witnessed by the captain, the mates and the lookout, or officer of the deck, corroborate and confirm the genuineness of the visitation witnessed by the doctor beyond peradventure.

Dr. W. T. S. O'Hara, formerly on one of the ships of the White Star Line, tells, as nearly as I can remember the details, this story:

"When I was ship's doctor aboard the Alsatria we had, on a trip out of Yokohama, a very beautiful little girl of 12 years who had been orphaned in the East and was returning with us alone to friends and relatives at home.

"She was so bright and intelligent and was such a jolly, good-natured lassie that I was naturally attracted to her. The friendship being mutual, we were soon quite attached to each other, spending much of the day together on deck and about the ship, for she was possessed of a woman's curiosity and was eager to investigate the mysteries of the great vessel, from stoke and engine-room to crow's nest. During these tours of inspection and rompings about she readily made warm friends of all the crew, and especially of the commanding officers.

Girl Droops Under Heat.

"As we ran down the coast it became evident that the increasing heat of the climate did not agree with her, and she soon grew listless, losing interest in the sea and the ship and her playfellows, although she seemed to cling closer and closer to me as her spirits relaxed and her physique gradually succumbed to the depressing effect of the heat.

"When we were well down into the China Sea she became very ill and was confined to her stateroom. In a few days the trouble developed in a severe attack of tropical fever.

"There being little other illness aboard, I was able to give most of my time to her, and, toward the last, except when called to some other incidental duty for the moment, remained at her side almost night and day, doing all in my power, both as doctor and friend, for her relief and comfort.

"All my doctoring and care, however, seemed of no avail against the consuming fever that was burning out her vitality, and by the time we had swung down into the Indian Ocean I had reluctantly abandoned hope of her recovery.

"The captain and other officers, as well as the crew, had shown an unusual and heartfelt interest in her fight for life, and they often came to sit beside her, expressing, in their sailor-like way, their sympathy, and doing the best they could in the kindliness of their hearts to keep her spirits rallied to the greatest degree of resistance, so that it was with a very real sorrow and more than a suspicion of wet eyes that they heard me as I reported to the captain one evening that the turning point for her would come that night, and that the chances were all against the probabilities that she would be able to live for the morning.

"Maugre the landsman's belief in the hardened nature of the sailor, he has, nevertheless, a heart tender as a woman's, and a kindly disposition that only those who have lived with him in the open can fully understand and appreciate.

"And that night it was demonstrated, for, far into the night, as I passed the smoking-room on my way to the locker for medicines I saw the ship's officers there in a little group—silent, waiting. Those big, rough, weather-seasoned fellows were "on watch," tarrying to learn the issue of life and death that struggled desperately in the stateroom of their little friend near by.

Draws Near to Death.

"As the fire of the fever burned higher, the fire of her life burned down to the smoldering, darkening embers. The unequal contest was nearing the finale. As the flushed face among the pillows turned for a last pitifully appealing look into mine, the fever-bright eyes closed, the hand that held mine gave a feeble, parting pressure, the tremor of a sigh escaped her and she lay very quiet and still. The restlessness of delirium had gone and nature relaxed into the submissive resignation to the inevitable that told me I had lost my battle with death.

"The pulse still moved in fluttering beats, the respiration continued, weak and faint; the muscles quivered fitfully, the pretty lips trembled now and then and the facial expression changed from one indicative of weakness and suffering to repose and calm—the restful calm that follows the wearing storm.

"Now and again it seemed that she might be trying to speak aloud, but the working of her dissolving mentality was the communion of her soul with angels rather than of the mind with men.

"As I sat, heavy-eyed, in the darkened chamber awaiting the approaching transition from life to death, the tears came, and through the misty haze I saw again another sweet-faced little girl lying pale and quiet on a deathbed away back in the gone days of my boyhood when I had watched beside my sister as she passed on into the shadows of the great afterwhile, and in the halo of that vision the iron of the physician dissolved in the heart of the man, and I silently sobbed out the pain that was divided between the sad reverie and the nearing approach to the parting of the ways with the dear little friend beside me.

"The storm that crashed and rolled out over the sea, with its glare of lightning and peals of thunder, was wilder and more expressive, but no more intense and real than the one suppressed within me as I watched the signs of death surely stealing over my little companion.

"Unconsciously raising my eyes from the bed I became aware of a feeling, a sub-conscious sensation of the presence of a something in the room that I did not see—an uncanny something I could not understand.

"Intuitively, I think, it came to me that it must be the presence of death, and instinctively, almost mechanically, I closed the pressure of my fingers on the pulse, but I found that they still beat softly beneath the touch.

Angel Light on Face.

"As I looked again at the face the room grew lighter, slowly, almost imperceptibly, with a light that was weirdly luminous, and yet not altogether like the birth of a dawn of a day at sea; but I knew that it was not near the morning, nor could such a light be possible with the low-hanging, black clouds of the tempest without that closed about us with an impenetrable wall of darkness, and, wondering, yet not altogether surprised, I waited, watching.

"Gradually the light increased until the room was as bright as the light of a full-grown dawn, and then I became conscious of a change; a change that was the most marvelous thing I ever witnessed.

"Slowly the light seemed to creep from out the corners of the room and gather in flickering, uncertain waves of blue and white and gold directly over the body of the child—a tremulous, lambent ghost-light, fading, brightening, dissolving, quickening, falling, rising, reminding me, as I think of it now, of the quavering notes of soft, low music coming over the tumbling water out of the distance.

"A moment it remained and then disappeared, leaving the room in darkness, save for the shaded light of the night lamp. The pulse still beat, the heart moved in fluttering, pulsing throbs, the face trembled its childish smile and the lips continued muttering their unspoken messages.

"The storm lulled and in the hush I waited, wondering, but with no thought of fear. The lips moved apart, the face brightened, her eyes looked out at me questioningly and, bending my head low, I caught the words of her murmuring voice—

"'Oh—look! How beautiful'—and her fingers closed over mine as she spoke.

"She turned her eyes upward, and, looking, I saw, close to the ceiling, straight over her head, a blurred, misty, luminous globe, like a distant light diffused and glowing in a heavy fog. This grew, slowly, almost imperceptibly, as before, until it hung a quivering sphere of bluish-white wavy light. It was more nearly like the St. Elmo's fire that clings about the ends of the spars in a heavy electrical storm than anything else I can compare it to.

"'See!' she whispered, 'O—see!'

"Slowly, so slowly that I did not notice it at first, the ball of light descended until it seemed to envelop her face and hair, giving the peaceful, pleased look on her face a glory and radiance such as we think of the angels having—the sweetest and most heavenly vision I ever saw or ever expect to see.

Joins Spirit of Her Mother.

"As it lay for a moment wavering about her pillow I felt her hand grow tense in mine, her body trembled lightly and she made a feeble effort to raise her head as she cried out falteringly:

"'Oh, mamma! mamma! I see—the way—and it's—all bright—and shining!'

"And as the voice died in a low whisper the light rose rapidly, dissolving and disappearing as it reached the ceiling; the curly head lay quietly back among the pillows; there was the faintest breath of a sigh, a nervous flutter of the muscles, the fingers of the hand relaxed, the pulse was lost and she lay very still and white as I knelt beside her couch, alone with death.

"I placed her hands across her breast, and, mechanically again, I looked at my watch; it was 3:30 o'clock. As I arose to my feet I heard the door open and the captain entered, followed by the first and second mates and two other officers. The captain stepped to one side of the bed and placed his hand on the child's forehead, then, turning to me, he said:

"'I thought so!' And then he added: 'Doctor, I don't believe in ghosts and spirits and that sort of thing, and I don't think there are any of us here who do, but these men and myself have just seen something that was very queer; and it was so real and plain that there is no mistaking that we did see it.

"'There was a ball of blue fire,' he continued, 'just like the St. Elmo's fire in a thunderstorm, that appeared right over our heads in the smoking-room, and when we looked at it the thing floated straight across the room to the door. There it hung for a second, turned in this direction and disappeared. When it had gone I said right away, 'Boys, that little girl of ours is dead!'"

"After sending for the stewardess to care for the body I put on my sou'wester and went on deck and up to the bridge. I was worn and nervous with the long vigil in the sickroom, where it was always hot and stuffy, and I wanted to get out and breathe some cool, fresh air, regardless of the storm and the spray and the rain.

Luminous Pilot to the Beyond.

"As I reached the bridge, the third mate, who was on watch, came to me, and, before I had time to speak or to tell him of what had hapened below, and quickly and with an air of suppressed excitement:

"'Say, Doc, are you superstitious?'

"I assured him that I was immune, not being altogether certain at the time, however, whether I really was or not.

"'Well,' he continued, 'neither am I. At least I wouldn't want to be accused of it; but I just saw something that has set me thinking quite sharp.

"'About half an hour ago, I should say, I stood watching the play of the lightning balls around the forepeak. There were several others, but this was the biggest—the biggest that I ever saw. As I looked it began to drop—followed the mast right down to the deck and disappeared.

"'I thought at first that it must be an optical illusion, so I rubbed my eyes and looked again to the peak, but the light was gone. Now, I don't believe in signs and omens a little bit, but I'll admit I did about half wonder for a while if that was a forewarning that we were to go to the bottom in something of the same style as that ball of fire had done.

"'Well, then, while I stood there, still wondering, that ball of fire seemed to come right out of the deck, rise up along the mast and settle around the forepeak again.

"'Queer, though, but it only hung there a moment, and then it drifted right up into the clouds and disappeared. Strangest thing I ever saw! Can you offer any explanation for such a queer freak? I can't.'

"Yes—I could—and—I couldn't!

"I told him then in detail of the experiences that I had had below, just as I have told it to you.

"He heard me through, rested his chin in his hand a moment and then said simply:

"'Oh, was that it! I wish that I had known it at the time!' and walked away to the binnacle.

"I did not ask him why he would like to have known, but I wondered; just as I have often wondered about the weird and fascinating thing I saw at the bedside of the dying child."—Richard Maxwell Winans, in the Chicago Record Herald.

SOME OTHER DAY.

There are wonderful things we are going to do
Some other day;
And harbors we hope to drift into,
Some other day.
With folded hands and oars that trail,
We watch and wait for a favoring gale
To fill the folds of an idle sail,
Some other day.

We know we must toil if ever we win,
Some other day;
But we say to ourselves, There's time to begin
Some other day;
And so, deferring, we loiter on,
Until at last we find withdrawn
The strength of hope we leaned upon,
Some other day.

And when we are old and our race is run,
Some other day,
We fret for the things that might have been done
Some other day;
We trace the path that leads us where
The beckoning hand of grim despair
Leads us yonder out of the here,
Some other day.

WHY DO CHRISTIANS REJECT SPIRITUALISM?

"Spiritualism, the Direct Antithesis of a Dreary Materialism, Is the Coming Religion of the World—It Is Religion Itself—Trim Your Lamp, Reader, and Make Ready."

Among the mysteries of this life is the fact—the strange psychic fact—that while Christians, and especially the missionary Christians of India, and the isles of the Ocean, have been preaching for centuries their belief in a future life—faith in a conscious immortal life— yet when Spiritualism came in its mighty manifestations demonstrating the reality, the tremendous reality of that future life which they had so long preached, they rejected it—positively rejected it.

Think of it, when their belief in a future life was positively proven to be a fact by present-day spiritual phenomena, these religious churchmen and sectarists generally pronounced the phenomena to be all fraud, or the works of the devil, and went on their way in spiritual blindness.

Why was, why IS, this? The reason is plain enough to those who read and think deeply and wisely. The communicating spirits from the unseen did not in Rochester, New York, where the modern phenomena first appeared, teach (and they do not to-day) the orthodox doctrines of the churches, such as a war in heaven, the devil in Eden in the form of a serpent and the fall of man thereby, a tri-personal or three-headed trinity, the atoning blood of the Lord Jesus, the resurrection of the body, a future general judgment followed by the endless hell torments of the "heathen" and a great majority of the so-called Christian and various nations of the world.

If the spirits from the spirit world had taught these irrational dogmas, confirming the irrational doctrines, creeds, and confessions of faith of the churches, Roman Catholics and Protestant sects alike, would have become hastily, if not madly enthusiastic over the heaven-sent teachings of these blessed spirits. But, alas! intelligent spirits and angels from the invisible realms know nothing of a war in heaven—nothing of three equal Gods in the God-head—nothing any fall in Eden, nor any substitutional blood-atonement, nor a future general judgment, nor of any angry, unreconciled God, nor of any eternal torments in hell-fire!

Spirits taught, and still teach, that thousands of years before Eden—be that fact or fiction—man was progressing up the steeps from savage barbarism to civilization; that God is One and never was, nor is, angry; that Jesus Christ stood upon the pinnacle of Judaistic Spiritualism, a royal-souled Rabbi and sensitive, dying a martyr to the sublime truths he taught; that the physical body raised only in gases and the growing grasses; that punishment in the line of cause and effect is disciplinary and remedial, and that love, brotherhood and immortality constitute the graces and glories of man's unfoldment through the ceaseless cycles of eternities.

The world has had many saviors, and among them Krishna, Buddha, and Jesus of Nazareth. There is, in my opinion, no church dogma to which sectarists cling with such persisting tenacity as the atonement, the "precious atoning blood," the substitutional bearing of our sins by Jesus Christ upon the Cross of Calvary; that is to say, in plain English, he died for and bore our sins before we had personally sinned. And if we do not believe that this blood atoning-righteousness will be imputed, or through faith transferred to us (thus virtually making righteousness a commercial commodity), we are to suffer eternal punishment in hell; in other words, we are to be saved through the "merits" of the Lord Jesus Christ. None of that for me! I ask for no heaven that I have not honestly earned, and I should be morally ashamed to walk the streets of any New Jerusalem, whatever that might be, upon the merits of somebody else.

I am told that I must believe this creed in order to be saved, but there can be no conscientious belief without evidence, and if I have no proof, no evidence of the truth of this church doctrine. Am I still told by Churchmen that I must believe in this sacrificial blood of the Lord Jesus, or be ruined, lost, damned? Very well, then I'll be damned, considering it infinitely nobler to be honestly damned for honest belief than to be hypocritically and vicariously saved as a saint through fear and false teachings.

And further, if I am damned, if I am sent to hell on some great hereafter judgment day, I shall be certain of such splendid company as Humboldt, Tyndall, Huxley, Whitman, Shelley, Hugo, Dickens, Emerson, Longfellow, Holmes, Garrison, Bancrott, Thomas Jefferson, President Lincoln, and other great and grand souls, constituting an array of moral magnificence, scholarship and culture that would almost excite the envy of angels. Such a hell with such illustrious and brilliant companions would be paradise par excellence, while a heaven of saints who had wriggled within the pearly gates through the "atoning blood" of innocence—that is to say, through the merits of another, could only be enjoyed by poor, beggarly, churchianic vampires.

The inspired of old taught thus: "Work out your own salvation." "Run that ye may obtain; press forward towards the mark of the prize of the high calling." All the "blessedness of peace and happiness shall be thine" said John of Apostolic and Patmos memory, "when thou art worthy, when thou art worthy."

Spiritualism, the direct antithesis of a dreary materialism, is the coming religion of the world. It is religion itself. Trim your lamp, reader, and make ready.

MOST EXTRAORDINARY.

Saved from a Rattlesnake by a Spirit.

To be frank [as set forth in the New York Herald], I cannot give you the exact date, but it was in May, 1888. My father was a catechist or missionary among the Indians in British Guiana, South America. He had a first cousin that he had not seen for years, as he was a proprietor of a cocoa and sugar estate in another part of the country. This cousin, James Pallidore, came and spent two weeks with us, as the distance is four days' journey. At the expiration of the time he left us at the mission to go and spend three or four days with an old friend of theirs, "Tony" Calvin, who was also a proprietor, about one day from the mission.

The day after he left us, about five P. M. Thursday, I went out in the woods to shoot pigeons. As I aimed at the pigeon, just about to fire, I heard someone break a piece of stick near me. I looked around, fancying it was Thomson, my opponent, as he always tried to outdo me and generally scare the game away. I saw no one. I looked up again to have my shot again at the pigeon. I distinctly heard the voice of my cousin, which said, "Bobby, look out!" As I looked down I distinctly saw my cousin smiling and pointing to the ground. When I looked at the spot there lay an infernal rattlesnake, just about to jump at me.

The next day, Friday, at noon, I was sitting under a grape tree, as it is the coolest place to be at noon. I distinctly saw him pass me and go into the kitchen, which was near by. I got up and went after him, but did not see anyone. About twenty minutes to four P. M. I went into our garden to plant some roses and geraniums. We have a lot of four o'clock flowers, both red and yellow. After planting them I stood up by a four o'clock tree to see them open exactly at four. My father, mother and sisters were all sitting in the gallery, talking and looking down at me in the garden, as the house was on a fifteen-foot pillar. They suddenly laughed at something that interested them.

As I looked up I saw my cousin leaning on the banister on the right side of my father looking at me. I told my father and mother of these incidents, but they only laughed at me and said that he had left here only about twenty-four hours ago; that he was healthy and strong and not ailing in the least. We went to bed as usual at ten P. M. About half-past eleven P. M. the rain began to drizzle, and I heard someone coming in from the train. I heard a person run up the stoop, turn the knob and come into the house. I sat up in bed and heard someone walking up and down the parlor. I lay down again with my eyes half shut. The light was burning fairly bright, not too dim. I heard the knob turn, the knob of the door that opened into the bedroom. There he appeared, as natural as could be. I lay still. He looked around as if searching for something. There was a hammock that my father used occasionally hanging in this room. He went into it and swung himself for a long while. Finally he came out and sat near my head.

From about half-past three to four P. M. I heard one distinct, clear, straight whistle outside, which lasted longer than any human breath can carry. Suddenly he got up and went away. Saturday afternoon about four o'clock we were surprised to see those men that took him to his friend's place, where he intended to spend three or four days. On inquiring what was the matter, we were informed that he died at eleven o'clock Friday night from apoplexy, after bidding good-night to the people and in the best of health. About eleven P. M. two sons of this friend sleeping in the next room heard something fall with a continual shaking noise. They went and aroused their father, breaking into his room, and in a few minutes he expired. Multi-Millionaire Hunts for Those Who Need Help.

A dispatch from Webster City, Ia., says: "Abraham Slimmer, a multi-millionaire and Iowa's most noted philanthropist, has adopted a unique plan of distributing alms. He is driving over the State personally looking for those who need help and giving it to whomsoever he finds in need of it. In this way he proposes to spend the $5,000,000 which he still possesses.

"I shall travel all over Iowa, giving away money as I go," he said today. "Then I may go into another State. I intend to spend all my money before I die, giving it to those who need it."

No account is kept of his charities. He personally investigates every case that comes to his notice. The old man takes special delight in the novel method he has hit upon of getting rid of his money.

"I have given little," says Mr. Slimmer when asked the significance of his rambles about the State. "What does it matter to a man who has forty loaves. He can actually eat but half a loaf. If he gives away only two or three, tell me what credit he is to have for so giving. A dollar given by a man who has but one dollar is worth more than a Rockefeller million.

"I give because I love to give. I have enough left to eat, to wear, and enough to pay my traveling expenses. What more do I want? It is a relief to be relieved from the weight of gold that imposes a consequent care. I see others benefited, while I am not deprived of what I need."

When we have but the will to do it, that very moment will justice be done; that very instant the tyrants of the earth shall bite the dust!—Peter Kropotkin.

The Infliction of Punishment.

"Wild Bill, the notorious cowboy, criminal, in giving his first experience in life beyond the tomb, says that he wandered about ten years, as near as he could tell, in a dark, rough country, before a ray of light appeared. It was his mother's hand that held the beacon, the rays of which seemed to shine on each dark deed of his life, and illumined a path for recompense that must be made, as near as may be, for every wrong committed."

In walking from the postoffice one pleasant morning, I passed the schoolhouse where some forty or fifty children were in attendance at school. My thoughts turned in that direction. "What were they there for?" And how were they being treated?

I remembered my own childhod days, when the rod in the school-room was considered by many a necessity in the education of every child there; not only a necessity in the school-room but also a necessity for obedience around the family hearth. But was the rod really a necessity in either case? I was acquainted with families where the rod, as a means of discipline in the household, was considered a disgrace, and consequently never used, yet the children brought up under this condition, were exemplary in conduct and the pride of their friends.

Also I remembered how pleasant were schools of my youth wherein the use of the rod was ignored entirely, not only as a useless appendage, but rather as a criminal procedure, yet discipline in those schools was all teachers and parents could require. And while I walked leisurely homeward I pondered on these things and wondered deeply in my heart: "Has Nature, or the God of Nature, ordained punishment in any case except as an effect, as a means of reform?"

I had by this time relapsed into the negative mood, and heard a soft voice say: "It is not man's province to punish." And by implication, man being part of God, it was not the province of the God-power to punish. What we call "God's punishment is but the reaping of what we have sown, or the effect of cause.

It is hard to run counter to public opinion, yet there are marks by the wayside still pointing onward and upward, indicating in sweet whispers, that we should still strive to move on to the place where more beautiful flowers grow.

It is sad to see punishment inflicted either on man or beast.

It is debasing to the moral instinct to suffer punishment of any kind as we understand punishment to-day; and more debasing to inflict punishment than to suffer its infliction.

How parents can administer severe chastisements to tender and confiding children, or to patient domestic animals, is more than I can understand. To say it is a duty we owe our children to punish them for disobedience is a great mistake. Our duty is to lead, both men and brutes, and not attempt to drive them into the condition we wish them to act from.

Man is a spirit here to-day as much as he ever shall be, and is entitled to the same just encouragement, the same precepts and examples here on this plane of life as shall be meted out to him "over there," where the rod or the calaboose is not known as an institution of correction. At least such is my information from what purports to be my spirit friends, and my intuitions say "Amen."

The philosophy of unfoldment is not through punishments, but rather through inhalations of the finer essences of spirit, which must be supplied to each thirsting soul as conditions may require, as the careful and wise mother would feed her children.

Men of deepest crime may be at a moment's notice, hurled to life beyond the tomb; but is there a gibbet there, or rack of torture that there may be punished for misdeeds committed while in earth life? I can find nothing of the kind, but rather a condition of darkness as a result perhaps, of prenatal perversions and ignorance. Yet the spirit must move, and not knowing which way to go, wanders perhaps for years and years, yet soul evolution is at work all these lonely days, and at sometime when this dark and wandering spirit has seemingly exhausted its last effort to find a resting place, and has lain down, hoping to die, if die it could, at that moment the long smouldering fires of evolution burst into feeble flame, and a faint light, as a beacon ahead, illumes the more interior eye The search after this is to reach this light and to inhale its beams.

The spirit slowly moves away from this dark and lonely place to, in time, find himself on a plane of light and beauty.

Wild Bill, the notorious cowboy criminal, in giving his first experience in life beyond the tomb, says that he wandered about ten years, as near as he could tell, in a dark, rough country, before a ray of light appeared. It was his mother's hand that held the beacon, the rays of which seemed to shine on each dark deed of his life, and illumined a path for recompense that must be made, as near as may be, for every wrong committed.

Such was Wild Bill's punishment. At first a wilderness of darkness was his abode, and then, when the light first appeared, the work of amendment began, nor ceased until "the last farthing was paid." At least as far as Wild Bill was able to pay it.

We do not punish suicides here; man-made laws cannot reach them; but "over there" the suicide comes under the law of adjustment the same as other people. He must seek the harmonies of Nature from which he had strayed a vast distance, in that he had committed the murder of his own body.

B. P. Randolph, when he awoke in spirit realms found himself a subject of inharmony, yet his spirituality was not eclipsed by darkness as in the case of Wild Bill, but was keen to perceive at once. His condition gave him great sorrow and remorse of conscience. But Randolph's mother came to her son's rescue, and placing her hands on his head, said to him: "Son, do not grieve so, nor look upon thyself as wholly to blame in this matter. It is I who am more to blame for your present condition—one of the effects of which is the destruction of your own body, than you are. Your condition was inherited, my son."

Just then the father came, and placing a hand on each the mother's and the son's head, said to them: "Do not grieve so over this affair; I am more to blame through transmission than either of you." Yet there being no guilt or intended crime in the case, the effects of previous inharmonies had to be effaced as far as possible.

Such it is with the murderer, the robber, the thief, the libertine; each is brought face to face with the real condition of his life from which he must turn and seek to efface the effects growing out of such condition.

Nor should we be hasty to condemn—"neither do I condemn thee"—knowing the force heredity has in shaping our lives.

The fact that thousands of babes and larger children born under perverse conditions, reach the summerland daily, does not do away with the requirements of the law of harmonious unfoldment.

Curious to know the vocation or modes of pastime in life beyond the tomb, I inquired of my sister Jane what employment she had, or how she passed the time in spirit life? Her reply was:

"In earth life I loved children dearly, but did not remain there long enough to have close relationship with such, consequently when I attained here what you would call a settled condition; like a fish out of water, I could not be still, and was told by my friends, "Now is the time to indulge your love for children." I accepted the suggestion at once, and prepared to care for, as far as I was able, the little waifs, babes and some larger children that come daily from earth. I formed what you would call a 'kindergarten,' grouped my pupils in classes, and fed them on what might be called heavenly manna, or dews of Eden, the food being prepared not only to nourish the infant body, but also to counteract earth's perversions. This preparation of food was supplemented by precept and example and thought suggestion. These forces, when applied to the budding mind, had wonderful effect in stimulating the children's aspirations to reach the plane of noble manhood and womanhood.

Many times since then have I attempted to look over the school ground, and about the premises to see if in such school there were forms of punishment, but at each attempt I felt a repelling force which seemed to say "Nothing but purity can be here."

"Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth." Few people seem to understand the application of this prayer, but when rightly understood, "as in heaven, so on earth," seems clearly to support the contention of this letter, that in our daily dealings with each other we are far from heaven's rules of action, and yet we seem unwilling to learn.

It will not do to say: "There are laws for our guidance on earth, and other laws for our guidance beyond the tomb." Nature's laws are eternal, and applicable alike in every part of the universe. Soul unfoldment is not only a requirement of earth life, but is a requirement of the future life as well, consequently there is great need that we seek to understand this law of unfoldment more clearly, and to harmonize more closely our modes of life with heaven's laws, the only faith that leads to justice.

It seems strange to me to-day, and has seemed thus strange for many years, that people who are blessed with power to see within the veil should omit to detail the sweet order of life prevailing there? They saw no gibbets there to enforce obedience to heaven's law, but rather the erring, were required to make amends, as far as possible, for all wrong they may have ever committed. And I venture the further claim that among all these keen visionists not one of them has ever observed the least approach to corporal punishment in the training of children in spirit life; but rather the mode of training adopted by Sister Jane in her Kindergarten prevails throughout that world. And "as in heaven," so it should be "on earth."

Vicksburg Camp, Mich.

The closing of the Vicksburg Camp is at hand, and is to be regretted.

The work this year has been very beneficial, and has been a stepping stone to the higher philosophy to many who have never listened to our beautiful teachings before.

Those who have listened to the grand lectures delivered by Miss Elizabeth Harlow, know how impossible it is to describe their grandeur and beauty. The subject for her addresses were taken from the audience and dwelt on some of the following subjects: "What is life? Why live, and its purpose." "Where does individual life begin?" and on Wednesday, Woman's Day, the subject was, "What is Woman?"

Some author has said: "Men write poetry, women live it."

Living true to the soul is what lifts us, and makes us better and grander men and women. We have always existed as a soul, but not as a central, individualized identity.

For the last days of camp we have with us that noble character whom we have all grown to greatly respect, Harrison D. Barrett. He, too, is well known and needs no words from my pen to tell your readers of the noble work he is doing for us. Would that the Spiritualists might understand the full meaning of their religion and then live it.

Religion is nothing if we do not live it; soul life is what the world is needing.

"Think truly and thy thought
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and thy word
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed."

Thus it is with higher thought, better resolutions and a desire to come another year the many friends shake hands and bid one another "God speed."

Science of the Soul.

Solving the Riddle of the Soul's Origin and Destiny.

In the issue of June 22, 1907, the address of G. W. Lewis, A. M., on the "Science of the Soul" was of great interest to me. The citations very plainly mark steps in scientific research and results; also that generation after generation labored to solve the soul's origin and destiny, but were successful in part only.

I have been taught by spirits of high degree on "Soul Science" and kindred subjects for many years, by seeing them and hearing their voices when spiritually attuned to so high a degree of corresponding vibrations which is "being in tune with the Infinite," and I am sorry to say we are not so attuned much of the time, because of the more worldly claims on our minds and strength interfering.

This is Sunday, August 4, 1907. I was reading, and after a time picked up the paper above referred to and began to read: "About four hundred and sixty years before Christ, Democritus, an eminent Greek philosopher of the New Eclectic School, was born in Abdara, Thrace," when a light—a great spiritual illumination—came over me like a sunburst through a hazy atmosphere, and before me stood a group of those Grecian philosophers and ancient spirits. The foremost of them addressed me as follows:

"Daughter of woman, endowed with great spiritual powers, we rejoice to be able thus to manifest ourselves, and would say, we, as mortals, in our time and turn in world's history, did what we could, as moulders of thought, for the masses of people, in our search after cosmic verities. Especially did we strive to learn what we might of creation's secrets and man's destiny. Our starting point centered in the atom. We built our theories on what, to our minds, seemed to be facts in nature; but we have long since learned where we failed, and why. We, all of us, as successors on those lines of philosophic and scientific thought, stranded on the same rock, viz.: the Divine intention and supreme government of all universal operations. We failed to discover the difference, office and power of the spirit of the cosmos and the Spirit Supreme, and therefore could not see any of those significant points of degrees. We did not know the nature and office of souls; could not grasp those eternal truths because there were gaps between our ratio of mental vibration and those on higher octaves. We did not then know that all interactivities were supremely co-ordinated, and that we cannot grasp that to which we have developed no correspondence. We therefore did not know that the terms spirit and soul were not to be used interchangeably, although they are interactive, from necessity, as entities and powers. We have long since learned, however, that spirit, soul and substance constitute the eternal trinity, comprehending all that is and can be known and seen in any realm or world.

"The soul is the mechanism through which the spirit is active, to unfold and personify the soul as an entity. The soul is also the builder of the house it resides in—the body. The body is, as on earth so in the higher world, the outer covering of the soul, built after the exact soul pattern. The brain is the instrument if the mind; it is the spirit's abode, and it acts from that center per vibratory interchange with the Universal Mind, active through the Over-Soul, or Nature's psychic mechanism. All soul germs are of compounds of eternal substance, but there is a great difference in degrees in which they are rated in Nature's statutes. Souls, without the action of the spirit upon them, could not unfold and become personified entities. Spirit is the intelligence, the life, love, etc. Perceive, now, the three in one from necessity. Spirit is ever the Father, because it incites motion, starts life and the building of forms—is supreme in its office; but, without the soul, spirit, or the Word, could not become flesh, or, in other words, could not become externalized. Souls without the action of the spirit upon them would remain dormant, and so fail to become individualized entities. Spirit and soul in turn are dependent on substance to draw upon and build from, to support the forms created and the great vibratory thought machinery. Hence, we repeat, soul and substance form the one eternal trinity from which springs all that is, and by it is created and supported.

"Before we retreat we would say that we also learned long since that creation, as it exists, is composed of many separate processes, in accord with legitimate plans, specifications of spirit and substance accurately co-ordinated, launched and propelled forward and maintained in prescribed courses, by spirits of great wisdom and executive skill, in accord with nature's laws and cosmic constitution.

"The present process of such referred-to creative plan is entering upon its last cycle—the seventh, hence the many changes in the mind and matter realms; but all work together for good in the end."

Thus one of my most pleasing experiences ended. Later another spirit appeared, saying: "We wish to answer the riddle concerning the mental faculties and conscience, intelligence of the dog, 'Are they the same in kind as those of man?' as stated under the paragraph 'Matter and the Soul' in the address referred to.

"Yes, in a certain sense and to a certain degree. The dog and man, alike, acquire their intelligence by virtue of the vibratory operations in the co-ordination of each soul to nature's soul. Spirit, you see, needs souls to act through and substance to propel this wonderful vibratory machinery, otherwise intelligence could not oscillate, sustain and improve all life and creatures in form and intelligence. Up to certain degrees in the realms marked finite, the dog and many other of the more intelligent animals, progress in the legal ratios of their vibratory co-ordinations; but there is their limit, because no further co-ordinations exist for them. They certainly are, then, more comely and intelligent than they were in their rudimentary earth stages, but animals still. It is very different with man. His soul co-ordinations are infinite. He, alone, bears the seal of divinity upon his soul and spirit, and by reason of it he goes on and on in refinement, wisdom and power. He draws his fill of love, wisdom and strength from the supreme center of all power, so that he can comprehend the mighty works of creation, read nature's laws as stamped upon the raw material, and decipher in the darting electric points, or corpuscles if you like, the cosmic spirit in its multiplicity of services, according to marks of degrees. Hence, perfect men can become and are world-builders under God, subject to supreme rule. Man is the royal child of the Supreme Spirit. He is heir to all universal wealth and has free access to all the processes of cosmic operations, as he becomes worthy by self-development, and he therefore is held responsible if he abuses these great privileges and blessings instead of using them as intended. (This answers the riddle."

IT IS THE FACE OF LOVE.

This poem is respectfully and very cordially dedicated to Bishop A. Beals, (Who is also a poet of no small inspiration) who so enthusiastically commented on the work of the author of this poem, in a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker.

As I read these sweet expressions from a soul in tune with mine,
I invite you to come with me to the Fountain Soul Divine;
Watch the smiles of heartfelt pleasure of my brothers, young and old,
Of my tender, loving sisters, filled with spiritual gold;
Sense the waves of soul-emotion, wafting, floating to and fro,
And in silent, pure devotion, we will drink the overflow.

I oft hear the angels' voices when the world seems dark and drear,
And despite the gloom around me I am filled with happy cheer,
But when I am wholly conscious of the deep and lasting good
That results from my effusions it becomes for me a food,
And a deeper inspiration seems to float along to me,
On the warmth of admiration from a
dear humanity.

There are lines of pain and anguish
all around the world to-day,
And of sorrow and despondence that
I'd gladly sweep away;
There are poor, dear souls in hunger,
I would give my soul to feed;
There are many human spirits here in very direst need;
There are human hearts now breaking with a heavy weight of woe;
And I long to be of service to such beings ere I go.

Yes, I hear the angels' voices as they echo from above,
And they fill my tuneful spirit with a radiating love,
But I also hear the voices of my kindred on this plane,
And their groans and cries undo me with the tension of the strain.
I would reach them and would strengthen every cord of sympathy,
And unlock the stores of plenty, that around them all can see.

I would pray to Mighty Goodness, as the God that can appease;
I would ask the holy angels to relieve them by degrees;
I would warn the richer brothers who could lift a burd'ning load,
That this life has some reverses all along the rocky road;
And the one who can and will not here a weary brother aid,
In the coming of the future will have each refusal paid.

I appreciate the pleasure I can give in simple ways,
And I hope to meet in spirit all my friends in future days.
I can sense them in the silence and can see, sometimes, a face,
That comes closer than the others,
and it always has its place
Down within my very being, and it lifts my soul above;
Where I linger in sweet rapture. Yes
—it is the face of Love.

WHY I THINK OF YOU.

Mattie Rector, I think of you,
And I will tell you how:
To-day a songbird sung and swung
Upon a blossomed bough;
And far and high its notes arose
Against the sunrise flame,
And all the notes of all its song,
Were tangled in your name.

Mattie Rector, I think of you,
And I will tell you why:
To-day a new rose burst in bloom
Beneath the azure sky.
It gracefully bowed and beckoned me,
'Twas leading as I came,
And all the sweets of all the bloom,
Breathed to me your sweet name.

Mattie Rector, I think of you,
I'll tell you why I do:
The birds, the rose, the earth, the air,
All gave me news of you.
The merry birds among the flowers,
Are sipping dewy nectar,
And in their songs they seem to say:
"We all love, MATTIE RECTOR.

THE PATHWAY of the Human Spirit, or the Pathway of the Spirit Traced, By Dr. J. M. Peebles.
Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Man a Creature of Circumstance.

I do not suppose that upon seeing the heading of this article many of the readers will agree with me; hence I will explain my views and give my reasons for considering man entirely and absolutely a creature of environment and circumstance.

It may appear to some that under these conditions man could not be held accountable for any deed or action, and also, that he would lose his individuality. Such, however, is not the case.

We commit no act but what, if we analyze it and ourselves, we find that there is some reason for it. Something induced us to perform that particular act in that particular way. The act may have been done instantaneously and without premeditation, or it may have been the outgrowth of careful thought and study. In either case it is the product of circumstances. In the first instance the party may have acted upon any emotion or sensation peculiar to mankind, and might thus more plainly appear as the result of circumstances, but in fact it is no more so than in the second instance.

If a man give a subject much meditation and reflection, carefully weighing all things pertaining thereto, and should finally arrive at an infallible conclusion, yet, his works are the result of circumstances.

When we see a person who, judging from all appearances, has made a dismal failure of this life, we may, and do, truthfully say, that circumstances have played havoc with that person. Yet, the influence was just as great on the greatest personage in the nation, but differently applied.

By carefully watching the habits and tendencies of one's nature, and restricting everything which is derogatory or detrimental to a moral and virtuous life it is possible to build up a character above reproach. But it, too, is the product of circumstance.

In trying to arrive at some conclusion upon a particular subject, or in outlining our personal code of ethics, we always base our reasoning upon certain principles and from these premises draw our conclusions.

It being impossible to use anything for a premise which we have not acquired by experience or research, it follows that it is some past event or idea which we are using as a basis for all present actions, and it must be conceded by all that it is impossible for us to change that which has already taken place.

Yet the events of the past must be used as a basis to judge the present and interpret the future. Every act to be performed and every conclusion to be drawn, absolutely must be based upon some past event. There must have been something to give the present incentive.

If the circumstance causing the incentive had been different, the incentive likewise would have been different; from which it would have been impossible to draw the same conclusion. While there are various circumstances which we may choose from to form our premises, we must, however, attribute to some of them the cause of every present act.

After considering for a time our undeniable dependency upon events which have transpired, we must concede that we are absolutely creatures of circumstance. Though in such concession we yield none of our independence, freedom or will power, but, to the contrary, as to what class of circumstances shall have the greater influence over us and may thus be able to more thoroughly resist all opposing forces. R. L. ABOLT.

Justice to All.

In The Progressive Thinker of August 17, an item from Parkland Camp contained statements that, if unexplained, must create false impressions.

First: "Mr. Tabor Thompson disappointed the camp on the second Sunday."

The facts are that Mr. Thompson, who is the present pastor of the Philadelphia First Association, was called upon that day to conduct the funeral service of Mrs Minnie Brown, an active and honored member of the First Association, and of Parkland Camp Association. It was quite understood and acceded to by the latter, that Mr. Thompson's first duty under the circumstances was to the members of his society, the family of the late Mrs. Brown.

Of course there was deep regret that he could not fill his engagement at camp, as he is recognized by thoughtful minds as an unusually attractive and interesting speaker, and a power for much good along the higher lines of spiritual teaching.

Second: "The meetings are largely attended." All who are interested in Parkland Camp can but wish that this were really so. But your correspondent counted heads at the afternoon session on the 4th and 11th insts, and the result was sixty-two and forty-nine; with, probably a hundred present July 28, when Mr. and Mrs. Kates closed their engagement. The Association is not yet prepared to entertain persons desirous of remaining on the grounds, as it has no hotel, or lodging house, and the audiences are composed of the association members living at Parkland during the summer months, a few who run down from Philadelphia for an outing, and the Sunday meetings—the trip costing something over eighty cents—and an occasional small party from some of the quite orthodox burgs in the vicinity.

Earnest efforts are being put forth to pay off the small remaining indebtedness on the new auditorium. The next move will probably be for a lodging house, when circulars can be sent out inviting people from distances to come and remain during the camp season.

A typographical error cloaks from recognition our very able musical director, whose name is Samuel Stretton—not Sheton.

Mr. Stretton, who has a fine voice under good control, used to be a strong attraction at church revivals, but Spiritualism has now his allegiance, and the benefit of his talents as singer and organist.

Another mistake—probably typographical—occurs in the signature to the item in question. Mr. —, not Mrs. —, F. R. Luce is the vice-president.

These mistakes are corrected in no fault-finding spirit, but only that justice may be done to all.

IS THERE A FUTURE PLAN?

That Anticipates a Still Higher Order of Sentient Beings.

Since reading Professor Larkin's article describing the measurement and weight of the corpuscle, it has occurred to me that there may be substances in existence that have neither dimension or weight. To finite mind this statement may be incomprehensible, yet, there will never be offered any proof to the contrary. We often see expressed by profound thinkers ideas disclaiming the creation of matter. Whereas, how could a thing which has not been created possibly exist? The doctrine of reincarnation teaches relatively the pre-existence of the soul. If that theory of soul derivation bears an opinion of authoritative reasoning, it is a question upon which I am extremely in doubt. The laws of Natural evolution so far as the researches of science have demonstrated, proclaim a definite purpose in all the acts of creative agency, purpose exemplified to us as the resulting accomplishment of forces; intelligently directed throughout infinite ages of the past, toward building within the confines of space, a Universe of worlds, fitting to become the abiding places of beings of life analogous to man. Since human life on our planet seems to have been the main objective of the creative power, it is reasonable to suppose that those influences which have achieved the physical out of the elemental have ordained the physical with attributes of progressive individuality that provide for the origination of the psychical embodiment of the individual soul.

Throughout all the elaborate processes of past development, elemental, physical and psychical, we perceive indisputable evidence of a purpose constantly in view. Directiveness has for infinite ages maintained control over natural origination, assembled and shaped its aggregating volumes into masses formed and fitted to sustain the coming animate life.

An introspection of these facts leads to the inquiry: Is this the ultimate future plan that anticipates a still higher order of sentient beings? Beings who may be qualified under a different plan of origination, to the paramount of life's having infinite duration and to wield the power destined by an infinite authority to those psychical agencies which have in the past created, and in the future will create.

Undoubtedly the entity of man embraces the components attributed to essentially an immortal existence. the methods to attainment being the grounds of principal dogmatic controversies.

There may be various ways of attainment, but all lead through the route of physical decadence and death.

Stripped of its physical restraints, we should presume the soul untrammeled to pursue a pathway toward the zones of those celestial regions where, called by the destinies of design or fate.

We look upon spiritual manifestation as a most substantial proof of future life, and immortality. This is doubtless, and an evident fact. But without this divine solace to our human desires of inquisition; and its beneficence to the many who are considering its truths; the way would still be open to the earnest, true follower of the natural law controlling the activities of our jurisprudence.

The Writer Thinks Reincarnation Necessary.

Don't say a word about it! It was Sunday, August 11, and the subject: "Evolution and Immortality." The Professor had skillfully and eloquently outlined the evolution of form from the amoeba to the animal; and I was listening with a great deal of pleasure to things pertaining to the soul life of the animal, when I suddenly found my ears stretched to their utmost capacity by the word reincarnation.

At once there was a flutter of excitemennt and expectancy in the lecture room, while the Professor went on to say that while it was obviously necessary for the soul of the animal to reincarnate till it had attained to the human form, yet just as soon as the human stage was reached then reincarnation ceased, and all further evolution was developed on other planes of being. To my amaze the Professor left his last statement bare and naked, without support or clothing, and the poor thing is doubtless hiding around in a pathetic way, afraid of the light and public gaze, and—well it might be!

The Professor tacitly admits that the purpose of evolution on this earth is for the development of form, through which the thinker or ego may further the purposes of the Great Architect.

Admitting this, we must carry the premise to its legitimate conclusion, and assume that the physical form is to be perfected, of necessity, mark you on this earth.

That conclusion is inevitable; and being so, how in the name of common sense is the human form perfected but by a continuation of the same method by which the animal form is perfected, viz.: rebirth or reincarnation?

The animal soul carries it through one step; the human soul takes up the task, and by the same law of reincarnation completes the work, leading us up from the savage to the Shakspeare, onward and ever onward, till the animal in the human form is subject to the Divine Man where it remains in the power of the ego to descend or not.

THE LAST WORD.

Creep in the narrow bed,
Creep, and let no more be said!
Vain thy onset! all stands fast,
Thou thyself must break at last.

Let the long contention cease!
Geese are swans and swans are geese.
Let them have it how they will!
Thou art tired; best be still.

They out-talked thee, hissed thee, tore thee?
Better men thus fared before thee;
Fired their ringing shots and passed,
Hotly charged—and sank at last.

Charge once more, then, and be dumb!
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of folly fall,
Find thy body by the wall!

Spirit Edgar A. Poe

Gives an Interesting Narrative of His Experience in Obsession, through Justin Hulburd, a Noted Medium.

Mr. Litchfield I met once more in Trinity Church. He invited me to go to his home on that day and dine with his family. I found there a beautiful wife and three children.

After dinner, as we sat in his private apartment holding conversation with each other, at the same time smoking a cigar, he made me acquainted with the fact that he had been an obsessed man—obsessed by a spirit that while living in a physical body he had shamefully wronged—so much so that spirit while living in a physical body became insane. His first desire in spirit life after recognizing where he was, was to reach me and obsess me; he accomplished it and I became his victim. Now I am making restitution to the family I had so cruelly wronged. I endeavor in all my walks in life to pay the tribute of a protector to that family. I support them from out of my ample means. My whole desire is to beautify the life that I had ruined and make her once more a happy being. Oh, Mr. Poe, my sin was a dreadful one and I have paid the penalty through a severe influence. The spirit commanded me to right the wrong as far as possible. I promised and was released. I have fulfilled that promise to the letter. That beautiful young lady that sang and played for us before dinner was my victim. My wife and she are loving sisters; her child bears my name. That beautiful little boy you saw was the result of my crime. He is a joy to my soul.

I repeated the Lord's prayer, after which he said: "It has made me happy to unburden my mind to you to-day. Edgar Allan Poe, you and I must become the dearest of friends. I feel you, too, have suffered. May we constantly live in the angels' keeping." I said amen.

One day while looking out of the window at the leafless shade trees a note was handed to me. I opened it and read the contents, thus:

"Edgar Allen Poe, dear friend, come to me right away; do not stop to lunch; you can lunch with us to-day. I have just received a note from our friend Mr. Ashburn, in which he says his wife has been acting very strange for several months past. Yesterday her actions were those of an insane person. Dear Miss Cushman, I fear she will lose her rational senses; she constantly calls for you; you will do me a great kindness if you will call to see her. It looks to me as if her sanity had left her. Little Justin has promised to go with me, and as you and he are clairvoyant, I think we can get at the root of the mater. Your friend as ever, Charlotte Cushman."

I immediately put on my coat and hat and went to the hotel. When I arrived at her room her maid informed me she had not returned from the theater yet. I walked toward the theater. I had not gone far when I discovered Miss Cushman and little Justin coming toward me. In front of the hotel she made an arrangement with one of the hack drivers to convey us to Mr. Ashburn's residence after lunch. After we had lunch she requested her maid to accompany us to Mr. Ashburn's home. We entered the carriage, the driver whipped up his horses. In less than an hour we alighted in front of Mr. Ashburn's residence. Coming down the steps we met a Miss Sarah Denvil. After I was introduced to her she said: "Dear Miss Cushman, Mrs. Ashburn is laboring under the power of some dreadful influence. I think in time it will kill her.

Miss Cushman said: "Dear Sarah, return with us and let us see what we can do."

This young lady was an actress, the beautiful Sarah Denvil that the people of New York admired so much. We ascended the steps. I rang the door-bell. Mr. Ashburn answered in person. He ushered us into the parlor. He gave an explanation to Miss Cushman of his wife's condition. Miss Cushman said, "Lead us to her."

When we entered the hall little Justin said, "Uncle Poe, look at that spirit on the stair. He is a vicious-looking old coon." I looked and there I beheld a shadow preceding us up stairs. When we entered the room where Mrs. Ashburn lay on a couch, attended by two maids, they were holding her hands in order to prevent her from tearing her hair. I noticed much of her outer garment was torn. When we were seated Justin hollered out, "You old brute, how I'd like to kick you."

Miss Cushman said, "Justin, then, you see an evil spirit."

Justin said: "He is worse than that; he's come out of hell, I think; he laughs and dances when he looks upon what he has done. Oh Charlotte, he is one of the worst old fiends I have ever seen; I wish I could cut off his leg, then he couldn't dance, and I'd get a good chance to kick him."

Miss Cushman said: "Whoever you are, I want you to leave this woman. What has she done that you should persecute her and rob her of her reasoning power?"

Just then we heard a fiendish laugh and the spirit glided over to where Justin and I sat. He said to us: "Do you see that woman lying there on that couch? At one time she was my wife. A more villainous woman never lived. After we were married she became a she devil of the worst kind. Extravagance is no name for the manner in which she lived. Her crimes were many. She wrecked my life. I took to drinking and became a drunkard. One day in a fit of passion she pushed me; I fell down stairs and broke my neck. After I had made the realization that I was in another condition of life, my first thought was to reach her and compel her to pay the penalty for the crime she had committed. Her whole desire was to marry Mr. Ashburn for his wealth. She got him for a husband, and now I have got her under my power. I will not release her until she dies a raving maniac. When her spirit has left that body then I will release her. Behold the once beautiful Kathleen Smith, whose beauty was the envy of American and European society."

I related all he said to Miss Cushman, after which I held Mr. Ashburn's hand, saying, "Dear Brother Ashburn, my heart aches for you. Oh! God, I would change it if it were possible. You have married a vampire for her beauty. My benefactor, I would lay down my life for you could I but change this condition."

Miss Cushman said: "Friends, let us pray—pray from the soul to that great Divine Power that heals and comforts all aching hearts." We prayed in silence for over an hour. The unfortunate Kathleen Ashburn was swearing all the time. She called us some of the vilest names I ever listened to. She would spit at her husband and try to reach him that she might tear his hair; her two maids would place her back on her couch when she became exhausted from swearing. After praying in silence we sang a hymn that seemed to bring on the madness worse than ever. The blood gushed from her mouth; then weakness set in and she remained motionless for some time. Her eyes commenced to roll; they had a look in them, I thought, of death; after awhile she seemed to recover her reason; she sat up and looked at us in a peculiar manner and said: "I am dying. My sins have found me out. Do not touch me. I am too low a creature for honest hands to be laid upon my body. He has accomplished his purpose, and I hope I have almost paid the debt, when my spirit"—that was all she could say; the blood gushed from her mouth again and the spirit took its flight.

Miss Cushman, little Justin and her maid returned to the hotel in the carriage that brought us to this afflicted house. I remained with Brother Ashburn to try to comfort him in his sorrow. Three days afterward they held a funeral in Trinity Church over the body of the once beautiful Kathleen Smith. In spirit life she tells me she was educated by her mother to become a fascinating girl. 'My mother's education in time made me a criminal of the worst kind. I would do anything to get possession of beautiful jewels and handsome gowns; my beauty was my ruin, and men knelt at my feet to gain a favorite smile from a criminal. I hope what you tell of me in that newspaper will be a warning to women; it is a jewel in life to be homely and have the peace of God in your soul."

Mr. Ashburn's home was on Fourth Avenue, between 13th and 14th streets. His name was William Harry Ashburn—one of the best friends I ever met in life outside of my foster parents.

On one occasion while sailing up the Hudson River on one of those beautiful steamers, I noticed a woman acting rather strange. The peculiarity about her condition was that she would sing and make faces at the passengers. Many of them passed by to look on her strange actions. I noticed on one side of her sat a young girl about 18 or 19 years of age; on the other side sat a boy of about 15 years of age. I said to myself, this must be a case of obsession. All of a sudden she struck the young girl a blow in the face with her shut-up hand. The boy grabbed that hand, saying, "Oh! mother, dear, don't do that; you have hurt dear sister. See, the blood runs down her face." The young girl cried and held her handkerchief over the wound to hide it—made by that vile mother. I stepped up to the young girl and said: "Pardon me for taking the liberty to address you. I think you had better change places with me; I am stronger than you are and can assist your brother to look after your mother until you arrive at your destination, wherever that may be."

She thanked me and allowed me to take her seat. Her mother struck at me. I grabbed her hand before she struck the spot that she had in her eye. The young girl acquainted me with the fact that for over six months her mother would get crazy spells, and sometimes at night "we hear devilish voices yelling like fiends; then she gets her worst spells. We are trying—that is, brother and I—to take her to grandpa's home. He lives on a farm, and she will be quiet there, I think, away from the noise of the city and those devilish voices that make so much noise at night."

I said, "Where does your grandfather live?" The brother spoke up and said, "Back of Hudson City. He is strong and so is Uncle William; they can hold her when she gets her crazy spells."

When the boat went up alongside of the wharf there was a man with a wagon and one horse. The girl said, "There is grandpa," and waved her handkerchief to the man sitting on the front seat of the wagon. He got down, handed the reins to a black boy, came on board of the steamer to where we were sitting. His grandchildren were so glad to see him they both commenced to cry. The daughter, "Come, Mary, father wants to take you home to mother; she longs to see you."

The unfortunate creature spit in his face and kicked him. She did not want to leave the boat. He asked me to assist him, and we forced her to leave the boat. On the wharf near where the wagon stood she got one of her hands loose and commenced to tear her bonnet and yell like an Indian. We caught hold of her hands and with the assistance of her son placed her in the back seat of the wagon. I said to the father, "I will hold her hands while you tie them with your handkerchief; then it will be much easier for your granddaughter and son to hold her in the seat." He did so. I got out of the wagon and was about to return to the boat when, to my surprise, I saw the boat out in the stream. I said, "Now I'm in a fix; the boat has gone and left me here in all my glory." The grandfather laughed and said, "What is your name, sir? My grandchildren forgot to introduce me." I told him my name was Mr. Poe. He said, "My name is Mr. Reynolds. I have a son in New York who practices law; possibly you may know him; his name is Wm. Reynolds." I told him I was acquainted with a lawyer who bore the name of Mr. Reynolds; he occupied an office at the corner of Courtland Street and Broadway. He said, "that is he." He laughed and shook hands, saying, "Get into the wagon and go home with us. Mother will make it comfortable for you. To-morrow I will bring you back in time for the boat going up the river."

I accompanied him to his home. It was a beautiful farm, a stone house surrounded by grand old trees. Mrs. Reynolds, a lovely old lady, gave us a cordial welcome, especially myself. When she looked at her daughter the tears commenced to show themselves. She said, "Oh, my darling grandchildren, I am so glad to see you." After kissing them she said: "It has been so hard for both of you. I know what you have suffered; it is only your grandfather and grandmother can understand." She looked up at the vacant stare of her daughter, who did not recognize her, saying: "Oh, my poor child, your mother's heart aches for you, did you only but understand it. Now you are at home with your father and mother, where you were born and passed so many happy days of your girlhood. It is here where you lived such a beautiful Christian life until you went to New York."

The poor creature sat there and made faces and spit at her mother. Mr. Reynolds returned from the barn where he had placed his horse, assisted us in carrying his unfortunate daughter into the house. We laid her on a sofa in the parlor; her mother went to the organ and played one of her daughter's favorite pieces of music; after that we sang "I know that my Redeemer liveth" to the organ accompaniment. The unfortunate daughter comenced to laugh and said, "Oh! how beautifully he used to sing that. Sing it again, you people, whoever you are."

We sang the same piece of music over. Just then a strong, handsome-looking man entered the room. He went over and knelt in front of the sofa, and said to the unfortunate woman: "Oh! dear sister, this is unfortunate. You are home again and we will try and make it happy for you."

She looked at him and said, "I heard you sing it; don't deny it, for I heard you."

He arose from his kneeling position, took his niece and nephew in his arms, saying, "Dear children, why did you not tell us of this before? You know it was your duty to acquaint us of her condition." The girl said: "When she was in her normal condition she begged and pleaded with us not to acquaint you with the facts. She grew worse every day and finally commenced to bite her own flesh. I could not stand that; it was dreadful to look upon. I wrote to grandpa we would bring her up on the boat, and for him to meet us at the landing. This gentleman here—pointing at me—kindly gave his service to help take care of her; his name, Uncle, is Mr. Poe; he missed the boat and grandpa got him to come home with us."

He looked at his mother and said, "Dear mamma, have you played any of her favorite pieces."

The grand old lady said, "Yes, my son. Suppose you sit here at the organ and play some while I hold my hands on her head. Oh! if God would only give her back her reason, that she might tell us all that has happened, my poor dear girl." She took her unfortunate daughter in her arms, kissed and hugged her, saying at the same time, "If only Jesus would come and help us."

The woman looked at her mother and said, "Do you know Jesus?"

The mother said, with great emotion, "My son, play, play!" He played several selections with grand effect; it seemed to me he was inspired to play. When he ceased playing, Mr. Reynolds said, "Let us sing 'I know that my Redeemer liveth.'" That was a favorite of hers."

We sang it and her brother at the organ sang with so much power I felt the angels were there. After we had sang the piece through, the father said, "Sing it again; I see a natural look coming in her eyes."

We sang with all the power that was in our souls. After we had finished singing, the brother kept on playing such soothing music, the unfortunate woman looked around and said: "Why, I am home, and this is my dear mamma that holds me in her arms, and there is dear papa and brother, and oh, my babies, too."

I noticed while she was talking her mother unloosened the knot that held her hands fast.

She said, "Mamma, dear, I don't remember coming home; I don't want to go back to that dreadful city again—I was so unhappy."

Her father came over to the sofa, and taking her in his arms, said: "Darling, you shall never return to that city again; your mother and all the rest of us need you here."

"Papa, was I sick long, and did I tire mamma out waiting on me?"

"No, darling, we were only too glad to have you with us. Now papa's girl must go to sleep and rest her weary head."

Lake Brady Camp.

On August 18 Brady Camp was favored in having Miss Elizabeth Harlow as speaker. The day was perfect and a fair audience greeted Miss Harlow's appearance. Her morning topic, "The All-Inclusive Philosophy," was handled in a masterly way, as was also the afternoon discourse on "Work a Curse" and "Death a Form of Punishment." Miss Harlow is a very magnetic speaker, carrying her audience with her. It is hoped by many that we can be favored by having her again next year.

Dr. W. O. Knowles followed her afternoon lecture with tests, all but one or two being fully recognized.

The Indian medium, Mr. Jimerson, is spending a few days here with his wife. Mrs. Carpenter will be the speaker for the next two Sundays, which will close the camp of 1907.

Meat Diet and Its Relation to Crime.

The present extraordinary prevalence of crimes of violence [as set forth in the New York World], and particularly of crimes against children, has brought out various suggestions as to their cause. The predominance of foreign names among the arrested has been made the basis of an indictment of lax immigration laws. The need of a larger number of police has been alleged, though, as a correspondent of The World points out, the force has hitherto proved adequate.

Elsewhere in the Sunday World Eugene Christian, a food chemist, discusses the influence of diet on morals, with special reference to the "responsibility of flesh-eating for crime." The eating of meat, he alleges, "has a tendency to stifle the finer sensibilities of our natures and to produce grosser passions," and he refers to the theory that "most murderers have been heavy flesh-eaters."

If meat-eating is to blame, the immigration argument is at once disposed of, the anglo-saxon races being admittedly the worst offenders in that particular. Does not the British matron herself, whose name is a synonym for prudery, owe her rosy cheeks mainly to roast beef and mutton chops? Fancy Mr. Pickwick, after a breakfast of chops and tomato sauce, meditating murder!

Or is the argument yet true on the theory that the sudden abandonment of spaghetti and polenta for beef and beans has maddened the Sicilian breast to crime? Has the burglar whose depredations have been the feature of previous summer crime waves now taken to beefsteak? Is chop suey accountable for the raid on Boston's Chinatown by the New York tongs?

If crime outbreaks were local in a single community, if there were not one in Berlin at this moment, if London had none, theories could be made more plausible. The main thing is to deal with the unbearable conditions.

FOOD AND CRIME.

What Causes the Wave of Crime that is Sweeping Over New York? What is the Remedy for It? Listen to this Reasoning of Eugene Christian, Food Chemist, Diet Specialist, Believer in Nature's Foods and Foe to Flesh-Eating.

"No perfectly normal, healthy man ever desires to commit a crime. If his body be sound his mind is inclined only to peace, to harmony, to pleasant relations with his fellow-man. If his physical state be abnormal, his mind will be disordered, and he is more prone to lawless acts.

"Undoubtedly there is a wave of crime invading New York—a wave of disorder, I would call it. Doubtless there are numerous contributory causes, but the fundamental reason lies in the persons themselves. You cannot check crime by mere preventive measures. If a man were hanged to that lamppost on the corner to-night for a murder, another of his kind would be just as apt to commit a similar crime on the same spot to-morrow night. Murder cannot be stopped by hanging any more than temperance enforced by arresting drunkards. It is necessary to go deeper and get at underlying causes.

"A man's actions are governed by his own mind—his brain. We inherit from our parents certain traits and characteristics, but they are infinitesimal in comparison to the influence and the daily effect wrought upon our brains by our physical condition. Inheritance can be moulded and changed, but the influence of the body is fixed and ever present.

"Food has a vital effect upon our bodies. The scope of its influence upon our brains, the extent to which it governs our actions and its responsibility for crimes and mental disorders form a subject of extreme importance. This relates not merely to acts of violence which we are now experiencing, but to economic conditions wherein one man preys upon his fellow-man.

"Let me illustrate with my own case. In former years I suffered from severe digestive disorders. I feared, like the animal, that soon I would not be able to compete in the physical struggle with my fellow-animals. Therefore I strove by every means to acquire money to arm myself in the unequal contest. I followed methods and used means that I would not countenance to-day. My bodily condition put my brain in a disordered state of defiance to scruples and justice.

"Then I was cured of trouble, or rather I cured myself by proper food, and my mental attitude toward the acquisition of money underwent a complete change. I no longer feared for myself in the struggle for existence, I view with calm mind the possibility that through some freak of fortune I might be ruined to-morrow and this entire establishmen of mine swept away. The reason is simple. My body is sound. I know I could earn my food and shelter digging in that street trench.

"If we could but find and analyze the motives that prompt men to build up colossal fortunes at the expense of their fellow-men we should come upon some interesting fundamental causes, among which the question of healthy bodies and normal minds would form an important part.

"In the case of one of our greatest millionaires—perhaps the greatest—we are told that he suffered severely from digestive disorders. How much effect, may be asked, did this condition have upon his business methods and his accumulation of wealth, just as it had in my own case?

"Now let us look into the direct consequences of food upon the actions of the individual. The warlike, conquering nations of the world are heavy meat eaters. A handful of Englishmen took possession of India, with its millions of rice-eating inhabitants. Very well. Is England any better for having done so? Has she improved morally and mentally?

"The eating of flesh undoubtedly has the tendency to stifle the finer sensibilities of our natures and to produce grosser passions. Paganini, the violinist, is said to have played once in the ruins of the Coliseum in Rome and, stopping suddenly in the midst of one of his finest passages, exclaimed: 'There, could I have done that if I had eaten the flesh of my brother animal?'

"In the flesh of animals there are three poisons—carbon-dioxide, toxin and uric acid—that are constantly being produced in the system and given off. When the animal is killed, the process of passing off the poisons instantly ceases and the amount on hand remains in the flesh. There must be considered also the effect of the animal's mental and nervous condition. It may have been racing about with others of its kind, excited or panic-stricken in chase. It may have been carried on long railroad journeys. It may have been quivering with rage, hatred or fear in the slaughter-house. At all events it was not in a composed normal state at the time of death.

"This condition of the animal's mind and passions reacts on the flesh, produces a chemical change and stamps its mark in the tissues. People eat this meat. Unquestionably they absorb with it the poisons and the animalism from whence it came, and their minds and their actions must be affected by it.

"Beefsteak, in the manner it is prepared for eating, contains from 10 to 15 per cent of fat, which simply is stored-up heat. Fat burns in the human body like fire in that grate. Imagine the condition of a man these midsummer days who has eaten large quantities of meat. He goes out into the sun where an outside temperature of 90 to 100 degrees beats upon him with an atmospheric pressure of fifteen pounds to the square inch. Inside him the fat he has eaten is burning at a terrific rate. Add to this the heat of any alcohol he may have drunk and the result is a veritable human volcano. The mere conditions are enough to disorder any brain.

"I do not wonder that waves of crime occur more frequently in the summer when such habits and customs prevail. Vegetarians assert that no follower of their regime ever committed a violent crime. Unfortunately there are no statistics on the subject. It would be interesting to know what was the customary diet of noted criminals. What, for example, did Harry Thaw eat and drink before killing Stanford White? I think it would be found that most murderers have been heavy flesh eaters.

"Suppose you knew two men, one of whom ate large quantities of meat and drank alcohol in summer; the other dined temperately on protoid nuts, unfired crackers, salad and fruits; which man would you trust with your money?

"Banks expect honest and strict habits of life in their employes. How many of them looking into a man's record inquire about his diet? Yet that is a most important factor governing his course of life. Do you suppose the Windsor Trust Company knew the eating habits of its thieving teller Runyan?

"We are making progress in finding out the effect of different kinds of food on the body and are learning how to eat properly in order to keep well. But the question of food's effect on the mind and the responsibility of flesh-eating for crime are fields too little explored."

DOWN THE SLOPE.

(These beautiful lines were written by Charlotte Prince Hawes, a young lady of Worcester, Mass., who died in 1866, and of whom Col Higginson wrote that but for lack of early mental training and sound health "her extraordinary combination of originality and industry would have left her no rival among American women since Margaret Fuller." This poem, her last, was dated within six weeks of her death, and sent by her to the Worcester Spy.)

Who knoweth life but questions death,
With guessings of that dimmer day,
When one is slowly lift from clay
On winged breath?

But man advances far and high
His forces fly with lightning stroke,
Till worn with years, with vigor broke,
He turns to die;

When lo! he finds it still a life,
New ministration and new trust,
Along a happy way that's just
Aside from strife.

And all day following friendly feet
That lead on bravely to the light;
As one walks downward, strong and bright,
The slanted street—

And feels earth's benedictions wide,
Alike on forest, lake or town;
Nor marks the slope—he going down
The sunniest side.

O, bounteous nature's everywhere!
Perchance at last one need not fear
A change—to cross from your love here
To God's love there.

Spirits Appear and Warn of Danger.

I send you an item in regard to spirit ministration and guardianship which was observed at this place a few days ago. Mrs. W. E. Lothridge is the wife of Dr. Lothridge, a practicing physician of this place, whose home is at stop 25 on the Troy and Schenectady trolley road Mrs. Lothridge and a lady friend were walking along the road near stop 30 on the trolley line. Mrs. Lothridge was walking in the carriage road, and her friend was walking on the track. They saw what they supposed and appeared to them as a mortal lady and gentleman standing at the stopping, waiting for a car; but as they came nearer a gentleman stepped onto the track, one foot placed on the rail and one on a tie, and facing them raised his hand high above his head and waving them as if to warn them back and then they both instantly disappeared.

One thing which was noticed was, a cloud seemed to envelope them. As he turned and faced the ladies Mrs. Lothridge recognized her son-in-law who was killed by being hit by a trolley car near their home.

This all happened in daylight and without any anticipation of receiving any such message. The lady with Mrs. Lothridge was anxious to have her walk on the track, but she declined, and her son-in-law was warning her to keep off the track.

It certainly is proof of the overshadowing presence of spiritual beings and their guardianship over mortal life.

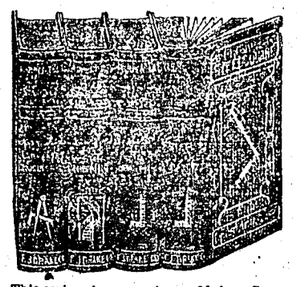
IF

If every one were wise and sweet,
And everyone were jolly;
If every heart with gladness beat,
And none were melancholy;
If none should grumble or complain,
And nobody should labor
In evil work, but each were fain
To love and help his neighbor—
Oh, what a happy world 'twould be
For you and me—for you and me!



And if perhaps we both should try
That glorious time to hurry;
If you and I—just you and I,—
Should trust instead of worry;
If we should grow—just you and I,
Kinder and sweeter-hearted,
Perhaps in some near by-and-bye,
That good time might get started.

Ridicule Not Logic.

"Is it not plain that 'spirit' is only a word used to plug up the bottom of our peep-hole of knowledge."

Thus an inquiry by an Agnostic journal, the name of which we suppress in this connection, because of our respect for the editor. He had traced matter in a descending scale until it was lost in molecules, and capable of no further division; and yet he found only matter, hence a spirit could not inhabit that mater, consequently it was proper to ridicule it.

Every particle of matter in the universe is ponderous, and observes the spirit could not inhabit that matter, Did our friend find the source of that attraction in his critical research? That matter is charged with electricity, the molecule and the mammoth globe alike filled with that element, now hitched to the car of progress, rendering us such invaluable aid. Did our friend find some "peep-hole" into which this element had intruded itself?

Perchance our friend has entered a flower garden, and caught the aroma escaping from the rose! No eye ever saw that fragrance, and never will; and yet it manages to "peep out," and leave an impress on his senses.

The mind-reader catches the unuttered thought, and finds, without difficulty, a concealed object, having no clue but that hidden in the brain of him who secreted it. Whence that knowledge?

A psychometrist finds in a fragment of rock the story of its formation; with interlinking history to other objects that leave no question of the truthfulness of what he relates.

May not the "soul of things" suggest that there is something in man that confounds science?

War With Japan.

A young Jap, just arrived in New York, the son of the great steel king of Japan, bringing with him four automobiles, a chauffeur and a mechanician to look after them, his pockets full of the coin of the realm, and proposing to tour the United States in pursuit of general knowledge, when asked about trouble between his country, and this, laughed aloud and said:

"If you folks only knew how anxious our people are to be friendly with America, and Americans, you would come right over and take tea with us. There is no more chance of the real people of Japan allowing anything to happen to rupture that friendship than there is for this world to go to war with Mars."

The only thought of such a war has come from a bellicose press.

Put Up the Sword.

Latest advices as we go to press represent The Hague Congress as nearing its end. The British delegates are still hopeful of getting a provision adopted limiting the armament of nations. This should be done instanter, and arrest the further waste of the world in building ten million dollar war ships.

A Fact Stated, and Why True.

Ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake.—Jesus.

The above words are represented as having been addressed by Jesus to his disciples. See Mat. 24:9.

And why should they not be hated by all nations and by all men? It was he who taught:

"If any man come to me, and HATE not his father, and mother, and wife and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."—Luke 14:26.

Of course, then, the whole Christian world who accept Jesus as their founder and teacher, is infused with hate. Christians must detest even the mother who bore them, and the children to whom they gave life. Such a damnable idea is unworthy a demon incarnate. It is the base of the whole superstructure of the dominant religion, and for ages it was carried out in practice.

Why should not persons holding such a faith be universally hated? As love begets love, so hate begets hate.

We have consulted a dozen different renderings of the New Testament, including the Catholic Douay, and the Revised New Testament, as also the accepted Greek original and the Latin, and everyone of them are substantially the same. Jesus was the parent of the doctrine of Hate illustrated in war for the propagation of the faith and in Inquisitorial fires.

The Bible we are told is inerrant, and there is no avoiding the issue the words of Jesus present that Hate is the chief corner stone of Christianity.

Tells What He Saw.

A correspondent of the Ingersoll Beacon, writing from Hungary, says:

"I noticed a man and wife, walking along the muddy country road, the woman barefoot, skirts a trifle below her knees, carrying a heavy bundle on her back, tied in a cloth like a bed-sheet, making her walk stooping, with nose toward the ground. The man was walking at her side, carrying only a great pipe which he was smoking. It looked as if he was driving a beast of burden."

Other travelers in the rural districts of Europe, meet with a woman and some other animal, frequently a donkey, plowing a field, the good master of both guiding the plow. In all these regions Christianity is the dominant religion, inherited from pious ancestors.

In every country where woman is the most free, and is occupying her true position as an equal among equals, skepticism to the prevailing faith has made the greatest inroads.

In France, Germany, England and the United States, where Liberalism prevails with the laboring classes, it has invaded the church with its independent thought, and is, threatening to uproot all creeds. It is in these countries we find woman at her best.

The liberty given woman by the church was to keep silent, learn of her husband at home and not attempt to teach. She who disobeyed, only a few years ago, was ostracised and maligned, and was classed as an intruder into circles from which she was barred by the dear Paul.

How Strange.

Orchard, the boss criminal of a century, if we can credit his confession, with a score of lives violently sacrificed by him, is now listed with the saints. He got religion, placed his trust in Jesus, is a zealous reader of the Bible, and of course, anxiously awaits his fate in the courts, conscious his sins have all been washed away in "the blood of the Lamb."

But Orchard's is not an isolated case. Pat Crowe, the kidnapper, who escaped conviction for his crime, though no one doubts his guilt, at last advices was in London, quietly enjoying its sights, mingling with the throngs at the fashionable hotels, and sporting as a reformed and redeemed sinner, now a Christian. His constant companion is a Bible, which he carries everywhere with him, and reads at his leisure.

A Golden Sheaf.

With pleasure we call especial attention to the announcement, as found on the seventh page of this paper, of the publication of a volume, to be comprised of choice selections of matter from the versatile pens of Hudson Tuttle and Mrs. Emma Rood Tuttle. It is in the nature of a fitting souvenir of the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage.

It is needless to say to those who are conversant with the writings of those talented and inspired authors, that the volume will be rich in healthful, inspiring thought, and valuable instruction.

As the edition is to be limited to the number of actual subscribers, those who may desire a copy of the book must forward their names at once. Mr. Tuttle writes us that he is desirous that there be no delay, as he will now soon have the book published, and he wishes to know how large an edition to print.

We hope the many who have read and profited by their writings in the past will give generous response to their invitation.

Real Genius Ever Active.

Avarice, cupidity, and holiness make strange displays of genius to gain coin of the realm.

The great need of the church to acquire revenue to compensate the preacher for his Sunday labor, has, probably, made heavier drafts on genius to meet the want than has been made on any other cult with equally limited resources.

The press of the country very generally made mirth of the sale for the evening of the sisters' ankles, displayed from under the edge of a curtain which hid the person of the owner of said ankles from view while the sale was in progress.

But a new device has been sprung on an admiring world, which rivals all former attempts at money-getting. We find the scheme detailed in an associated press dispatch from Cleveland, of date Aug. 13. At the same time the announcement is made that the mayor, because of the terrible public outcry in opposition, has declared the project off. It was a proposed picnic, with a wading match of women, the one making the deepest advance into the water without wetting her dress was to receive the grand prize.

What a worldly enjoyment, and large amounts of money as well, were lost to the projectors of this novel device, because of official interference; but the mayor is threatened with defeat at the next charter election in consequence.

Interesting Scientific Facts.

Meteorologists and balloonists have been of late laboring to ascertain the general temperature of the atmosphere at great elevations. By high-flying kites and sounding-balloons they have determined that ten miles above the surface of the earth the average temperature in April and May is about 85 degrees below zero.

These experiments have been in process among meteorologists for fifty years, and the results all show the greater the ascent the lower the temperature.

Do not these facts demonstrate that light from the sun, when it enters our atmosphere, say 45 to 50 miles above the surface of the earth, is barren of warmth? that heat is generated by the friction of that light when passing through the atmosphere, acquiring the greatest heat in the valleys, and in those regions where the atmosphere is most dense, as along the Persian Gulf, and the Dead Sea region 1,200 feet below the surface of the Mediterranean?

Electricity itself is proven to be destitute of heat, just the condition of light, until heated by its rapid flight through and friction with a resisting element.

The great solar system, a magnificent dynamo, ever generating electric currents, and illuminating all the planets, how many times more reasonable the theory than the old philosophy, that the sun is a mass of flame, kept alive by burning worlds, or the recent hell theory modernized, by the burning of sinners from the earth?

It Still Rolls On.

And the great wave of crime rolls on, threatening to overwhelm all in a common ruin! Turn in what direction we may the same facts meet us. Life has no security; property rights are not respected; the home has ceased to be the castle which protects its occupants from insult, and shields the family from danger. The midnight assassin lurks in dark places. The burglar has no respect for others' rights. The fire-brand may consume in an hour that which has cost years of thought, labor, hope and energy to build. The child nurtured to maturity in a loving home, surrounded by every comfort, and fitted by education for a long and joyous life, is lured from the sacred circle where idolizing parents preside, and is found a mutilated, ghastly corpse.

Almighty God! How long shall these things be? Those we believed good, and have honored with our trust, and he who bends his knee in worship of a common parent, seem as liable to fall as they in humble life. Peculation, fraud, embezzlement, with betrayal of public trust, are the besetting vices of the rich. Robbery, larceny, arson, murder, are that of the poor; while he who has no regard for life, who would whelm a world in ruin if it would minister to his pleasure, strives to wreck long trains of railroad cars bearing dear ones home, perchance to receive a last word from a dying mother's lips.

Take up the morning paper to learn of the events of the last few hours. Startling headlines greet our gaze, telling of the submergence of a ship nearing our coast, loaded down with a thousand passengers, perhaps only a single soul escaping to tell the terrible tale of woe; a worthless wretch, his motive plunder, possibly of revenge for some imagined slight from an officer, planned and sought for days to bring about the awful calamity, then had met the common fate, and gone down with the plunder, or the officer he had singled for vengeance.

Distrust takes the place of confidence in times like these. When the priest who ministers at the sacred altar disregards his own teaching, and advocates a creed he does not believe or is guilty of destroying a home to minister to his shameful pleasure—an almost daily occurrence—where shall we go to find an honest man?

We have long entertained the opinion that the public press should not make a display of crime; that for moral results the less publicity given it the better. Others have maintained—

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;"

while others have maintained with great force, in the further words of the poet:

"Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

Is it not possible the last couplet gives one of the present causes for the prevailing conditions? Have not our newspapers made us too familiar with murders, arsons, stranglings, mutilations, suicides, and the long array of frauds in numberless forms? Instead of discouraging the wrong doer, have we not sometimes made him appear a martyr by arousing the sympathy of his friends?

Journalists intend to do right; but young writers are very liable to miss the mark, as frequently do the preachers. We were positively shocked the other day when we read the proposition of a leading clergyman, who urged the necessity of martial law to put down crime. "Place the military in our streets," said he, "with orders to shoot down at sight every offender of law." He, probably, borrowed his thought from Paul: "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." So acts the good preacher, God's earthly representative, allowing the craft to have the benefit of their claims.

General Sherman said truthfully: "War is hell." The preachers, the old orthodox and stereotyped kind, believe in hell, they preach hell, some of them practice hellish ways, and expect the teaching of an endless and flaming hell will reform the world. They have been preaching hell on every opportune occasion, and it has been reproduced in practical life. For near two thousand years, accepting for the now their chronology, they have been reforming the world by slaughter.

Millions rise before us as we write, who have been reformed in this manner. We see them writhing in flames of fire and racked with instruments of torture; we see the genius of the world wasted at the dictations of priests to invent damnable devices to make real on earth the miseries they have promised unbelievers in another state of being; and woman, lovely woman, for obeying a heaven-born instinct, for which she is only responsible for lack of power to control circumstances, has been ostracised, driven from home and dear ones, until lost in vice and degradation, and all through the influence of priestly teaching.

And now, in the language of the seamen, "Stand from under, ye of the priestly clan!" When you are told crime is rampant, and you are asked the cause, you reply: "It is infidelity, and the increasing influence of Spiritualism that is undermining the social fabric, inculcating disregard for sacred things, denying the inspiration of the Bible, flooding the world with skeptical literature, and thus indirectly encouraging crime." In reply, we beg our clerical friend to "go to." Search the statistics of the criminal courts, of our prisons, and of crime generally. What a startling record! The infidels are not prisoners. Scarcely a Jew is found within their walls. No Spiritualist is there, and in the fifty-nine years of their existence but one Spiritualist has died for a capital offense, and he declaring his innocence, whilst the evidence against him was only circumstantial. Covering the same period, a publication is extant, entitled, "Crimes of Preachers." It gives the name, place, date, crime and punishment, and, horrible to relate, some FIFTEEN HUNDRED of God's elect are listed there as convicted felons, who have suffered, or are yet suffering, in expiation of enormous crimes. Of lesser offenses and misdemeanors, of which every police court has a record, there were multitudes. A majority of the inmates of our penal institutions are from orthodox churches, a majority of these being Catholics or Methodists, whilst 95 per cent of all convicts were taught the Christian Sunday Schools.

There is a cause for all this. Jesus, instead of teaching his disciples to hate crime, directed that hate to be turned upon parents, and his nearest of kin, including his own life, which is the motive of suicide. See Luke 14:26.

HALCYON DAYS.

Not from successful love alone,
Not wealth, nor honor'd middle age, nor victories of politic war;
But as the wanes and all the turbulent passions calm,
As gorgeous, vapory, silent hues cover the evening sky,
As softness, fullness, rest, suffuse the frame, like fresher, balmier air,
As the days take on a mellower light and the apple at last hangs really finished and indolent-ripe on the tree,
Then for the teeming quietest, happiest days of all!
The brooding and blissful halcyon days.

HUNTS FAKER THREE YEARS.

Dupe Gets Revenge After Waiting Long—Tracks the Man All Over the Country—Had Beat Him Out of $1000 by Ancient Envelope Game—Warrant and Requisition Papers Secured Before Arrest.

Another grafting Spiritualist faker who fled to Los Angeles when things became too hot for him in his own town has run afoul of the police.

This man is Edwin K. Earl, alias Edwin K. Fay, [now recognized as Charles Brockway] said by those who knew him in his old home in Fargo, N. D., as well as by the police who have investigated his record, to be a daring trickster, but of the crudest type.

Earl was arrested by Captain of Police Walter Auble and Lieutenant Murray yesterday morning.

He was taken from his private office at 120½ South Spring street, through a side door. For hours after he had gone a crowd of gullible women, girls and old men waited in the reception room for his return, each expecting he would give them some message from their spirit friends.

Guides in Wrong.

Earl's spirit guides had a wrong hunch yesterday. For that matter they have had a wrong hunch for three years. They failed to warn the Spookist that an avenger of past misdeeds was close on his trail and that a long term in prison was staring him in the face.

After being arrested Earl was taken to the police station, where he was confronted by J. D. Brown of 528 Brent street, the man who claims that the faker defrauded him out of $1000 and who will return with the prisoner to North Dakota and appear against him when the case is called there. Brown has followed the fake medium for three years, but only located him two months ago.

There will be no difficulty experienced in taking Earl back to North Dakota. The necessary papers have been in the hands of the police during the last ten days.

The story of Earl's misdeeds is a long one. Four years ago he appeared in Fargo and opened a small office. Soon he began advertising in the papers and the residents of the town learned that the "one and only true guide to the mysteries of the unseen world; far-famed prophet and unfolder of things unseen" was in the midst of them.

"The advertisements attracted a great deal of attention," said Mr. Brown yesterday, "and many men who ought to have had better sense consulted him. I was one of the number.

"At that time I was a member of a company which had been formed to take over a large area of land near Devil's Lake, N. D. The plan was to have each member of the company draw a numbered slip of paper from an envelope. The number on the slip told which section of land belonged to the holder.

Works Envelope Game.

There was one section I desired greatly. I had gone over the land and made up my mind which I wanted. When I returned to Fargo I went to see Earl and asked him if he could help me get it.

"He told me he could, and asked if I had any money. I told him I had about a thousand dollars. He told me that was enough, and for me to put $1000 in large bills in an envelope he gave me and to bring it to him each day for four days.

"He told me I was not to give him the money, but was to let him count it.

"The first day I took the envelope and the money to him he abstracted the bills and placed small thin sheets of paper on the side of each bill. He then placed them back in the envelope.

"The next day and the next day he did not look at the money, but the fourth day he again counted the bills, sealed the envelope and handed it, or what I supposed was it, back to me. I found out afterward he had slipped the envelope containing the money into a drawer of his desk and given me a duplicate, containing nothing but slips of paper.

"He told me to take the envelope home and not to return for two days.

Jumps the Town.

"When I did return I found that Earl had skipped and that the only thing he had left behind him was a bunch of unpaid bills and a number of defrauded persons like myself.

"I am an old man, nearly 78 years of age, but I made up my mind that I would catch the man and bring him to justice.

"I had a little money left, and with it my daughter, Zoe May Brown, and myself started loking for him. For two years we traveled, going to Salt Lake City, Denver, San Francisco, and Portland. A year ago we arrived in Los Angeles. Nearly all my money was gone, but I still hoped that I would find the man.

"Two months ago my daughter saw him on Spring street. She had changed so much he did not recognize her, so she followed him to his office and then returned home and told me. Together we went to Captain Auble's office and asked him to help us.

"After hearing our story Captain Auble asked us to leave the case in his hands, and we did so.

Looks Up Record.

He began looking up Earl's record. He found that while the man was going under the name of Fay, here, Earl was his right name, and that he had operated in North Dakota three years ago.

"Captain Auble then wrote to the chief of police in Fargo, telling him that Earl's whereabouts were known and asking if there was a warrant for the man's arrest.

"A telegram was received a few days later saying to arrest the man at all costs.

"Still Captain Auble did not make the arrest. He knew Earl could not get away from the city. He had him constantly watched and began laying plans so there would be no danger of a fall down after the arrest was made.

"First he telegraphed to the authorities in Fargo and the warrant for Earl's arrest was issued. This warrant was then taken to the governor and requisition papers were issued. These papers and the warrant were sent to Captain Auble and the way for him was clear.

Awaits Dakota Officer.

"This morning he arrested Earl, and now all there is to be done is to wait until an officer arrives from North Dakota to take the man back.

"There he will be confronted by a number of men he has defrauded, myself among the number.

"I have followed him for three years, and I will not be satisfied until I see him facing a long term in jail. I do not want my $1000 back. I do not need the money as I have enough to support my daughter and myself. I want him punished, though for working flim-flams on credulous persons."

Mr. Brown is an old soldier, and despite his years appears to be in the prime of manhood. His eyes flashed when he told the story of the chase after the man who had defrauded him, and remarked that yesterday was one of the happiest of his life.

Dangerous Man.

"I am glad we captured this fellow Earl, or Fay, as he was known here," said Captain Auble yesterday. "He is one of the class of men with whom the police of all large cities of the country are frequently called upon to deal, and it is a dangerous class.

"Earl denies that he is the man wanted, but both Mr. Brown and his daughter have identified him, and I believe their words are good.

"The fact that we secured all necessary papers before making the arrest made matters much easier for us, and we will now hold Earl until an officer arrives for him."

When searched at the police station Earl was found to have $166 in his pockets. He tried to hide a $10 bill, but his action was noticed by Captain Auble and the money was taken from him. Earl wore a valuable diamond stick pin, but was compelled to give up both articles.—Los Angeles, Cal., Herald, August 10, 1907.

Letter From Mrs. Zoe Brown-May.

To the Editor:—You will have received a communication from my Father, M. D. Brown, 529 Brent st., Los Angeles, Cal., before this reaches you, telling of the capture of Mr. Brockway, alias Edward K. Earl, alias H. C. Fay, who was operating in this city under alias, H. C. Fay, when arrested August 9th, 1907.

Now I am Mr. Brown's daughter and was the direct cause of the arrest of Brockway, Earl, Fay, as I met him on the street, or rather passed him, recognizing him instantly.

I turned in the information to my father after I had made sure the steps to be taken before he could be arrested August 9, and safely lodged in jail.

Sworn Statement by One Who Was Swindled Out of $1000.

To the Editor:—I saw your letter to Miss Anna Lesser, wishing a sworn statement from me in regard to what happened to me by one Edward K. Earl, a great clairvoyant, which I will give you full particulars.

This so-called Mr. Earl came to Fargo, North Dakota about the 1st of August, 1904, and took rooms at the Prescott Hotel. About that time the Devils Lake Indian Reservation lands came into the market, and I, with others, wished to secure a quarter section of said land, and I was advised by my friends to go and see this great psychic, to see whether or not I would be successful in the venture. When I went to see him, he had me write three questions, one of which was in regard to the taking of land—whether I would be successful or not. Earl read the three questions all right without seeing them, and then informed me that he thought I would not be successful, and it would be of no use for me to go and register, as he (Earl) could see a cloud between me and success; but he said he could fix it so I would be successful. I asked him how he could do that. He then asked me if I owned my city property. I told him I did not. He then wanted to know what my property consisted of. I told him I had a bank account. He then said, "You draw out $1000 dollars in as large bills as you can get. Have the money put in an envelope and sealed up, and bring it here. I asked him how he could work a change by having the money present? He said in a clairvoyant way; something I did not understand. Reluctantly I did so. He then had me open the envelope, take out the money; then he cut some pieces of white paper and put it in among the bills, put in another envelope, and told me to wear it next to my person, and come back next day at 2 o'clock, and he would take out those papers, and put in new ones. This he required to be done three times, once each day. The money did not leave my hand for a moment until the last act. The last day was August 7, when I was to come back August 8, and all would be well.

When he (Earl) made this last change of the papers, on the 7th of the month, is when he done me up. I put the money in the envelope myself and sealed it, and he said he thought it would not stick good, so he daubed on a lot of mucilage, then took a newspaper to dry it off, and then turned to a dresser that stood close by and picked up a handkerchief and was still drying off the envelope, and there made the change of envelopes; kept the one containing the money and gave me one he had prepared for the occasion with nothing but strips of newspaper in it. Before I got to his office at 2 o'clock, p. m., on the 8th, Mr. Earl had taken the train and was gone. This Mr. Edward K. Earl is no other than Mr. Charles B. Brockway, whose photograph you sent Miss Leaser, and from which I had several copies taken.

JUMPS HEAVY BAIL.

Fugitive Clairvoyant Fails to Appear When Case Is Called—Wanted in North Dakota.

Edwin K. Earl, alias Charles V. Brockway, alias Charles Brock, alias Fay arrested in Los Aangeles ten days ago on a charge of having defrauded James Brown of Fargo, North Dakota, yesterday failed to put in an appearance in police court and his bail of $3000 was forfeited.

Earl was arrested after he had been pointed out by Mrs. Zoe Russell, daughter of his victim. The woman who had recognized him on the street followed him to his place of business at No. 120 South Spring street, and caused his arrest.

James Brown, the complaining witness against Earl, is over seventy years of age. He spent 3000 dollars in trying to track down the man who had taken his money, and was prepared to return to Fargo and prosecute the case.

According to Brown, Earl worked as a fortune-teller in Fargo during a big land boom. He (Brown) went to the fortune teller to find out what lucky number to draw from the land lottery. He was then told to put $1000 in an envelope and take it to Earl every day for five days. Certain incantations were breathed over the letter, and Brown alleged that on the last day, Earl changed letters on him and gave him one with only a piece of blank paper in it.

He started out after Earl as soon as he discovered the loss and tracked him clear across the country. Earl's arrest in Los Angeles came from the accidental recognition.—Los Angeles Times.

What Are Our Responsibilities, and How Can We Obey the Spiritual Law While on Earth?

An Impressive Lecture Delivered by Mrs. H. L. P. Russegue, at Elks' Hall, New York City.

I will read for your instruction and contemplation a part of the 22d chapter of Revelations:-

1. And he showed me a pure river of water of life, as clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

2. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3. And there shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him.

4. And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads.

5. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever.

6. And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true, and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

7. Behold, I come quickly. Blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.

8. And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.

9. Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book; worship God.

10. And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book, for the time is at hand.

11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still, and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still, and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

I will read a poem, entitled:

Conscience and Future Judgment.

I sat alone with my conscience,
In a place where time had ceased,
And we talked of my former living,
And in the land where the years increased.

And I felt I should have to answer
The question if put to me,
And to face the answer and question
All through eternity.

The ghosts of forgotten actions
Came floating before my sight,
And things that I thought were dead things,
Were alive with a terrible might.

And the vision of all my past life
Was an awful thing to face,
Alone with my conscience sitting,
In that solemnly silent place.

And I thought of a far-away warning
Of a sorrow that was to be mine,
In a land that then was the future,
But now is the present time.

And I thought of my former thinking,
Of the judgment day to be;
But sitting alone with my conscience
Seemed judgment enough for me.

And I wondered if there was a future
To this land beyond the grave,
But no one came to answer,
And no one came to save.

Then I felt that the future was present,
And the present would never go by,
For it was the thought of my past life,
Grown into eternity.

Then I woke from my timely dreaming,
And the vision passed away,
And I knew that the far-away warning
Was a warning of yesterday.

And I prayed that I might not forget it,
In this land before the grave;
That I may not cry in the future
And no one come to save.

And so I learned the lesson,
Which I ought to have known before,
And which, though I learned it dreaming,
I hope to forget no more.

So I sit alone with my conscience,
In the place where the years increase,
And I try to remember the future,
In the land where time shall cease.

I know of the future judgment,
How truthful soe'er it may be,
That to sit alone with my conscience
Will be judgment enough for me.

I select for my subject this afternoon,

What Are Our Responsibilities, and How Can We Obey the Spiritual Law While On Earth.

The introspection of the human mind leads us to face many responsibilities, and we involuntarily strive to measure the acts, the environments, and the experiences of our action with which we are constantly coming in contact. It has been said as a scientific demonstration, that a child who has grown up in an unhealthy atmosphere, with unsanitary spiritual environment, to be surrounded by pure air, both physical and spiritual, to meet the only forces that shall uplift the intellect, and give health and strength to the mind, that that child will not present the qualities of inheritance that having grown up spontaneously would manifest. However, the causes of all the conditions incident to human life are far-reaching; they penetrate the past as the roots of the tree go down into the soil, and their various ramifications need a large circle to environ them. So the causes of human action are largely attributable to the surroundings that are incident to the life of every individual.

The law of human life is that we are the fruits of all the past ages. All the conditions that belong to human thought, all the truths of revelation that appeal to the intellect of man, are but the outgrowth of all conditions that have long since passed away. Our intentions, our conduct, our relationships, our kinships with those to whom we are by nature allied, or to whom by intellectual affinity we are held, are but the fruits of the tree of life. We are but the potencies that are growing out of the long ago. Nevertheless, in retrospect, we can mark the progress of humanity, which is the prophecy of eternity, for it is the language of the eternity behind us that is speaking or outlining the conditions yet to unfold to our minds.

That the human mind is progressive, we have but to mark the mile-stones along the way through human history. We have only to see how man has unfolded the faculty of his spirit by which he is able to reach out farther into the realm of spirit, how much better he may comprehend the truth, how much larger life has become, how much more truly the world is presenting its varied aspects for his intellectual and spiritual growth. It is time, friends, that we come into the cognition of a truth that binds us according to divine law to all that has been. We are allied to yesterday—to the centuries that have rolled past, and we are allied just as surely to all that ever may be, all that ever can be, to all the truth that may ever be revealed.

The man who peered into the heavens and discovered the march of the planets, and found that the sun never rose nor set, from the motion of our planet, but that we were moving around to observe its differing relations to our planet, must come into the knowledge that there is a power and potency there as well as here, by which we may comprehend the law that holds him to the system so far away. He who reads the lessons of the skies, and he who reads the pages that nature is turning in this great book of life, must come to the knowledge that there is a spiritual law there that is continually defining itself to man's understanding, and that that law is at the same time but the response to the earnest wish of his own spirit.

We never see anything that we do not wish to see spiritually. We never hear anything spiritually that we do not desire to hear. We never comprehend a law unless there is a hunger within. We never reach out our hands for the manna of divine life unless there is a hunger within that is constantly desiring the manna of God's law, God's wisdom, and God's truth.

It is needless for us to deny the existence of a supreme force; it is needless for us to deny the potency of the universe by which every particle of matter is held within its own orbit, by which this march of worlds is going on and on through all time, and yet each akin to all the others, by which systems upon systems are rolling on and on through eternity, and by which our minds are constantly grappling with these problems of that law, and gradually, because of this desire of the spirit of man, we are coming into a larger comprehension of the law.

Scientists to-day are taking hold, not only of the outer laws that govern the molecular life of the earth, but they are to-day penetrating the mists of the spiritual law. They are applying their intelligence to the conditions of human intellects, human spirits. They are learning gradually how mind is unfolding and how one mind is encompassed by the influences about it, and how by inherited forces and powers the human intellect plods along, overcoming difficulties, throwing down barriers, opening the doorways into larger lives, into larger thought, into a higher wisdom, and they are coming into the cognition of a spiritual existence outside of these material bodies which you inhabit.

The spiritual forces of life are more potent than all that we can ascribe to matter; however it may be, there is a spirit there that is intelligent in its manifestations. You may call a force that inheres the whole of the universe electricity. Call it by whatever name you please, but it is not manifest as a distinct potency in man, nature or science, in any department of the universe, until human intelligence directs it.

What is that intelligence?

It is the spirit of man, the inherent life, the ego of every individual, and wherever there is in the universe any condition of law, there the mind of man penetrates its mysteries, and through that mind all revelation is made. If that revelation is labeled "Thus saith the Lord," it is religious; if it is labeled the "Outer or natural," it is said to be material. If it belongs to the morals of a community, it belongs to the law.

Is there anything that is exempt from the law? The Niobe in the deeps of the sea, that lives clear to its mighty depths, manifests the existence of an inherent law, the force of an inherent intelligence. The globule of water, that is held in the radius of its own life, manifests a law; the attraction and repulsion of human beings manifests a law, and that law is as divine in the one instance as in the other, because in this process of this creation, unfolding development upbuilding the divinity of life, is speaking itself to every intelligent thinker.

These ideas have been the outgrowth of a spiritual development. Once the earth was flat, the seas were flat, but science tells you that the earth is round. Then science came to the rescue and told you that you were revolving upon an axis; that there was an equatorial axis, and that the world, the earth, was revolving upon it. A little later on man peered into the mysteries of nature, and he told you there was a polar revolution of the earth; that it was moving upon a polar axis, as well, hence the precession of the equinoxes came to the possession of man, and thus science has revealed divinity; it has not been dogma, it has not been faith, it has not been hope, it has not been a belief in that far-away God who lives beyond the stars, upon a throne of alabaster, whose surroundings are made of the finest material. The human imagination can conceive to be its revelation of God in nature the revelation of spirit to spirit, a voice of divinity to divinity, the voice of God beyond our comprehension to that spirit that is within us that shall carry us out to himself, to itself, and shall unfold the latent capacity of human spirit.

We have learned too long and have been trammeled too long by belief. We have held onto faith without daring to question the real life about us. Modern Spiritualism has come to the rescue. When the Jews clamored for a sign, then came Jesus, the Nazarene, who brought with him not only the spirit of the law, but he brought the manifestation of the law. He spoke in words and he spoke in acts. He demonstrated the force, the power, of the divinity that inhered him, and when it came into the relation of that divinity that inheres everyone about you and about him, then there was a divine response, and the world learned a diviner lesson than it had ever known before; and so to-day the Christian world has clamored for a sign. It was asked that there might come to the world some knowledge that beyond what you call death there might be life, and the sign has come.

Nature contained the law. Mind environed the spirit. It was living and growing and bursting the shell of bigotry and superstition, until at last the telegraphic message has sounded over the universe, and a voice beyond the bridge of death sounded to the children of men, telling of eternal life.

Thus the truth has gradually marched along, and our responsibilities incurred by this knowledge are increased a thousand fold to the conditions of ignorance that have existed. The scientist, as soon as he becomes acquainted with the law that induces or produces certain effects, he is responsible to himself that he shall bring to the world some evidence of a larger science than he has yet discovered, and what is the result? A continued investigation; a continued revelation in consequence.

The astronomer discovers one world. For years and years it was the common belief of astronomers that only four moons belonged to Jupiter. To-day he believes in six, and why? Because there was an action there that told of the relationship to something more than they had discovered, and in the revolution of those planets that were there apparent through the telescope, he has at last discovered two more moons. And so science is reading the heavens, and it is reading the earth. One is the science of the material expression of God, and the other is the science of the spiritual expression of God.

We may look into the scriptures, and have you stopped to consider that the Christian scriptures would never have lived for the years that they have revealed to the world the need of something better than they have had before, had there not been so much of human life reflected in them. Have you ever heard that there would be nothing in the history of human intellect if there were not some prophecy of a greater and better truth coming to that consciousness.

Friends, we are not standing still; we are before living altars. To-day is but the prophecy of to-morrow. The Jewish religion was but the prophecy of Christianity, and Christianity is nothing more than the prophecy of a larger religion still; and so the world is moving on, up the heights of time, leaving their inscriptions upon the walls of the temples of the divine spirit, and these walls are your homes, your worlds. You are writing yourselves upon every house, upon every article of furniture, upon everything with which you are coming in contact, and, above all, you are speaking the God within; the God within you is speaking the God without you—to your environment.

This much Spiritualism has accomplished as an ism. It has taught men a spiritual introspection, and the natural inference is, that it teaches man to look within himself, to look to all nature to find there the causes of her varied manifestations. These conditions apply to human life. We are standing upon the threshold of moral revelations such as have never been written in the history of man; we are standing in the doorway of a new kingdom, where new potencies will be revealed to the consciousness of man that he has never dreamed of. The signs are, the world is asking, human life is pleading for, and invoking these blessings, and they must and will come. The spirit world is invaded—your spirit world; you are in it to-day. God is here, and where he is is the spiritual realm. You are in the spirit world the moment you have cast off your mortal tenement. You have only gone into another room of God's mansion. You have only taken one step higher on the ladder of divine progress. You have only gone out of one condition into another. You have thrown off the outer garments; the living ego lives, and thinks, and loves, and grows, to-day, to-morrow, and forever.

Then what shall be our responsibility? To live the best we can, to inspire all to higher living, to write ourselves in an unmistakable language upon all with whom we are associated; and your influence goes out—out to the uttermost points of a spiritual world.

You may throw a pebble into the sea, and its ripples will reach the the opposite shore. You may throw a thought or an act upon the spiritual sea of life, and it is responded to from the kingdom of God, to its uttermost elements, and so your responsibilities are greater than ever before.

The more knowledge you have concerning the spiritual relationship between you and your fellow creatures, the responsibilities incurred are greater than ever before. If you know that you are preparing to live, death is lost sight of. You forget, too, that the religion of dogma is death, the kingdom of terrors, the black-headed monster that croons its head over the law, and inspires man with a deadly fear.

Spiritualism tells the story that death is a round in the ladder; it is the threshold over which you step into the larger life, with increasing responsibilities. It is the power that tells you of a greater world. It tells you of a nearer step to the Infinite, or a closer kinship to humanity, and those who contemplate these steps must realize that they are walking with the angel hosts. Your hands are in God's hands, and his spirit is within and over you. It is in all things, and therefore all life must be unified. Every man, woman and child are one family of spirit—universal, infinite, loving, merciful, and, over all, just. These are the lessons we must learn; these are the powers that we must acquire to make more perfect our lives.

Modern Spiritualism comes with its phenomena, not only to tell you, as it does on every Sabbath day, here upon this platform, that those who love you may come to you, to voice your needs, and to inspire you, but they come to you to tell you that you are to live, that you cannot die, that your responsibility is to prepare for life, for action, for the performance of duty, for the accomplishment of good, for the advancement of humanity, for the march toward the higher progress.

You build your own heavens, you create your own hells, and you are living according to that divine law that cannot be revoked; you are living not only amenable to the laws of the land, but you are susceptible to, and amenable to the laws that inhere your own lives, therefore justice must be the crowning kingdom into which you must enter, facing your own lives, sitting alone with your own conscience, and answering the claims of your intelligent review of your lives. Redemption comes, and it comes only through growth. Blood or water cannot wash it away; only the glory and sunlight of eternal wisdom is the redeeming balm that must ultimately save the world.

BENEDICTION:

May the light of heaven crown your lives; may the joy that you are walking with angels inspire you to noble living, and may that love of the Father of all quicken your love for one another, until there shall be a universal brotherhood, and one divine life. Amen.

THE ROSE BUD CLUB.

A New and Commendable Organization in Detroit, Mich.

As an indication of the genuine spiritual awakening that is going on in Detroit, we desire to draw special attention to the humanitarian work carried on in this city by a little band of workers whose aim and purpose is to carry sunshine and hope into saddened homes and to lend material aid to those who are in sorrow and despair, who need the kindly word, the cordial, heart-felt greeting, the helping hand of someone whose heart and sympathies may be touched and aroused by scenes of a brother's or sister's affliction.

This little band, known as The Rose Bud Club of Detroit was organized by Spiritualists, a number of its officers being spiritual mediums. Let it be remembered, however, that the Club is non-sectarian. It distributes its benefactions regardless of creed or no creed.

A weekly assessment is levied upon members and the money thus raised goes into a fund to help poor, sick and destitute children and others in need of assistance. Each club-meeting at its close is resolved into a spiritual circle where the angel messengers scatter the sweet perfumes of love, hope and cheer among the assembled members and visiting friends. The message-bearers, with unselfish devotion, render their services free of charge to aid in the raising of funds at these circles, thus exemplifying those heaven-born attributes that make all mankind feel akin with love and sympathy for each other, knowing that one divine Father is interested equally in all His children, albeit they may live upon various rounds of the great ladder of spiritual progression. The Club, we trust, is destined to play no small part in awakening an interest in the cause of Spiritualism, and in demonstrating from a material as well as spiritual standpoint the good there is in our grand philosophy.

Among the officers elected were: Mrs. Mollie LaDell-Fish, a trance speaker and message bearer of exceptional gifts, who was elected president of the club; Mrs. R. C. Barney, a recently developed medium with bright prospects as a message-bearer, was elected vice-president; Mrs. Allen, a recent convert and an ardent worker in the cause, was elected secretary; Mrs. Ida McDonald, an excellent medium, was elected treasurer. The trustees, Mrs. Dugrey, Mrs. Deck and Mrs. Bantle, are among Detroit's most respected citizens. Mrs. Dugrey and Miss Bartell, newly developed mediums, present bright prospects for useful careers in the field of Spiritualism. They are active workers in the meetings of the Club.

It is to be observed that in the organization of the Rose Bud Club, (in which the spirit world played an important part), much wisdom was displayed in the selection of officers who will do credit to the work of the club in relieving distress among the sick, the unfortunate and disheartened. Much good has already been achieved through the instrumentality of the club, and it has a neat little sum in its treasury to continue its beneficent work in the future. It has made a splendid showing for the short period it has been in existence, it having been organized on the 14th day of February of this year, 1907.

The friends who assembled at the home of Mrs. McDonald upon that memorable winter's evening had the honor of entertaining one of Grand Rapids' most noted and worthy mediums, Rev. Amanda Coffman, who suggested the name for the Club and assisted in its organization.

It is to be deplored that alms-giving is a necessity in this day and age of the world. If justice were done, no one would lack for the necessaries to sustain the material requirements of the physical. But so long as mammon rules and oppression prevails over apathy and ignorance, just so long will there be need of rescuing and providing for those who shall have fallen in the struggle for existence. Just so long will The Rose Bud Club and similar organizations find material for their activities.

But thanks to the divine inspirations from the angel world, the people are arousing from their long lethargy, and we see the dawn of better days and happier conditions for the people in the near future. The spirit of co-operation is in the air, and the people are realizing as never before, that in all avenues and activities of life, the old adage: "In union there is strength," is true.

We trust, therefore, that The Rose Bud Club, by the united wisdom, love and sympathies of its members and friends, and by the kindly aid and co-operation of the God of love and the ministrations of the angel world, it will go on, not merely in the giving of alms, but in that more exalted function of scattering and diffusing the sweet perfumes of wisdom and love among those in darkness and despair.

Let us then as Spiritualists cast aside the petty bigoted differences that may exist between us, remembering that spirit communion is beneficial only in so far as the kindly advice given to us by our departed friends and loved ones is applied to our own lives individually. If it does not make us more charitably-minded, more loving in our dispositions, more harmonious in our relations and intercourse with each other and the world at large, and less severe in our criticisms and condemnations of the weak and erring, it would be far better for the cause of Spiritualism had we never assumed the name "Spiritualist." For, Spiritualism, if it means anything, implies spirituality in the believer.

I trust, then, that those who have organized and all who will be and become most active in carrying on the good work of The Rose Bud Club may, as Spiritualists, ever manifest in their daily walk the greatest of all virtues—Charity.

Ah! could we lift the veil and see
The world above—its charity,
How oft we'd hide our face in shame,
When we'd berate another's name.

From Harmony's exalted spheres,
Kind angels come to dry our tears,
And point to us the better way,
Where Wisdom reigns and Love holds sway.

Shall we not join our angel bands,
With loving hearts and outstretched hands,
To scatter fragrance on the way,
Of those who've seen a better day.

The Rose Bud Club with angel hosts,
Proclaim glad news from coast to coast;
It matters not what be your creed,
If you but only feel your need.

While faith and hope and love prevail,
The Rose Bud Club can never fail;
Its sweet perfumes distilled above,
Recalls to mind that God is Love.

Come, then, dear brothers, sisters, all:
Come let us lift the ones who fall,
For we may feel affliction's blight,
Ere sunbeams fade in coming night.

TWO IN ONE

A COMBINATION OF

"The Question Settled" and "The Contrast" Into one Volume.

BY MOSES HULL.

This highly instructive and interesting work is a combination into one volume of two of Mr. Hull's splendid works. By this arrangement the cost is such that the reader is enabled to secure the two books complete at the same price as was formerly asked for them separately. This volume contains 461 pages and is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains an excellent portrait of the author.

THE QUESTION SETTLED

is a careful comparison of Biblical and Modern Spiritualism. No book of the century has made so many converts to Modern Spiritualism as this. The author's aim, faithfully to compare the Bible with modern phenomena and philosophy, has been accomplished. The adaptation of Spiritualism to the wants of humanity, its moral tendency; the Bible doctrine of angel ministry; the spiritual nature of man, and the objections offered to Spiritualism, are all considered in the light of the Bible, nature, history, reason and common sense, and expressed clearly and forcibly.

THE CONTRAST

consists of a critical comparison of Evangelicalism and Spiritualism. It is a most able production, and is a perfect storehouse of facts for those who wish to defend spiritualism or find arguments against the assumptions of Orthodoxy.

Correspondent writes: "The management of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, corresponded with Georgia Gladys Cooley some time ago in order to secure her services at their Mass Meeting, to be held in Star Lodge Hall, 378 South Western avenue, Chicago, Saturday and Sunday, August 31 and September 1, and found her uncertain as to that date with the promise that she would try to arrange to be present if possible. She has succeeded in exchanging that Sunday for a later date with another association and will be with us Sunday, September 1. We are delighted with the good news and know there will be a treat in store for all who hear her very convincing and spiritual messages. She is a real star in the firmament of genuine mediumship."

Mrs. M. E. Harvey writes: "Mrs. Eva Fravel of Austin, delivered an interesting and instructive address Sunday evening, August 18, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western avenue. The message bearers were the well known and popular Mrs. Susie Thompson, Mrs. Squires, and Charles E. Thompson."

S. M. Richardson writes from Clear Lake, Iowa: "Enclosed find draft in renewal of my subscription to The Progressive Thinker and the Unknown Life of Jesus. I was 89 years old on the 8th instant, and at this late day I would not think for a moment of doing without The Progressive Thinker. Keep up the fight, and the victory will be won over fakism the same as it was over free loveism, together with some other isms less injurious to the cause, but which have no place or affinity with Spiritualism, and I only hope that I may live to see the day when these barnacles may be removed and the cause left free to fulfill its mission without all these hindrances."

James E. Welker of Holland, Mich., will answer calls to lecture on Sunday in any place near his home that he can reach on Saturday. He will make no charge for his services—only actual traveling expenses to be paid.

The marriage took place on the 93rd anniversary of Mr. Wardell's birth, who, with his beloved wife, with whom he has been married 56 years, was present, also children and grandchildren's children, to the number of 30. The floral decorations were white and green, the bride dressed in white silk, carrying a bouquet of Marguerites. A vegetarian lunch was served, after which Mrs. Howe read letters from absent children, and followed with messages from arisen ones. A most beautiful and harmonious occasion.

W. F. Schumacher writes: "People of all denominations are invited to attend the services of the Spiritualistice Church of the Students of Nature which will be opened September 1, at Van Buren Opera House, cor. Peck, of St. Louis, an eloquent speaker, will be an attraction at the Sunday meetings. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, well known as a leading and popular lecturer and medium, will also participate in the proceedings. All in all this means a veritable treat for all who can be privileged to be there.

T. Wilkins writes as Secretary of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association: "On Sunday, August 25, the charter was delivered to the Church of Progressive Spiritualists amid the most beautiful harmony imaginable. My presentation speech was brief, as it should have been, ending with an appropriate poem of welcome (which will be published later), and the appreciation of the audience was manifest in the applause. This society now has a membership of 101, and is a characteristically enthusiastic gathering of very sincere and active people, who are bound to push forward. Since becoming better acquainted with the affairs of this organization I am credibly informed that the founder of this organization was Mrs. Lyons, the medium, at whose house the meetings are held. Rev. J. H. Demby has been chosen pastor, and rightly he fills the position. Next week we will give the names of the officers and more about is workings. Suffice it to say that the future for this society is very promising, and I should not be surprised that within a year's time, in membership, as well as in enthusiasm, they will be the banner auxiliary. It is hoped that other societies will get a hump on themselves and work their membership up to a higher standing."

Grand Ledge, Mich.

After a most successful season, Grand Ledge Campmeeting closed on Sunday, August 18. During the last week of camp, Mrs. R. S. Lillie of California, and Oscar A. Edgerly of Mass. were the speakers. Mrs. Lillie has always been a great favorite in Michigan, and she was enthusiastically received at her every appearance on our rostrum, her lectures were most highly appreciated by our association.

Mrs. A. G. Atcheson of Buffalo, has given the messages, and all her work has had the true ring of honesty and sincerity. Our association would recommend her as a most worthy representative of our cause.

Mr. Edgerly gave the closing address on Sunday, August 18, and it was declared by all to be a masterpiece of oratory and logic. Mr. Edgerly has been re-engaged as Chairman and speaker for the camp season of 1908.

We all feel satisfied with the outcome of our meeting. Much of its success has depended upon Mr. A. F. Clark, the efficient manager, and the interest of the most able president, Mr. J. W. Ewing of Grand Ledge.

Mr. George A. Letford made a liberal donation of money to the camp, which was publicly presented to the association by the chairman on the closing day. SECRETARY.

MY RELIGION.

What It Is and What It Is Not.

I have often been asked what my religion is. In order to make myself understood, and to give that question a comprehensive answer, I will have to go into details and see if we can understand what religion is.

To many religion is "a system of faith and worship," while to others it is the furtherance of their financial interest, but to thousands upon thousands the propagandism of religious systems means persecution, robbery, murder, and an earthly hell that makes the Christian fire and brimstone hell of little or no significance.

I do not think that any facts can be produced that will prove the contrary; for the recorded facts in history plainly show that religion has been the cause of more contentious strife, war and murder. The most terrible crimes have been committed in the name of "God" for the sake of religion—more so than any one thing else.

In the crucible of reason churchianic religion and religion in general is no more than "human effort to gain divine favor."

I don't pretend to know who this Christian deity is, and the clergymen, when closely cross-questioned, show their utter ignorance as to their "male God," yet they pretend to know so much about "him."

"Every person fashions 'God' in accordance to his (or her) own imagination."

If the word "religion" means no more than a system of faith in and worship of some deity, then I have no religion—then there is no religion worth one minute's existence; then "the destruction of Christianity is essential to the advancement of civilization;" and it is well-known religious systems have always antagonized liberty and the dissemination of knowledge.

No person has any right to judge a person's character by the religion such person may profess, or by the material wealth such person may possess. Clothes and money do not make the real person, no matter how much is said and written to the contrary.

But if "to be good and do good" is religion, then such is the only religion for humanity—such the only religion I will try to practice. But unless it can be clearly shown that religion and ethics are one and the same, then the attempt at making "to be good and to do good" a religion is futile.

Regarding everything as controlled by natural law, I have no faith in miracles. The Bible contains the pratings of an insane mind—contains the most dense ignorance and superstition as well as some very good teachings, hence cannot be regarded as totally unworthy of consideration.

It often takes a brave person to openly declare him or herself a thorough free-thinker or so-called "infidel," while it takes no more than a moral coward to make a Christian hypocrite.

Knowledge and honesty portray a thorough free-thinker, while fear, superstition and ignorance make a churchianic Christian.

SPIRITUALISM.

Of What Benefit to Humanity Is It?

The above is the heading of an article in The Progressive Thinker of August 3d, by P. O. Chilstrom, of Nevada. I could not express my convictions on the subject better than he has until he comes to those church members who, admitting communion with decarnate spirits, say that those who wish to commune with those in the flesh are only evil spirits.

This statement, by whomsoever made, all who are acquainted with spirit communication know is not the truth, and that decarnate spirits do teach truths which can be obtained in no other way,

In what other way do we know that life continues after the change called death?

In what other way do we know that there is no such place or condition as a "hell paved with infants' skulls"? Without this knowledge from such spirits, how would woman dare to bring into life beings dearer than their own selves to take the terrible risk of any hell as taught by Evangelical churches?

I have known women who have taken their lives from the earth to avoid such a necessity.

Has Spiritualism done no good to humanity? What then has caused charity in religious beliefs, as manifested since the Rochester Knockings were echoed around the world? What, then, has annihilated the Inquisition, or hidden it so skillfully that it is not to be found—except by the priestly emissaries of the Pope? What is it, then, that has so improved the disposition of human beings toward each other? What else is it that has taken the sting from Death and the victory from the grave, but the knowledge that Death is the door to a fuller life, and the grave the laundry for soiled and worn out garments, where they are cleansed and changed into beautiful verdure and flowers to dress dear old Mother Earth.

Spiritualism includes all other isms, good or bad, and is the reformatory of all mistakes and misapprehensions, and though its name may be stigmatized, and crucified as was its first, or, at least, greatest medium; still it is the truth which though crushed to earth shall rise again, for the eternal years of Good are hers. If Spiritualism is of no benefit to humanity, pray tell me what is? H. E. S.

Report from Harmony Grove Camp, California.

Harmony Grove Camp, Escondido, Cal., opened on August 11 with a most excellent attendance, there being nearly fifty people on the grounds.

The opening exercises in the morning consisted of a special flag-raising service under the auspices of John W. Ring; address of welcome by the Ex-president J. L. Monday morning at 9 o'clock Mrs. M. C. Vlasek, of Los Angeles, called the children together and organized the lyceum work. The Lyceum will meet at 9 each morning, with special exercises on August 22.

Mrs. Howe formed a developing and healing circle for the older ones, which is held out under the beautiful oak trees from 9 to 10:30 each morning. These services are followed by conferences in the Auditorium, which are well attended.

Lectures will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Howe, J. L. Dryden, W. C. Bowman, Mary C. Vlasek, Dr. Ada Patterson, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Mary Morrill, of San Diego, and Mrs. Evelyn L. Pomeroy, late of Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Sanford-Johnson, Mrs. Howe, Mrs. Vlasek and Mrs. Morrill are the message bearers, and many others on the ground are assisting.

Letter from John W. Ring.

To the Editor:—August 4th closed a truly pleasant, and as Brother Chas. A. Buss, the devoted president, said, "profitable engagement" with The First Spiritual Society, San Diego, Cal.

The following week I spent in Los Angeles, where, at the homes of Mrs. Esther Dye and Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek I was pleasantly entertained and met many of the good friends of our cause.

Sunday, August 11, was opening day of the Harmony Grove Camp, and I greatly enjoyed mingling with the friends and workers. The spot is delightful, the spirit congenial, and a splendid time seems certain. Secretary T. J. McFeron and his good wife are constant in their efforts to make all comfortable and at home, as is Mrs. Dodge, the good angel of the camp.

On the program are Mr. Arthur S. Howe, State President; Mrs. M. E. G. Howe, State Organizer; Mr. John L. Dryden, State Secretary; Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, Mrs. Sanford Johnson, Mrs. Mary P. Morrill and the camp president, Bro. Bowman.

Miss M. Belle Clark, our faithful musician at San Diego, has charge of the musical programme.

This is written on my way to Hedrick, Okla., where I meet Rev. Chism, Christian Evangelist, in a six-days' debate. He denies "The fundamental principles of Modern Spiritualism are identical with the spiritual basis of the religion of Jesus Christ," and affirms "All revelation ceased with the close of the Apostolic Age."

I trust to be the mouthpiece for "Our Moses" and others of similar ability who are as interested as ever in the progress of our cause.

After assisting in the Oklahoma State Convention, held early in September, I make a short visit to Galveston and then on east through Kansas, Missouri and Illinois to Indiana. I am expecting to return to California by November. JOHN W. RING.

Ottawa Camp Meeting.

The exercises of this camp were opened on the 17th of August, and will close on the 25th following. The exercises are conducted by H. W. Henderson, the president, in a quiet and very efficient manner. The attendance is quite fair, and much interest is manifested in the various exercises.

The public mediums are Mrs. Ella Baldwin, of Kansas City, Kan.; Mrs. A. L. Lull, Lawrence, Kan.; Mr. O. P. Dunakin, Dr. W. Espanto, St. Louis, Mo., besides a number of private mediums.

The principal speakers are Will J. Enwood, of Indiana; Mrs. A. L. Lull, Mrs. Ella Baldwin and W. P. Sailing, of Winfield, Kan. Others, however, took some part in the exercises. The program contained one feature that was peculiar, and a very good one, too. A circle was formed each morning at 9 o'clock, in which the most interested joined, and the different mediums, under the control of their guides, passed from one to another. Besides the benefits received by individuals, the evidence of spirit communion was afforded and witnessed by those outside.

Each day is occupied with lectures dealing with appropriate subjects, followed by platform tests and experience meetings. In this way each day is occupied, containing such a variety of exercises as are both interesting and instructive.

The camp is located on the public park, as beautiful as Nature could make it. It is a native forest kept in fine order by one employed by the year. It is enlivened by many species of birds, and the native squirrels are seen everywhere. Neither birds nor squirrels are molested by sportsmen or their dogs.

There is a fine, commodious pavilion with a rostrum dressed in the national colors, and near by is a large dining hall in which the meals are served, and in the vicinity of these are numerous stands of flowers and ornamental shrubbery.

A few words regarding the speakers and mediums will close this brief report.

The most prominent and vigorous speaker is Will J. Erwood, a young man highly gifted with the two essential qualities: intelligence and eloquence. There is before him a career of usefulness scarcely conceivable. These attributes are accompanied with an earnestness and zeal that make his work very effective. In saying this it does not detract anything from the other speakers, who perform their work very efficiently. And here I must say a word in regard to J. E. Rife, of Wichita, Kan. He is a table-tipping medium, a phase of mediumship that is considered by many of a lower order, but really it is one of the most efficient kind. The writer had a sitting with him, and had this been his first experience it would have convinced him beyond all doubt that he was communicating with his loved ones gone before; and so it will be with any honest, sincere and intelligent person. In saying this it detracts nothing from the efficiency of the other mediums, who do their work satisfactory to those who attend their seances.

The writer was in the camp three days and studied the workers and their work with care and scrutiny, and came away with the most favorable impressions, not only with the workers, but with their work. May the camp meetings in succeeding years maintain the present status.

Passed to Higher Spheres of Usefulness.

Dr. C. W. Burrows, widely known and respected by Spiritualists, passed to spirit life August 13, while conversing with a friend on how to best harmonize the discordant element. How beautiful it was to pass away with the cause he loved; the last on his lips and breath was nothing but love and harmony to all. In spite of all his peculiarities he had nothing but forgiveness for those who slandered him. In losing him from the mortal sight Spiritualism has lost a loyal, true and generous friend. His funeral was conducted under the auspices of Damascus Commandery, K. T., of which he was an honored member. The services were conducted by Rev. Reed Stuart, pastor of the Unitarian Church, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mary Edson, 1067 Warren ave., W. The floral offerings were numerous and lovely. Rev. Reed Stuart, in soul-stirring remarks, led his hearers to realize there was "only a thin veil between us," and that the noble man had only stepped across the golden strand to join glad hands with the dear one waiting and watching so eagerly for the glad reunion. In such a life and death we truly can claim, "Oh, Death, where is thy sting! Oh, Grave, where is thy victory!"

Mr. Oliver W. Barnard was born August 4, 1828, and passed to spirit life August 14, 1907. He inherited the mildness of Quaker parents. He became an ardent believer in and stern advocate of Spiritualism. For his abilities in being clear and farsighted, his earnestness and integrity, he was nominated for Congress. He never swerved from his knowledge of spiritual life, and after a lingering illness passed away at his home in Manteno, Ill., leaving a wife and two daughters. The transition service were conducted by Mrs. Mary B. Hill.

August 14, John Black passed to spirit life at his home, where he had spent so many years with his wife and four children, in North-East Pennsylvania. He bade good by to his wife and family and friends, and went to his spiritual home, aged 76 years. He was a true, noble, man, always cheerful, with a smile and a kindly word for all. The funeral was very largely attended, and the writer was called upon to offer the consolation that Spiritualism has to offer on all such occasions. G. H. BROOKS.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

"Priest."—Q. How shall I develop my mediumship? I send an order for your book on that subject, but any further information will be gratefully received. As a Catholic priest, I have always believed and taught the immortality of the spirit, and I feel sure there must be some means of communication with those who have gone beyond; and in spite of the prohibition of the Church of Rome to seek this intercourse, I feel that I must do so. I am certain that some spirit is wanting to communicate with me, as some five weeks ago I heard mentally, "When shall I be able to speak to you?"

A.—This is a singularly interesting example of the far-extending influence of Spiritualism. The correspondent is quite correct in his belief that he has some one on the other side desiring to communicate. Having such friends on the other side, almost insures the success which will come when the conditions on this side are met. This priest may stand on dangerous ground, and you will say he will come out of the church, or be hushed. There is no necessity of either. The spirits with whom he will converse were and are Catholics, and will teach him no new doctrine. They will hold him to the church. It is possible for him to so remain, fulfilling the functions to which he has been anointed, and yet communicate with those gone before, and it may be the greatest consolation to one "toiling here below," with the bitter waters of sacrifice of the ardent desires of the heart, to know the "loved and lost" are present, although invisible, loving with as deep affection as in the earthly days. You may by religious exactions blight and destroy the springing plant of love in this life, but the next life will atone and right the wrong.

Subscriber.—Q. My daughter has become nearly blind of cataract. A medium told her that if she would sit, the spirits would restore the sight. She sat every day, at first for fifteen minutes, at length for two hours. Then we noticed she was not right in her mind. She is obsessed, and we wonder what we can do?

A.—In the loneliness of loss of sight, the brooding in the darkness, the mind became unsettled. Seances should not be held so frequently, nor at any and all times to suit whim or convenience. If they are, the medium is almost certain to fall under undesirable influences. Whether this is regarded as "obsession" or a hypnotic form of suggestion, or attempt of various well-meaning spirit intelligences to communicate, the effects are unpleasant and unprofitable. In case of this daughter, it is recommended for her to consult an oculist and have his opinion on the promise afforded of restoration of sight by an operation. I am impressed that in this case a skillful oculist will be able to restore sight. When this is done, the other symptoms will disappear.

The seances, if held at regular, appointed hours, will be more beneficial than otherwise. The home seance should be a guarded shrine, protected from the countless influences which otherwise would disturb its harmony and destroy its value.

When it first becomes known in a family that one of its members is mediumistic, the tendency is to overdo the matter, and run it into an absurdity. I will point a typical case that came under my observation. In a family of six, a boy of fifteen years of age became a medium after the circles had been held a few times. The members were delighted and enthusiastic. They held seances every evening, for themselves and neighbors, and whenever, during the day, anyone wanted to know, and was uncertain, the medium was called, and the spirit controlled. It was an easy road to knowledge at first, but when this consultation was called fifteen to twenty times during the day, father, mother, girls and boys not taking up any task, or attempting to solve any difficulty without spirit advice, the guidance became uncertain, delusive, at last positively mischievous, and disgust took the place of the early enthusiasm. It was the communicating friends' only method to teach a lesson in self-direction. It is not well to lose our individuality and strength of will and purpose. We may consult with our invisible friends as with our visible, but we should not consult them as oracles, and take their words as infallible.

"Inquirer."—Q. About four years ago I began investigating Spiritualism and was soon convinced, and began sitting for automatic writing. I sat alone in my own room at home, every day. At the end of two weeks my hand wrote almost as fast as in common writing. Perhaps this automatic writing is blended with impressions, as I always know two or three words ahead what will be written.

At this time my spirit teacher wrote for me to discontinue writing and sit for treatment. I was ill with incipient Bright's disease and consumption. I sat an hour each day, and they did for me what doctors had failed to do: cured me perfectly. Then I resumed writing again, but while I could write faster than before, it was worthless trash. No one controlled me but idle mischief-makers. I begged for my own people to come, but they could not. I became disgusted and gave it up. I was in a large city, and contemplated going to the mountains on a prospecting tour, and thought perhaps under the conditions the results would be better, and I rid of the mischievous spirits. When I reached the mountains I resumed writing. The control said I was freed from the troublesome ones, and would now get only the truth. I soon found they were as false and misleading. They would tell me where to look for gold, and when I would not trust them, and looked for myself, they played tricks on me by making the quartz appear sparkling with specks of gold. When I reached camp with these specimens the gold particles had disappeared. How can I receive reliable communications?

A.—The same causes prevailed in this as in the preceding case. There was play and dalliance with the spirits. Even after all his experience, when this correspondent reached the mountains he at once set his spirit writers to prospecting for gold! Spirits may be self-devoting, and work for others, but is it not asking too much when they are requested to descend from the realm of ideas to the work of mining and sordid getting of wealth? Is it not clear that only spirit beings on this selfish plane would respond, and being, as they are, unreliable? This seems clear and axiomatic. If we consulted the most unreliable and irresponsible persons of our acquaintance in business matters, would we expect reliable advice? Why then expect more of these when on the other side?

If we desire reliable evidence of spirit intelligence, we must make our communion spiritual. We must go to them for spiritual knowledge. If we do this it is possible for us to work downward, and gain helpful material, information, and that most reliable. But if we begin by calling on the control for assistance in matters which are better decided by ourselves, even if wrongly decided—for we are strengthened thereby—we cannot ascend to the spiritual heights. The hosts of spirits on this plane bar the way.

A GOLDEN SHEAF.

To Our Friends: — October next will bring the 50th anniversary of our marriage, and nearly the 55th of our labor in the field of Spiritualism. In the first years we published a volume, "Blossoms of Our Spring," thinking that should the time come in the autumn of life, we would have a volume fitting the occasion of the closing years, of fruitage. A half century has almost gone by, and this 50th anniversary gives the occasion for the issuance of this volume, which we have entitled A GOLDEN SHEAF. It will be made up of selections from matter not before published, in prose and verse; selections of the best sentences and paragraphs scattered through our various books; a new spiritual song with music; illustrations of fac simile automatically written manuscripts; photogravures of our home, birthplace, and brief autobiographical sketches

We propose to make the book in paper and binding as superior as the price, $1.00, will permit. Every copy will be numbered and contain our autographs.

The number of copies will be strictly limited to the number of subscribers, and the book will not be placed on sale after publication. As we have reached the conclusion to publish at a somewhat late date, if you favor the undertaking you will confer a favor by sending your name, by card or letter, at once (the price is not now wanted).

A list of names of subscribers will be published in the volume.

We thank you beforehand for your favor in inviting our book to your homes.

HEAVEN AND HELL.

Health or disease, ignorance or culmorality or depravity are no chance occurrences, they are the results of careful training Then choose the smooth though narrow path leading to your final rest. Above all cultivate generosity, not selfishness; sincerity, not hypocrisy; simplicity, not vanity; reason, not ignorance, and superstition and the light of heaven shall shine in upon your soul, for there is no heaven or hell but that which we make within ourselves. May the spirit of love and wisdom help us to interpret these truths aright and make them our own.

In these days of enlightenment few succeed in persuading themselves to believe in a geographical heaven of silver and gold, or a hell of fire and brimstone.

It is quite natural that a man's best conception of anything should be in strict accord with his experience based as it is, upon the material things of this life; but it is no new theory which has been preached to the world that "The Kingdom of heaven is within," and if this be so, may it not be equally true that the Kingdom of hell is also within?

Man, as he stands to-day, is capable of great good with its relative reward in peace and happiness, or he may be the instrument of great sorrow to others, with corresponding reaction upon himself.

We are all dependent, one upon the other, not only for our daily bread, but for impressions which shall decide our mould and capacity for future usefulness.

The mind never rests. In every turn, in all our dealings, one with the other, we are daily gathering the material which shall determine the CHARACTER OF THAT HEAVEN OR HELL which is CONSTANTLY UNDER CONSTRUCTION. And we should never forget that while others are daily impressing us favorably or unfavorably, we are also impressing them, and furthermore, that, in sending out impressions we are bringing into play organs of a higher or lower capacity, thereby developing ourselves for or against our own interest.

It is a fact well known at least to the medical profession, that thoughts serve as atoms towards the destruction of cells within the brain substance. "We die daily," but we also are being remoulded daily and this metamorphosis of tissue goes on imperceptibly.

Thoughts tear down, but thoughts also build up, and it is the sum of our thoughts which constitute character.

It is true that all men are not born equal, for the physical and mental conditions of parents are not always equal to the same result as demonstrated by the existence of mental as well as physical imbeciles in one and the same family. Nevertheless, all men have been born with equal rights which must be respected.

Healthy thoughts as well as healthy bodies are essential—prerequisites if we hope to produce healthy offspring. There is no difference of opinion among professional men on this one point that there does exist hereditary taint, and for this self-same reason there also exists hereditary talent provided the conditions in both instances are furnished.

Now, in our ignorance, we often do that which we do not want to do, and fail to do other things we do want to do; but if we use our reason we must know that health of mind and body brings different results than disease of mind and body.

If you want good music you must have a good instrument. Having the instrument, then the next thing is to learn to get the most out of it. Now, as a matter of fact, there is no known talent which has ever charmed the human soul that every son and daughter does not possess, but there is a vast difference between the accomplishments of one compared with that of another, and it may be accounted for by the fact that you cannot go out and gather in the fruits of any harvest without having previously spent some time and pains upon it.

It is true that we all have to earn our bread and butter, for only the drones don't work, and as such they never amount to anything; but there is not one of us that cannot find some time for cultivation of talent which some who have it, would not part with for the whole world. No doubt it will be up-grade work at first, but there is no attainment which has not cost its possessor time and attention.

Many experience little pleasure outside of the gratification arising out of exercise of some minor function. It has never occurred to them that they possess all the functions with their great possibilities that anybody else has ever possessed. If you want to experience the greatest pleasure your bodies are capable of affording you, carefully train each organ so that at will you may command their functions and you have the key to the situation. But if you desire to get the most out of the various departments of the intellect, then turn your attention in that direction, and by systematic training bring each up to that standard wherein lies the secret of your success. Now, as the functions of the intellect are capable, through normal exercise, of affording their possessor infinitely more joy than any combination of bodily functions, so, in like manner, do the still higher functions of the moral constitution transcend in brilliancy any conceivable pleasurable action of which the united intellectual group is capable.

We are told to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. We can do it, but only by complying with the exhortation to "pray without ceasing. By this, however, is not meant the prayer of the lips when the heart is afar off. No! it means nothing short of that incessant yearning on the part of the soul for the food it knoweth it hath need of.

We pay great attention to the needs of our body, and often overfeed them, but our souls we starve. Thought is to the soul what bread and butter is to the body, but if our thoughts are already in demand so that you have no time or place for soul-culture, what then?

My dear brother and sister reader, there is no such a thing as chance in the accomplishment of spiritual as well as physical attainments. All are perfectly natural results of honest effort, and never attained by idleness or waiting until the eleventh hour.

Get that latter thought out of your head. If you want to tune the various functions of your personality so as to work in harmony with the divine plan, then set about doing something. Nobody else can do for you what you can do for yourself.

Health or disease, ignorance or culture, morality or depravity are no chance occurrence, they are the result of years of careful training. Then choose the smooth though narrow path leading to your final rest. Above all, cultivate generosity, not selfishness; sincerity, not hypocrisy; simplicity, not vanity; reason, not ignorance, and superstition and the light of heaven shall shine in upon your soul, for there is no heaven or hell but that which is within ourselves.

May the spirit of love and wisdom help us to interpret these truths aright and make them our own.

OCCULT POWERS.

A Strange Innate Gift, as Manifested by Miss Nellie Van Valkenburg, of Detroit, Mich.—Young Woman Repeats Every Line of a Play After Hearing It Once.

It is hard to draw the line between phenomenal gifts, artistically displayed, and genius of the first order [as set forth in the Chicago Daily Journal]. The admirers of Miss Nellie Van Valkenburg, of Detroit, all agree that this young graduate from Michigan university is possessed of wonderful powers, so unusual as to be classed with the baffling things of human experience and attainment, while a few refuse to stop short of making the claim of rare genius in behalf of Miss Van Valkenburg.

The young woman modestly refuses to be exploited as a genius. She has certain powers which she herself can not explain, and through them she hopes to become an artist in the world of dramatic expression.

To me Miss Van Valkenburg's fascinating interest lies mainly in her astonishing power of reproducing a whole play after hearing it once, almost letter perfect as to lines, and with all the characters keenly outlined and rounded out, as well as all the stage "business."

Psychologists are interested not only in the feats of memory displayed by Miss Van Valkenburg, but by her sympathetic reproduction of the plays she recites after a single hearing.

While Miss Van Valkenburg was at Ann Arbor she used to entertain her fellow-students after a visit to the theater by giving the whole play, just as she had seen it rendered the evening before. The performance was so astonishing that it became but natural that the young artist should finally, after she was graduated, take up the occupation of impersonator or dramatic reader. The few recitals she has given have aroused the admiration and the wonder of her audiences.

Here is one individual who gives an entire play, taking each character with absolute fidelity to her model, and with a verve and abandon which carries all before her. She seems to be completely possessed, or rather obsessed, by the spirit of the actor or actress whose part she is taking.

Mrs. Belle Watson Melville, of Oak Park, who has studied Miss Van Valkenburg with fascinated interest, says of her and her peculiar powers and methods.

"If the personality of a star in a play is antagonistic—or, I should say, does not impress her pleasantly—the play does not 'sink in,' and that play she cannot reproduce. When listening to a play she is absolutely lost to everything around her, and afterward she does not want to speak to anyone for hours. Not that speaking affects her retention of the play, but she says talk 'jars on her.'

"It should be remembered that she takes no notes, has never read a line of the play, and has never come in contact with a member of the cast. Yet with one hearing she is letter-perfect in all its lines and business.

"The play, once here, seems to remain in her mind intact. More than two years ago she saw Miss Ethel Barrymore in 'Sunday.' The day after she gave the play, and it is still a favorite with her and with her friends. 'She absolutely is Miss Barrymore,' says one of her admirers. One cannot believe that the actress does not really stand before one there on the little reading platform."

There is almost a suggestion of hypnotic influence in the power with which the personality of certain actresses takes hold of Miss Van Valkenburg. Is it self-hypnotism? She "is" Miss Barrymore when she reproduces 'Sunday" or "Alice Sit by the Fire," and when she plays "Merely Mary Ann" she "is" Eleanor Robson, or in "Glorious Betsy" she "is" Mary Mannering.

To study and to play a part according to her own conception of it does not take her fancy.

A strange study in human possibilities is this beautiful, educated and richly endowed young woman.

Michigan State Association.

The Michigan State Spiritualist Association held its 15th annual convention at Lansing, Mich., August 13, 1907, with 49 delegates present. It was a very harmonious convention.

The convention being called at the Medium's Home, the delegates convened there. This was done so all present could see the condition of the home, and the need of funds to repair it. From here we journeyed to Mrs. Ayers' Temple, from where another adjournment was taken to the Masonic Temple, where the convention proper was held.

The Secretary, Mrs. Spaulding, gave a fine report. Several by-laws were changed to comply with the "National," after which occurred the election of officers for the coming year.

The election resulted as follows: President, Mr. J. A. Andre of Grand Rapids; vice-president, Mrs. E. W. Sprague, Detroit; Secretary, Mrs. Emma Snow Hoyt, Battle Creek; treasurer, Mr. C. A. Clements, Lansing; trustee, C. J. Harris, Petoskey; O. E. Spaulding, Lansing; E. E. Carpenter, Detroit.

Our board meeting occurs August 26, so you will pardon me for such a brief report, as I am not in possession of any of the books—will do better in the future. My heart is in the work.

MRS. EMMA SNOW HOYT.
Battle Creek, Mich. Secretary.

NO IMMORTALITY FOR THEM.

Crime Is Everywhere in the Large Cities on the Increase—These Demons on Earth Will Pass to Spirit Life and Finally Be Extinguished, No longer a Conscious Entity.

To the Editor:—As widely reported, when the grand jury in New York, August 13, began its hearing of the newly found evidence which is expected to start a string of Armenian man hunters toward the "little room of the iron door" at Sing Sing, it had something more tangible and perhaps more convincing than the mere word of trapped conspirators to go by. It had the deadliest collection of murder tools that has ever been found under one roof in New York City.

Acting upon information embodied in the statement of Kissak Jelalian, a squad of detectives went to a dingy tenement at 317 East Forty-ninth st. On the ground floor of this building is an Armenian restaurant, where, it is now known, many killings have been plotted by the dreaded Hunchakists.

The detectives went straight to the coal cellar. In a bin they found a ton or more of hard coal. Lump by lump they removed the coal. Underneath was a cunningly devised trapdoor and there was a veritable Bluebeard's tool chest.

Arranged neatly in rows were knives with poisoned tips—deadlier than a rattler's fangs; revolvers of a certain unique type, like the revolver that killed the millionaire rug merchant, Tavishanjian, in Union Square three weeks ago; bottles filled with drugs, the vapors of which are fatal; bombs enough to blow an ordinary building into powder. It was the workshhop of the Hunchakists that the detectives had unearthed under a commonplace coal bin.

Medieval ingenuity had been combined with modern invention to insure a perfect job every time the agents of the society might go after a marked man. For example, there were three slender little files, a scratch on the skin with the point of one of which would mean death, for each file's tip had its coating of poison, just as Jelalian had said.

Poisoned Daggers in Collection.

Three long daggers were similarly treated, so that the wounds would be fatal, even though the blades might fail to reach a vital organ. Under the seal of three well stoppered bottles was hydrocyanic acid, better known as prussic acid, even the fumes of which are dangerous.

There was an iron bomb and powder to fill it, with fuses and other attachments to set it off. Wooden molds for making bombs, a steel chisel, a bottle of sulphate of antimony, and a jar of unidentified white powder were also found.

Those fiends of darkness are past redemption. They are degenerates in all respects. They will pass into the region of souls, live for a while in darkness and gloom, and then be gradually extinguished. They have followed closely the destructive processes of nature, and have undoubtedly passed the point where redemption is possible, and their dissipation as living souls will surely follow. The demons of earth will not long survive the death of the body.

Prof. Lockwood has been engaged to attend the session throughout, and will deliver three of his masterly addresses.

No test medium has been engaged yet, and it may be that G. H. Brooks, President of the State Association, will follow Prof. Lockwood's addresses with his message work.

This is an opportunity not offered to the friends in the Northwest very often, to hear this most remarkable thinker and speaker, so come and enjoy the feast of good things.

G. H. BROOKS.
President of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association.

Queen City Park.

Under the best possible conditions of climate for camp life, the week's program has been carried out literally. August 13, Rev. B. F. Austin delivered the first of his course of lectures, the second being given August 14. His work here in previous seasons made him a favorite with many who looked forward with pleasure to hearing him again.

August 15, the address was given by Dr. B. N. Gould; spirit messages by Mrs. Effie I. Chapman, who never fails to satisfy even the most skeptical.

August 16, Rev. B. F. Austin again took the platform with one of his stirring discourses; Mrs. Chapman giving spirit messages. August 17, Mrs. Chapman gave both the address and messages.

August 18, Sunday, the forenoon lecture was by President A. F. Hubbard, Mrs. Chapman giving messages. Afternoon, Rev. B. F. Austin kept the audience at close attention by his earnest address, followed by faithful Mrs. Chapman with messages.

The audience has continued good all the week, and if those who wander in from the crowds of pleasure-seekers came to scoff, they surely have something to reflect upon when they go away. The good work goes on quietly, but surely; spiritual evolution is in the air, a part of the inevitable progression of the age, contagious even when not hastened by exposure to evidence of spirit return.

The stockholders held their annual meeting last week, and with one exception, re-elected the former board of officers. President, A. F. Hubbard, of Tyson; vice-president, Dr. S. M. Gould of Randolph; John Withell of Montreal; secretary, Mrs. Effie I. Chapman; directors, Dr. Gould, A. F. Hubbard, James Crossett, Jay Smith, Don H. Chapman, John Nuthill, and Frank Gillette.

Mrs. Mary Eddy Huntoon of Rutland is the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Eugene Fairbanks, and has arranged to hold several seances for materialization this week. Such are much needed here to prove the fact of that phase of manifestation. The Ladies' Aid's Annual fair will be held August 22, and it is expected to be as pleasant and profitable as former occasions have been.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as to Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "other-worldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Condition of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

Price, $1.50; postage, 10 cents.

FUTURE LIFE

In the Light of Ancient Wisdom and Modern Science.

BY LOUIS ELBE.

This is the authorized translation of the famous book which has been creating so wide a stir in scientific and religious circles throughout France, under the title "La Vie Future." It will be received with equal interest here, and will arouse very general discussion, as the subject is one engaging not only scientists but laymen in ever-increasing numbers.

The fundamental question of the "Immortality of the Soul" has disturbed the great thinkers of all ages, and for the solution of this eternal enigma humanity still seeks in vain.

This volume offers for the first time a complete presentation of all the available evidence hitherto to be found only in the most scattered and inaccessible forms. With great care and exactness M. Elbe has arranged a plain statement of the discoveries, theories, and ideas of the greatest investigators together with his own illuminating views and comments, and a mass of authentic information regarding the beliefs of the primitive races.

The book is divided into two parts, the first part being devoted to the Ideas of the Survival as considered by the Primitive races, and the second to Deductions drawn from the Fundamental sciences. With Portrait of the author. Price $1.20; postage 10c.

LILY DALE CAMP.

Our Correspondent Bids a Tender Farewell to Its Scenes and Associations.

It has been Jubilee Week at Lily Dale—things hoped for have come to pass, with greater to follow.

The speakers we have had gave their best efforts, and in leaving carried with them a few of our shekels and many of our good wishes and blessings.

W. J. Colville, that great illumined mind and gentle, harmless man, has delivered a number of lectures which are among the gems of the season. Dr. J. C. Batdorf, of Grand Rapids, yielded his share, not only giving us one of his best lectures, but subscribing generously to the debt fund, including his fee, but not his reward, for he has now the love, confidence and esteem of these who, previous to his coming among us, knew him only by reputation.

Mattie E. Hull, the broken link "Our Moses" left as one of his legacies, was another welcome worker which the week brought, and we were profited by the benefits of the blessings culled from her late bereavement, with the experiences which her many years of faithful services have ripened.

Our morning lessons for this week are the study of the gospels according to Saint Lockwood, for the Doctor has come, bringing infinite intelligence done up in glass tubes, and heavenly messages by wireless telegraphy, teaching us of the universal mind in mud and matter.

Last, but not least, Mrs. Margaret Gaule-Reidinger is half here—her "better half" she left behind, but we hope some day to welcome her good husband on these grounds.

She brought her best frocks, sunniest smiles and latest edition of her "Blue Book" corrected to date. It is published by her faithful band of spirit guides, printed upon the pages of the memories of those who receive her messages, stitched with Indian-red silk cords of sympathy and bound in the ties of love and appreciation. She never copyrights her "Blue Books," for she fears no imitators, and has none. Mrs. Reidinger is ever ready to help, and her work is not by any means finished when she has given her messages after the afternoon lectures, or taken entire charge of an evening's seance—nay, she is constantly surrounded by people hungry for a word. She writes in season and out of season, and like great scintillating lights flung from electric currents, she flashes her messages, bringing greetings and advice from the beyond, with instantaneous readiness and unfailing correctness, convincing scoffers that truly a great prophetess and a seer is among us.

In keeping our eyes on the stars of the platform we need not forget less luminaries but no less effective aids to the success of our Assembly. The Thought Exchange is held Wednesday and Saturday evenings. Here mind is pitted against mind from the sublime to the ludicrous,—from the polished, masterly manner in which the leader, Dr. Warne, knows so well how to clothe his thoughts to the happy way describing the tendencies to crowd seance rooms when sensational exhibitions are given at a dollar a give, as discussed by one earnest and disgusted sister stating with authority, that it was like a lot of pigs rushing into hot swill, and while they were getting their noses burned there were plenty more to take the places of those who were scorched. In discussing the effects of bad heredity, this same dear sister assured us of her readiness to stop the evil of producing children from debased stock, and when some drinking tenants she used to have had the "stork" call at the house every year, while the parents were drinking and fighting daily, she besought the police and health department to put a stop to it; but they told her they were powerless, and in five years five children were born in that family.

The seances in Library Hall have been another of the special features of the season. They have been conducted under the supervision of Mrs. Stephens, of Washington, and Mrs. Nicholson, of San Diego, Cal. Mrs. Nicholson came to us as a pleasant surprise from the Pacific coast. No work has been too arduous, nor any responsibilities too numerous, for her to shoulder. One of our most successful evening entertainments was carried on under her management. She has great versatility, dainty perceptions, and is an unusually fine medium, with excellent record from home.

The Atlantic coast also brought us one of her prize mediums in Mrs. Stephens and laid her at our door, a willing sacrifice. We do not understand how she manages so easily to crowd twenty-four hours' work into twelve, but she does. Her time is in constant demand for private sittings, and the messages her guides bring are as helpful as a great lecture, and as cheering as a morning sunbeam. The gold mines they locate are within the soul of the sitter, and they pick the winner in the Race of Life without a miss. You will see the conqueror by peering into the looking-glass and running the race set before you, patiently, persistently, running to win, you cannot fail.

Any assembly would be blest had they in their midst two workers as helpful, as spiritual and clear, as are these our handmaidens. May their numbers increase and multiply.

A real source of income has been our accident insurance policies. We sell them for ten cents, insuring against bodily injury sustained through flights of fancy or blindness from failing to see a point, and various other ills. This policy promises less and takes more than any other. It assumes no obligations and there is nothing binding about it but the string it is tied with. Its frontispiece reads, "I was a stranger and ye took me in." It gives you an assortment of hearty laughs for your money, and is an ingenious new way for you to earn dimes at your bazaar or social. Sample policies will be sent you on application with ten cents inclosed. Address the compiler of these "memoirs" at Lily Dale, N. Y., or Chicago.

Our most helpful allies are the Ladies' Auxiliary. These, our willing and ever-ready co-workers, are the mighty stay of the trustees. They sell all the tickets and collect the fees at the entertainments, classes, seances and dances, pick up the odds and ends which would otherwise be overlooked, gather up the local talent, mix them and serve at delightful evening entertainments with most satisfactory results in the way of both recreation and money. They give the glad-hand to visitors with unstinted abandon, and do the hundred and one things which need constant attention at a gathering so large as ours. Mrs. Nutting, the president, Mary Hardenburg and Carrie Read, the vice-presidents, Mrs. Mary Clark, secretary and high factotum, and Mrs. Alger, the treasurer, fill their own places, and fill them well, as different-colored flowers in the same bouquet, each with its own specific perfume giving rich fragrance in abundance.

The heavy burden of debt under which Lily Dale has been staggering for the past year is almost lifted. One year ago we agreed to pay $10,000 for notes due Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, together with the stock she holds in the Assembly, amounting nearly to $10,000 alone. This entire amount has been nearly subscribed and paid, leaving less than a thousand dollars to wipe out the entire debt. We doubt if any Spiritualist society or camp can show a beter record. The noble self-sacrifices on the part of the many who love Lily Dale have made this splendid victory possible. Mr. Archibald Clark, Mrs. Pettengill's son-in-law and agent, has rendered us every facility and courtesy, and extended the time for payments so as not to crowd us unduly, for which he deserves the thanks of all. In addition to this we have met every other financial obligation promptly and still have money in the treasury.

Lily Dale has had a most successful season, due largely to the splendid management of our greatly beloved president, Mrs. Esther C. Humphrey. Though but little used to the arduous details of prosy business affairs, she cheerfully assumed the burden and proved herself more than equal to the heavy task. She, it is, who has prepared the exceptionally fine program, and with her husband arranged for our artistic music. She has devoted sleepless nights that she might better solve the difficult problems of making everybody comfortable and happy. She met our speakers at the trains and was there to speed the departing, attended the classes and lectures, supervised the work in the office, signed official papers and documents, and kept her finger on the pulse of every department in all its details, from the making of beds and giving everybody the east-front sunniest rooms to the best conditions possible to help the speakers—brooding over all with benignant power and in calm, masterful peace. She has been most ably assisted by Dr. Geo. B. Warne, our treasurer, the great balance-wheel of our Assembly. He brings to the work the mature experiences of years—a wise counselor and unraveler of knotty problems, a shrewd financier, a conservative, fearless, courageous, aggressive leader, a most splendid speaker, and a persistent foe of deceit and fraud in any guise, ever alert, persistent and with untiring energy, giving all he is and has, to Lily Dale,

We would not forget to give honorable mention to Mr. Lee Morse, another trustee, who, as chairman of the committee on concessions, fills one of the most difficult places on the board. He it is who has decorated our Auditorium with artistic touch and magic wand—you don't know where the particular spots are; you only see that the decorations were never more pleasing to the eye than this year. He drapes cotton till it looks like clouds, then throws in a few flowers, pictures, doves and cattails hit or miss, till each fits into place and you feel you are looking at real art.

Each of the other gentlemen on the board of trustees is doing his very best, conscientiously and honestly to do his work and add luster to the fair name of Lily Dale and happiness to its guests. They richly deserve the full confidence they enjoy.

As every rose has its thorn, so Lily Dale has had a veritable thorn in the flesh, in one of its trustees, its present secretary, Mrs. Laura G. Fixen. She has caused a lot of friction and constant criticism by her total lack of policy and 31 other graces absolutely needed to be a popular member of this board. She says things so shockingly plain and is always at variance with everybody else's opinions, instead of making them feel they are just right. She presents the truth as she sees it, naked and unadorned, with seeming disregard of the fact that the majority like this elusive goddess, adorned in wide-flowing robes, beautiful to the eye, hiding her form and giving but faint hints at her presence. Then, our secretary is very unsociable, keeps no flattery and smiles on tap—so agreeable to the vanity of both sexes. She did not belong at Lily Dale (everybody but she knew that), but she was so dense that she went on with her work, never seeming to feel the wrath was gathering about her hard head, and it was difficult to make her understand that "for the peace of the people" she must retire, which she did very reluctantly. In declining re-nomination at the annual meeting, this week, she brought the only real relief she has ever given to Lily Dale—a wiser and a more acceptable successor was chosen in Mr. F. Martin, of Elyria, O., who will no doubt more than make up for the numerous shortcomings of an inefficient and unpopular secretary, who "also ran," but was fortunately snowed under by an overwhelming majority. The rest of the former trustees were re-elected almost unanimously, and thus was the seal of the hearty approval of those for whom they have toiled set upon their self-sacrificing labor of love.

And so, dear Lily Dale, rid of your two greatest troubles, may you rise to higher heights and bring untold blessings to the thousands who shall enter your gate.

In closing my desk I take with me my office motto: "Every Knock is a Boost," and leave to my successor several barrels of splendid advice, given by brains wiser than my own. I guarantee the quantity, and as for quality, it is good as the day I received it, for I have never used a bit of it. I have followed another light and taken other counsel, and by and by when I have made a few hundred more failures I may be wiser. I have learned to love Lily Dale, and also her people, and I wish to give hearty thanks to the many dear friends who voted against me—they b. atem - .esnundap dre netretp ensh did me greater service than they dreamed of. The love I have given to the work is the love I keep, and for every thorn which has pricked me I have found a rose. The roses I have gathered and shall keep them—always.

In bidding farewell to my co-workers at Lily Dale it is with feelings of deep, deep regret, and best wishes for all good to come unto them and those whom they shall lead.

And now, Brother Francis, the wind is nearly all gone and the point of my pencil dulled. I am sitting in the George Eliot Room—the pride and glory of the Philanstery, that Jerusalem of all good Roycrofters. I am the guest of Alice and Elbert Hubbard, at East Aurora, and in an hour am to address their convention, so I must close for this season.

To Lily Dale and all the people within her gates I leave my heart's tenderest love. May the spirit of the great men and women who through all times have suffered and thought and toiled and bled, misunderstood and rejected, to make the path a little broader and easier for other feet to follow, imbue you with their sublime spirits of self-sacrifice, inspiring you with courage to follow in their footsteps and make a few tracks of your own, marching fearlessly onward, looking not behind, but ever onward, even unto the coming of the morn. So shall your legacy to humanity be for its betterment, and your name shall be whispered in tones of love as it is hid in the hearts of the children of generations to come, and this shall be the meaning of thy soul.

LAURA G. FIXEN.

HARRISON D. BARRETT.
600 Pa. Ave., N. E., Washington, D.C.

ONSET BAY CAMP, MASS.

It is Thriving, with a Rich Variety of Interesting Matters.

To-day, August 16, Mr. Alfred Terry, of Washington, D. C., was the speaker for the afternoon. Mr. Terry read a poem, after which he took for his subject "Love."

Love, the Infinite Creator of all life—we can only understand love inasmuch as love is developed within us; we can only understand God just so much as God is developed within us. Love is the great developer of life; it clothes the earth in all colors of vibration; it satisfies the innermost longing of man's soul.

The great trouble with the world to-day is the loss of soul. We lose sight of our souls. The soul is the connecting-link between you and the world beyond. Find your soul and you find the key that will unlock all that is beyond, and that which is best in this world. We should lift our thoughts up into the Infinite thought, that it may throw its radiance over us; that we may bathe our thoughts with this love.

Saturday was Lyceum Day, and a great deal of credit is due to the tireless worker for the children, Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, who is manager and conductor of the Lyceum. Certainly no one devotes more time to the interests of the children than Mrs. Allyn, and it is not saying too much when I say the children all love her.

Mr. A. J. Maxham deserves more than mere mention for his singing at the Lyceum, because no matter how many duties or calls he may have from the Association, he is always at the Lyceum, not only to sing, but to bring sunshine and cheer to Mrs. Allyn (and others) with his smile and good word.

This morning, Sunday August 8, a good-sized audience was in attendance when the New Bedford Band commenced its concert in the Auditorium. After a fine concert, lasting an hour, Dr. Fuller presented as the speaker for the morning Miss Susie C. Clark, of Cambridge, one of our best New England speakers, and one that is a favorite at this camp, and is always sure of a good audience. Miss Clark opened the meeting by reading a poem, followed with an invocation after a selection by Mr. Maxham.

Miss Clark chose for her theme "The Religion of the Future," and, while conceding that the movement known as the Modern Spiritualism exhibited signs of decadence, she claimed that its glorious principles were permeating the whole intelligen world more and more; that this epoch was but the shadow which precedes a mighty dawn, when a more ripened form of Spiritualism would be recognized by the entire race, but it would be a larger, broader, grander Spiritualism than we know to-day, and it must be lived by its every least exponent, in the utmost spirituality of life, in unfaltering aspiration, in devoted service to humanity.

At the close of the address Mr. Terry closed the meeting with singing, the music written by Miss Clark.

At 1 p. m. the Band gave another grand concert. At 2 p. m., before one of the largest audiences of the season, Mrs. Helen Temple Brigham spoke—the first time since 1887, and by the reception it showed that she was not forgotten. Many friends of the speaker were present that had not visited Onset for years. After a selection by Mr. Maxham, Mrs. Brigham took for her subject "The Earth is the Lord's, and the Fullness Thereof," and gave an address that should have been listened to by every Spiritualist in this country. It was a lecture that was all Spiritualism. It taught Spiritualism as it should be practiced, and if lived up to would make Spiritualism the grandest religion on the face of this earth. It was educational. It was full of grand thoughts.

The speaker closed her address by improvised poems, the subject given by the audience.

Mrs. Kate M. Ham, of Haverhill, followed the lecture by giving messages to many.

In the evening Mrs. Ham held her last seance in the arcade, before a large audience.

Monday we held a conference again, and many of the friends were present, glad to have one again. Mr. A. J. Maxham was the singer; he also was the chairman of the afternoon, and he was greeted with applause when he was so announced. The following people took part, and helped to make it one of the best of the season: Mr. Ripley, Mrs. Coggeshall, Mrs. Gill, Mrs. Hattie C. Mason, Mr. Magoon and Mrs. Lyons.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. Harrison D. Barrett was the speaker. After a selection by Mr. Maxham, a poem by Mr. Barrett, he took for his subject "The Birth-right of the Soul." The theme is as old as human consciousness, and has been considered by all great minds of the past, and they have left a record for you and me to peruse, and to compare our record with. We must first try to find out what the soul really is. Many think that spirit and soul are the same, but I hold they are as widely apart as daylight and darkness. The soul is the real living principle. I believe life is without beginning and without ending; life IS, and because life IS, you and I ARE.

The meeting closed with singing by Mr. A. J. Maxham.

Tuesday a most delightful entertainment was given by the children of the Lyceum, and under the direction of Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn; most of the pieces, recitations, dialogues, etc., were written by Mrs. Allyn—the Teddy Bear conversation being particularly interesting. The Making of the Colonial Flag, the Military Drill, singing by Mr. Maxham, violin solos by Mr. Elmer Bowers, the costumed recitations by Miss Stratch, of New Bedford, and little Chester Smith's recitations, all went to make a delightful program.

Wednesday was G. A. R. Day, and about every seat in the large Auditorium was filled. The children of the Lyceum, with flags, led by Mrs. Allyn, Mrs. C. S. Hatch and Miss Rita Hoppe, marched to the Common at 2:15 p. m., where Post and Corps members from many surrounding towns had congregated, and escorted the allied bodies to the Auditorium, which was beautifully decorated with Old Glory, flowers of all kinds, with a beautiful bouquet of roses. The day was under the management of Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn, and the following took part in the entertainment: Mr. Maxham welcomed the friends in behalf of the Association; the children of the Lyceum gave a lesson on patriotism and sang a song to the tune of "Yankee Doodle," both original, by Mrs. Allyn. Mrs. Weston spoke most eloquently of the flag; Mr. H. D. Barrett made a most stirring speech, that just captured the old veterans, and they were more than pleased. Comrade A. J. Maxham then sang "Who Saved the Left;" Col. Scott responded, the enemy was driven back and the victory was ours. Mr. Maxham acted this out to perfection, and the veterans just "howled." He, of course, had to respond with another war song. Mr. Gleason, of Amherst, told of relic of the Revolutionary flag. Mrs. Allyn gave an improvised poem on "We Drank at the Same Canteen," and the "Veteran's Dream," with Mr. Triton as the "veteran," made the picture complete.

The veterans and relief corps then marched to the church, where a bountiful collation was spread for them.

Take it all together, it was one of the best days held.

All are regretting that the camp is closing, and do hope that next year the season will be longer.

The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

OUR CHILDREN.

Hints From Practical Experience for Parents and Teachers.—By Paul Carus.

In this little book "Our Children," Paul Carus offers a unique contribution to pedagogical literature. Without any theoretical pretensions it is a strong defense for the rights of the child, dealing with the responsibilities of parenthood, and with the first inculcation of fundamental ethics in the child mind and the true principles of correction and guidance. Each detail is forcefully illustrated by informal incidents from the author's experience with his own children, and his suggestions will prove of the greatest possible value to young mothers and kindergarteners. Hints as to the first acquaintance with all branches of knowledge are touched upon—mathematics, natural sciences, foreign languages, etc.—and practical wisdom in regard to the treatment of money, hygiene and similar problems. 207 Pages. Price, cloth, $1.00.

DR. MINOT J. SAVAGE.

Not an Agnostic, but an Admirer of Herbert Spencer.

To the Editor:—In your last issue I was very much interested in reading W. J. Colville's lecture, but in it occurs one error; he states that "it was well known that Dr. Savage's tendency of thought was decidedly agnostic, and for many years during his popular ministry in Boston he was largely a champion and exponent of the philosophy of Herbert Spencer."

Dr. Minot J. Savage was far from being agnostic in his views; he was decidedly liberal in every way, and I could not help noticing during the twenty years I had the privilege of hearing his great discourses in Boston, that he grew more liberal and spiritual in his ideas and views, as he often said he "was after the truth," no matter where it prevailed. Dr. Savage was a great admirer of Herbert Spencer, as he is to-day, and also of Robert G. Ingersoll, but it does not necessarily follow that because he is an admirer of these two great thinkers, he must believe just as they did.

I hold in my hand a discourse by Dr. Savage, on Herbert Spencer, preached by him in New York in December, 1903, the Sunday following the passing away of Herbert Spencer at Brighton, England. This sermon is now out of print. I will just give a few quotations to show what Dr. Savage thought at that time of Herbert Spencer:

"In England, in the city of Brighton, last Tuesday, the 8th of December, rested from his labors the greatest thinker of these recent centuries—if, indeed, not the greatest of all the centuries. It has been my personal pleasure and privilege to have met him twice. He visited this country in 1882. I was one of those fortunate enough to be present at the farewell dinner which was given to him at Delmonico's in this city on the evening of the 9th of November in that year. The next year I spent with him at the United Service Club in Pall Mall, the afternoon of the 9th of September. Mr. John Fiske had given me letters of introduction, and I had a long and intimate conversation with him in regard to the great themes of which he was the exponent. Spencer originated, created, the great scientific philosophy of evolution. If you should ask the first person you met on the street after going out of here, to whom we owe evolution, the chances are that he would say Darwin, but, as Mr. Fiske has said over and over again, and with emphasis, 'Nothing of the sort.' Spencer has outlined his whole scheme of evolution and wrought out in detail certain important parts of it years before (at least four years before) he heard of "The Origin of Species" of Darwin.

"A good many people may think it is strange that I should think of him as having rendered religion any service at all. He has been spoken of as an agnostic and an enemy of religion, and yet note this one thing: he is going to be recognized in the future as the man who has rendered a greater service to the religious life of the world than any other who has lived for a thousand years, I care not in what department of life he may have wrought out his work.

"He has demonstrated beyond any rational question that the one most certain item of all human knowledge is the existence of "an infinite and Eternal Energy from which all things proceed." We religionists call it God, that is all the difference.

"But some of you who have read Spencer may be saying to yourselves, 'But he told us that this Infinite and Eternal Energy was unknowable, and he also denied personality and consciousness as the attributes of it.'

"Will you think for a minute and see what he did teach and say to these matters? I know not only from the study of his books, but from his personal utterance, for he told me a good many things which then had not been published, but which since have become a part of the works he has given to the world.

"There are a great many people disturbed over the question as to whether God is personal and conscious. I will tell you what Herbert Spencer said to me, that he did not think it reasonable to think of this Infinite and Eternal Pewer as personal or conscious in the sense that we, in our human understanding of the definition, would give those terms. God is not personal in the sense that he was born and is going to die, or is outlined or limited as we are; he is not conscious in the sense we are. But he made one of the grandest affirmations of the world, and if you wish to understand Spencer, note this: He said, 'It seems to me reasonable to think that this Infinite and Eternal Power is as much above and beyond what we mean by personality and consciousness as we are above vegetable growths.' A grand affirmation, do not you see, and not a denial at all. This Power includes in himself all we mean by personality and consciousness, and perhaps infinitely more.

"Herbert Spencer worked for the discovery of Truth, and Truth has wrought all these wonderful results. He may be regarded as the enemy of Theology, that doctrinal conception, some other myth or legend or tradition, just as the light, when the sun comes up in the morning, is the enemy of every shadow; but there has not lived for a thousand years a man who has done so much for the establishment on firm, scientific, unshakable foundations of the great essential eternal principles of the religious life."

I have just given a few scattered quotations from this great discourse of Dr. Savage on Herbert Spencer, and anyone can see that Dr. Savage was simply a great admirer (as everyone ought to be who is a thinker or investigator) of this wonderful thinker, Herbert Spencer.

SECRET OF LIFE FOUND IN OXYGEN, SAYS LOEB.

California Biologist Tells Scientists of His Successful Efforts to Generate Marine Worms and Mollusks.

Prof. Jacques Loeb, of California, the most talked-of biologist in America because of his experiments in creating life by artificial means, addressed the zoological congress in Boston August 21. Though his address was primarily intended for the section of the congress engaged in physiological studies, it was necessary to suspend all other sections that their members might hear Professor Loeb.

Dr. Loeb traced his more recent studies in this interesting field of zoology. It was in the fall of 1900 that he first came into prominence after a year's work at the marine biological laboratories at Woods Holl, where he had been working on an artificial fertilization of the eggs of sea urchins. Since that time he has been constantly before the public.

Salt a Vital Agent.

At that time his experiments were hailed as modern miracles. He found that by contact with a simple solution of salt the eggs of sea urchins could be developed into life without any touch of the sperm cell. Earlier in his career, when experimenting on jellyfish, Dr. Loeb learned that a decapitated jellyfish could be restored to life by immersion in a salt solution, which led him to conclude an electrical current had been set up and that the underlying cause of vital action must be electricity.

Oxygen the Prime Factor.

Since then, the speaker said, his views had been modified and his methods perfected. He now thinks that oxygen is the all-important factor in the fertilization of the ova. Modern teachers of physiology no longer hold that oxidation is for the purpose of producing heat, for oxidation occurs in animals and plants that do not need to keep up a constant temperature.

Whatever the fertilization material is, it must be something nearly the same with the eggs of all species, otherwise it could not be understood why animals, widely separated in habits and structure, as crinoids and mollusks, should be able to fertilize the eggs of the star fish.

Success in Experiments.

Dr. Loeb formerly treated the eggs with what he terms "hypertonic" sea water, or sea water whose osmotic pressure has been raised a definite amount. But he now finds that he obtains better results by the introduction of a so-called fatty acid, because a combination of the two methods tends to the development of a more normal creature. Marine worms, star fishes and mollusks have been generated in this way. He modestly concluded: "It is obvious that we are now in possession of a method that allows us to imitate more completely the action of the sperm cell than ever did the previous method with 'hypertonic' sea water."

HE LOVED THE WOODS.

He loved the woods, and almost ev'ry day
Would find him strolling there, heart-free and gay,
Through shady bowers. Each leaf an'tree
Seemed mos' to know him; seemed as if he Was kith an' kin to birds, an' such as they.

Folks called him "Nature's Fool," and loved to play
Their jokes an' tricks on him; an' then he'd stay
Down where the forest brook runs wild an' free;
He loved the woods.

Sometimes he'd be for weeks an' days away,
An' folks as didn't understand would say,
"Jim's got another broodin' spell";
but we—
The buds an' flowers, ferns an' things an' me—
We knew; we knew what led his steps astray:
He loved the woods

MY SPIRIT WIFE.

One day in mid-summer,
With flower-laden breeze,
Peacefully I lay dreaming
Beneath the shady trees.

Dreaming, did I say, Love?
Or was it your face came,
And did your loving lips
Whisper softly my name?

Did your pure white soul turn
From your spirit realm of bliss,
In answer to my earthly call
For your tender love and kiss?

Do you know how I miss you?
How my heart is ne'er more glad;
How music, birds and flowers serve
To make it more lone and sad?

Say, I have not been dreaming
That you came from your spirit home
To kiss my lips and whisper,
"I am still thy very own."

Oh! love, My love, it was not a dream.
I saw your sweet face, certain;
You were smiling and waving, Sweetheart,
As the angel drew the curtain.

Are there Any Christian Nations?

No "Christian Nation" Ready to Stop Raising Hell.

Edward Atkinson says: "The United States expended, from 1898 to 1905, the sum of $1,200,000,000 for war purposes." We have 58 battleships and cruisers. They originally cost $129,310,720. For maintenance and repairs they cost scores of millions more. But a few years are required, after the finishing of a warship, before it is declared obsolete and is sold at a nominal price. The battleship "Texas" cost $2,500,000, and was condemned and sold for old junk. Uncle Sam now has contracts in force for the payment of $50,000,000 for new warships. Not long ago eighty British warships, which cost to build $50,000,000, were condemned as defective, and were sold for $40,000. The Rev. H. W. Thomas, D. D., of Chicago, recently said: "Our government is spending $200,000,000 annually on its army and navy. England is spending $300,000,000. The other countries spend, all together, $1,500,000,000, hence the grand total of annual tribute to the war god is $2,000,000,000."

These are "Christian nations"—so called. But can a nation be truly Christian which stands ready on the slightest provocation or pretence, to fly at its fellow-man and destroy his property, and kill him and all his loved ones, and perpetrate unspeakable horrors?

Emperor William, of Germany, loudly professes Christianity; so does the Czar of Russia; so do all the rulers of the so-called Christian nations, yet every one of them is armed "to the teeth" and stands ready to shoot, tear, rend and destroy his fellow-man on a little fancied insult, or for trade or more territory, or for military "glory." Is this the true Christian spirit? If so, it is a savage, bloody one. Is it true, as often charged, that orthodox Christians are more warlike and more bloodthirsty than Quakers, Spiritualists, Theosophists, Christian Scientists, Unitarians, Universalists, and other non-orthodox sects who are classed as heretics? It would seem so.

Again, who pays the enormous war expense? The working people and the middle classes chiefly. Who goes into the army, does the fighting, and is killed and wounded? The poor, the common people. Have they any grievance against the people they go forth to murder? No, none whatever. The so-called "enemy" are strangers whom they have never seen and who have done them no harm. They, too, are of the poor and the working classes.

Why, then, does not the savagery of war cease? Why is not this mountain of waste stopped, and these thousands of millions put into the school fund, the millions of wretched children now in the city slums taken out and educated, and they be given better environments, and the teachers and others who work to save lives and make them better be pensioned, instead of keeping up bloody wars and pensioning men whose profession is to kill people?

Because "Christian kings" and generals want "glory," power and luxury, and the "Christian millionaires" want to become billionaires. These are the men who talk patriotism and the "spread of Christian civilization." These are the men who talk eloquently about "Old Glory," and one pretext or another inflame the passions of their dupes, and then hurl thousands of working men against other thousands in deadly, hellish conflicts.

Is there any ground for hope that war will soon be abolished?

No, not until the masses learn the truth as above stated; not till the deluded masses get their eyes open to the truth that the bloody, fighting orthodox church, now masquerading as Christian, is an aggregation of bigoted religionists or money-greedy hypocrites.

The liberal religious sects, without exception, oppose war and are doing their utmost to promote the co-operative brotherhood idea. They are preaching arbitration, brotherhood, reciprocity and love. Over against them stand the orthodox churches—rich, proud, selfish, and chockful of fight. As their sacred scriptures teach that their God "is a man of war," and has a bloody record, therefore they are full of fight up to the brim, and on a very slight provocation, and often without provocation, they let loose the dogs of war and go forth to burn, plunder and kill—to vindicate their honor, extend their religion or broaden their markets.

I speak of the churches as a whole. Gladly do I admit that there are many individual adherents of the orthodox churches against whom these charges cannot be justly made.

Is not the peace sentiment growing? Yes, slowly. As above stated, the non-orthodox sects are making their influence felt. The Socialists, now numbering millions of members in all parts of the world, are opposed to war. Their chief motto is: "An injury to one is the concern of all." Although more of a political and industrial movement than religious, they seem to have a higher code of ethics than the so-called Christian church.

Bloody wars will not be ended so long as the people elevate to power Czars, kings and "millionaire Christians," who, while professing to be followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, are quite ready for "glory," revenge or spoils, to send out an army on short notice with orders to cut the throats of their brother man, burn his house and shoot his heart out. Yes, I concede they will send with the soldiers Bibles, and opium, and a chaplain with each regiment—a "man of God"—whose official duty it is to pray God to save all our soldiers killed, and to damn opposing soldiers, both living and dead.

Two billions of dollars expended each year by "Christian statesmen," that both our army and navy should be increased and great additions made to our store of ammunition. The "Christian statesmen" of Germany, and France, and England, and of every other "Christian country," are insisting on a similar practice. General Sherman once said, "war is hell," but it seems that no "Christian nation" is yet ready to stop raising hell. If the Bible and the church sustain and foster the killing spirit, then the sooner they are abolished the better for the people.

STRENGTH OF INDIFFERENCE.

It Is a Fallacy of Youth to Fancy that Life Is Dropped Upon Us From the Skies a Finished and Satisfactory Product Which We Have Merely to Enjoy and Contemplate.

On the contrary, life is the roughest sort of raw material upon which we try our strength and skill. Considering how great the pain of discovering this discrepancy between expectation and reality, it is a heartening sight to see how well men conduct themselves over it. They have a brave and considerate convention whereby, when they face each other, they conceal all the scars and gashes of war, and present a cheerful and placid front to the dangers and the mysteries of present and future, although behind their backs, like guilty children with stolen fruit, they hold the sense of all the thwartings and buffetings of fate, the weakness and incompleteness of the human equipment. He among men is an exceptionally poor creature who cries out on fate or demands pity. The unconquerable soul is the human distinction. But none the less, when we face life alone in the dark with none to see our qualities, we have to admit quite candidly that life of itself and without our efforts at adjustment and training is a poor business and a sad outlook.

Taking this fairly into consideration, it is all the more important that a man should practice thrift with the emotions. If he has to suffer, he is the clever man who suffers to some purpose, and wears an impenetrable armor against unnecessary sensitiveness. There was once a piquant and pretty French maid with an unruffled, rose-petalled face, who for many years held a position deemed by outsiders next to impossible. When the temperamental horizon about her blackened and the lightning whizzed and the thunder clapped, she raised a round dimpled chin an inch higher into the air, and pursued her vocation stolidly, commenting, "What do I care?" The results were excellent. The storms beat about her, but they did not beat her. In much the same way a sturdy young Swedish girl was put in a position where at least a dozen young American women had failed and retreated because it was "too awful" or "too impossible," and her only comment was, "I have seen worse." What worse had been to school her to such fine indifference was never divulged, but, at least, all observers knew that it had served a purpose; it had clothed her in a saving armor.

So one sees the reasonableness of cultivating thrift in the emotional nature. Suffer one must and shall, since only so may a man lift himself from a beast to a spirit, but it lies with him to choose whether he shall expend his life energy in futile and wasteful suffering, or whether he shall suffer for a worthy cause and to good purpose. To cry over a spoiled dinner, or a cut finger, leaves less emotion ready for a national calamity or a devastating earthquake. To worry and fret over our own or our children's worldly prosperity and educational advantages robs us of clear and unbiassed strength to distinguish amongst relative values and to know the real from the illusion. Each man needs to weave a garment for his own sensitiveness; he must wrap it round and be able to retort to the small finger-shakings of Fate; "What I care?" Why sould anyone break his heart over a misunderstanding? It would be nothing more than a foolish waste of hearts? To be misunderstood by a man, or a hundred men, or a thousand, is, if one faces it bravely, no more than to be misunderstood by so many men. What matters it that, despite all opposition and all difficulty, one should be able to face oneself unashamed, and present at the end of life an honestly wrought body of work faithfully done. Let the small events pass as they will on the whistling winds of chance; lend no anxious ear to the moods and vagaries of other men, but pursue with unabated vigor the chosen aim, working diligently on the part of life that is in our hands to mould, or whatever one chooses to name it.

This latter half of duty has become more difficult in the last two centuries by the assaults made upon our faith in the positive and concrete hereafter in surrounding hierarchies of saints and angels, partaking with keen interest and ready help in the problems of humanity. Devout and naïve Catholics, for example, gained strength and cheer from this practical and ready intimacy with the hosts of heaven. The unmanageable burdens of life were quite simply shifted, and the devotee moved on unhindered.

In an ancient dialogue between a spiritual aspirant and the Master the disciple asks: "How shall I be able to break the creaturely will which is in me and is at enmity with the Divine Will?" and the answer is: "There is nothing more required of thee than not to resist the grace which is manifested in thee; there is nothing in the whole work but to be obedient and passive to the Light."—Harper's Weekly.

THE BEAUTIFUL SOUL.

O fair was the Garden of Eden of old,
Its prospects inviting, its beauties untold;
Like a lovely bright vision its features we trace
In the myth-lore fast held in the heart of the race.
Like a vision of glory it looms in the past
Of the heart's fond ideals, by love anchored fast,
And of all the fair things that illumine the roll,
Ever fairest of all is the beautiful soul.

O, fair are the stars that bespangle the skies,
And the moon's mellow light charms the traveler's eyes,
The songs of the birds in the leaf-shaded grove,
The lakelet reflecting the beauties above—
All beautiful, beautiful, moving the heart
With the sweet silent music of Nature a part;
But fairer than all that emblazons the scroll
Are the graces adorning the beautiful soul.

O, fair is the beauty of pure loving thought,
Springing bright from truth's mint, in sincerity wrought,
And beautiful as a bright halo of Heaven
Is the glow of pure love, in love's own measure given;
In beauty's ideals there's wealth of pure grace,
Man's heart to uplift and to brighten his face—
The sweet, and the pure, and the good we enroll,
They are garments of praise for the beautiful soul.

O, fairer than all that fair Nature hath made,
In garden or forest, in mountain or glade,
Is the beauty of goodness, of purity, truth;
E'er adorning the soul and renewing its youth.
The days may pass by, and Earth's scenes pass away,
And beauties that clothe it may fade and decay;
But while the fair scenes of man's future unroll,
Ever fairest of all is the beautiful soul.

NATURE OF LOVE.

The Grandest and Most Useful Passion of the Human Mind.

Love is the grandest, holiest, the most forgiving and unselfish passion of the human mind, and yet there is no word in the English language that has been so often misplaced, and erroneously used as the word love. While love is an incentive only to the most exalted human action still it is claimed by many that some of the most atrocious crimes know to this age have been committed under its influence. If we would believe the secular press of the present day we would be compelled to believe that human beings were enslaved, murdered and compelled to commit suicide through the influence of love.

Hardly a day passes at the present time without hearing of some low unenlightened being unw[illegible]y the name of human, killing some innocent girl and claiming to be inspired to commit the act through the influence of love.

How often do we read of irate husbands shooting their wives' paramours, and then try to justify their acts by claiming to love the wife.

And then it is no uncommon thing to see some rich man sued for large sums of money by angry husbands for alienating their wives' affections, of love.

Now the committing of crime under pretense of love is daily growing, and the most drastic measures will have to be taken to put a stop to it. Persons committing crime and pleading love as the cause should receive the extreme penalty that the law prescribes for the crime thus committed. For it ought to be considered as an additional crime for anyone to claim to love the one against whom they commit the crime.

No one ever killed, purposely, the one they loved. Murder in such cases is induced by a very much lower passion. Love protects the loved one from both death and danger, under every and all circumstances.

No one ever committed suicide on account of the acts of the one they loved. Pure love always produces perfect harmony between the lover and the one loved, for pure conjugal love is always reciprocated.

Jealousy indicates a lack of conjugal love, for it never occurs where that exists. That man who shoots his wife or his wife's friend under any circumstances can have no pure love for her; what he calls love is the lowest kind of brute passion and a desire for revenge. No one ever alienated the affections of true lovers, and they never will. The Bible says, "What God joins together let no man put asunder," but I say unto you, what Love joins together no man can put asunder. Pure conjugal love is as deep as eternity, and as broad as space, and always lasts while reason prevails.

There are practically three kinds of love, conjugal, parental and commercial. Commercial or pretended love, which in the strictest sense is but a liking or an affection for one for purely personal, or selfish gratification and lasts only while self-interest seems to warrant it, may be broken off at any time either by outside interference or internal rupture.

From this kind of love springs discontent, fear of inconstancy, jealousy and desertion, which is sometimes followed by murder and suicide.

Such commercial liking is not worthy the name of love, although it is being paraded before the people by the public press as such, and has been held by some of our courts as a mitigating circumstance in the committing of some of the most cruel and heartless murders.

Under no circumstances or conditions can murder be committed on account of pure love, and where this pretence is made it will always be found to be this commercial love above referred to.

Parental love (unlike the commercial article) is seldom dominated by personal interests or unenlightened selfishness, and usually lasts in a greater or less degree through earth life, and far into the border of the spirit land; this is a righteous and holy love. But pure conjugal love is the holy of holies, it not being subject to the will is entirely irresistible and continuous, it is never moved by suspicion, fear, or jealousy. Shakspeare says, "Love is blind and lovers cannot see." True lovers are blind as far as seeing the faults of their loved ones, and they who can not overlook all faults are not true lovers. Those who are bound together by pure conjugal love cannot be separated, for there is no power on earth that can do it, and none in heaven that will desire it.

Those who are joined together by this love will be held tighter and tighter in its embrace during their entire life, and when they reach that spirit world and begin to reach out for the higher conditions of that life they will find themselves more firmly united at every advancing step, until when they shall have reached those higher spheres, they shall become one in thought and act and deed, together they become one perfect being.

Those who are unmarried while on the earth plane, as well as those who are married but have no affinity for each other, will find their true counterpart when they reach the spirit world, and there they will be bound together by true conjugal love, and together they will progress to the realm of the Gods and there become a creative power, a position, and a condition which can never be reached by either the male or female alone, for it requires the male and female, or the positive and negative to constitute or become a creative power—this we find to be the universal law of nature and holds good throughout the spirit world. It is just as impossible for either the male or female to advance to any of the higher conditions of spirit life alone as it is for water to run up hill without overcoming the law of gravitation. United they can advance, but divided they will wander.

It is in that higher condition of spirit life that that saying shall be truly and technically verified which says,

REMARKABLE PRODUCTIONS.

Snapshots of the Soul—Latest Marvel of Science in Photographs of Prayers—The Other World Seen by Camera — Dr. Baraduc's Remarkable Pictures.

Actual photographs [as set forth in the Chicago Evening American] of prayers ascending to the skies are the most amazing results of the latest researches into psychic phenomena!

Sensitive plate reproduction of the current of sympathy emanating from a man in prayerful and contemplative mood is the wonderful achievement of Dr. Hippolite Baraduc, a medical man, as well as an ardent churchman.

The first "soul photographs" reached Chicago to-day in the Illustrated London News, which prints a series of the pictures taken by the Parisian specialist.

The amazing pictures printed therewith show:

1—An invocation, a strange apparition from the spirit world.

2—A prayer photographed; the spiritual light in ecstatic supplication.

3—A good thought caught by Dr. Baraduc's apparatus.

4—A column of prayer ascending from the Eiffel Tower, Paris.

5—A cataract of curative forces at Lourdes during a miracle.

6—A whirlwind of ether, and the violent thoughts as they appear to the camera.

7—A nightmare photographed.

8—The beautiful form of a benediction.

9—The descent of curative benedictions.

Startles the Scientific World.

The whole scientific and religious world, as well as students of occult manifestations, is aghast at the results of the new discoveries in the realm of spiritualistic photography.

In an absolutely dark room, Dr. Baraduc sets his camera, with his highly sensitive plates, and takes photographs of the emanations of life. A strange apparition from the spirit world is found on his film when he has pictured an invocation.

Columns of prayer, benedictions, good thoughts, ecstatic supplication—all these are pictured as characteristically as would be the faces of his subjects under different conditions. The results are more than ordinary—they are startling.

Most Wonderful of All.

Perhaps the most wonderful of all of the "soul photographs" taken are a series showing the progress of a person possessed of delusions toward mental health.

In the first of the series, the aura, or the astral body, of the tormented person shows only a mass of clouds. It is confusion rampant. No head or face is visible. The patient is in a dense fog of her own confused mental atmosphere. The vibrations are of the most terrific character.

In a second, the head is vaguely outlined. There is the semblance of a face. The clouds have shifted and opened up.

Conditions More Serene.

In a third photograph the face can be seen plainly. The conditions are much more serene than in the preceding negatives. Mental health is being established and sound thoughts are driving forth the forbidding shapes of shadowland. The patient is surrounded by a gray and neutral atmosphere, the sign of an approach to normal conditions.

These photographs have brought from D. Baraduc the assertion that there is not only a body of flesh and blood, but a fluid body.

In his photographs of prayers there is one, for instance, of a prayer winging its way upward. It is the emanation of a soul in transport. Another, equally strange, is the form of prayer ascending to the skies. These were prayers offered by a band of devout persons on the Eiffel Tower.

Again, there is a photograph which vaguely recalls a foam-flecked sea under the blackness of night. It is a benediction.

With Force of Rushing Wind.

Then there is a good thought, the philanthropic, ardent desire of one soul reaching out to help another. It is the aura of a young Englishwoman uttering a heartfelt supplication for the restoration to health of Dr. Baraduc himself.

It struck Dr. Baraduc with the force and sensation of a rushing wind, he says.

Furthermore, Dr. Baraduc has photographed the mysterious force which cures obstinate diseases at the times of religious celebrations, such as those at the shrine of St. Anne.

"The Light of Life" he calls the mysterious fluid he pictures, and through its study he believes he will find a cure for nervous maladies.

Next may come the picture of a soul itself!

Two minds with but a single thought.
Two hearts that beat as one,

Pure love is not subject to the will. It cannot be continued or obtained at pleasure, it cannot be induced by the promise of reward or personal gain, it cannot be compelled by fear of punishment, and it is not subject to the demand of any power.

The love of country, the love of home, the love of money, the love of power, the love of self, the love of art, the love of nature, and the love of God, are all of that commercial kind of love referred to above, and all are induced by the promise of reward, or the fear of punishment; and should be considered as an ordinary liking and not love. Pure love is of a higher order, personal interest never enters into it or in the least degree induces it. Pure conjugal love will come to all either in this world or the next; instead of its being barred from the spirit world, it will over there be greatly intensified, for it is as eternal as the ages.

Gives an Interesting Narrative of His Experience in Obsession, through Justin Hulburd, a Noted Medium.

He laid her gently on the sofa. The mother went to the organ, played and sang a low, sweet lullaby. Their child went to sleep. The mother motioned for us all to leave the room quietly, saying in a low whisper she would remain alone with her darling. We left the room, the father shutting the door quietly. We passed out under the trees and there held a conversation about her condition. The father went to see if dinner was ready. Her brother said: "Mr. Poe, I believe we can restore her to health and reason again. She has been abused in a shameful manner by that brute of a husband, Maxwell. The last time I saw her in New York, when I called at her home, I thought she was under the influence of liquor. Her daughter said, 'Yes, Uncle, at certain times she drinks so much liquor that when father came home he would beat her and kick her. I had him arrested. You see that scar upon her forehead; he did that. He kicked her with his winterboot. I struck him on the leg with the poker and broke his ankle. He was two months in the hospital until he was cured. I wanted to write to grandpa all about it. Mamma would not allow me; she said if I did she would run away from us children and drown herself in the river.'"

Mr. Reynolds called us to dinner. It was a fine, home country dinner, and tasted so good. While we were eating a pumpkin pie and drinking our coffee there came a piercing scream from the parlor. We left the table and reached the parlor in time to prevent that unfortunate woman choking her mother to death. Mr. Reynolds and his son caught hold of her while I released her fingers from off her mother's throat. The granddaughter caught her grandmother in her arms and with the assistance of the grandson laid the old lady on the sofa.

Young Mr. Reynolds said, with an oath: "This must be broken up or I'll know the reason why. You devil, whoever you are, that has obsessed my sister, must leave her. My will power is now aroused and I will break your influence if I die for it."

He said, "Father, you see to mamma. Mr. Poe and I can hold her. I'll have no more of this nonsense. I will break this evil power up if she has to leave her body." Just then I saw a wicked-looking man standing alongside of his victim. "We are going to break your power that you have held over this unfortunate woman, if it takes all summer to do it."

He replied, "Edgar Poe, you are not as smart as you think you are. I got her through the power of liquor and I'm going to hold on to her until I am satisfied, damn you. Charlotte Cushman drove me away from that woman in Baltimore. You haven't got will power enough to drive me away from me away from this woman. Now do your best."

I said, "We shall see," in a very emphatic manner. I acquainted the friends with the conversation that I held with that vile spirit, saying, "Let us concentrate our will power, force it on your unhappy daughter and pray in silence—pray to God to send his angels to help us in this matter."

I believed then in a personal God, and that all the angels that dwelt in heaven had wings; the only ones that were minus the wings were those evil spirits that obsessed people living in the human body. Her brother held her down in a rocking chair while I was forming a circle with the other chairs handed to me by her son and two of the hired men. As we were about to take our seats a neighbor called to see Mr. Reynolds—I think his name was Whitson, at least it sounded so to me. Mr. Reynolds informed him of the trouble they were having with their daughter. Mr. Reynolds said: "Can't you join us; perhaps your will-power will be a great help on this occasion."

"I am willing to help you," he replied. "It is a dreadful condition your daughter is living under. I will run over home and get mother and my two daughters to help us; you know they are good Christian women."

In about fifteen minutes he returned with his wife and two daughters. I had the chairs all arranged. We locked the door, took our seats while Mrs. Reynolds played on the organ. I saw she was weak from the ordeal she had passed through, and made the request that she lie down on the sofa and rest. One of the young ladies filled her place at the organ and produced some beautiful music, after which we sang. When we had finished the hymn I said, "Now let us concentrate our will-power on this unhappy woman, and pray in silence for help." We were silent over two hours, when I discovered reason coming back into her eyes with a passive look; her expression became natural. She said: "Oh! I feel as if a heavy load had been lifted off my head. How strange it all seems to be, and why are you all sitting around in a circle? It is Sunday, and papa, are you going to read the Bible? Please let us sing first."

We sang her favorite hymn, "I Know that My Redeemer Liveth." After that we sang "Rock of Ages." When we had finished she said: "Oh, I want a drink so much I am burning up with fever." The housemaid got a pitcher of milk. She entered the parlor holding the pitcher in one hand and a glass in the other. She filled the glass with milk, and the unhappy woman drank it with such a relish that the maid filled the glass again. She drank that, and asked for more. The maid filled the glass the third time; that she drank slowly. Handing the glass back to the maid she said, "Bessie, that was good. Oh! I am so happy. Where is darling, mamma?"

Her mother sat up on the sofa and said, "I am here, dear." Her daughter laughed, saying, "Oh! darling mamma, it is so good to be home again." She went over to the sofa, held her mother in her arms, kissed and hugged her. When she discerned the marks on her mother's throat she said, "Oh! mamma, what has happened to you? How came those dark spots on your neck?"

She replied, "It is nothing, dear," treating the matter lightly. She recognized the neighbors and spoke to them in a gentle manner. She looked at me and said, "Who is this gentleman, and what is his name? I do not seem to remember him."

Her father said, "Dear, this gentleman's name is Mr. Poe." She bowed and said, "Where did I hear that name before? Oh, I remember now. There is an Edgar Allan Poe, a poet who writes for one of the magazines. Are you any relation to him?"

I replied, "I am that individual; my name is Edgar Allan Poe."

She laughed and clapped her hands. The family and guests present looked at me in a surprised manner, when young Mr. Reynolds said: "Is it possible that we have the pleasure of entertaining Edgar Allan Poe under our humble roof?"

I remarked, with a laugh, "It is anything but an humble home. It must be beautiful and interesting to live here the whole year through, to watch the seasons come and go."

Mrs. Reynolds asked, "Will you oblige us by reading one of your poems? We have your Raven and a few others."

I replied, "Possibly you would like to have me recite it?"

The daughter said, "Oh, that will be joyful, Mr. Poe."

I recited the Raven. The old lady, Mrs. Reynolds, said, "Papa, with your permission I would like to kiss Mr. Edgar Allan Poe. His kindness to our family I hope shall never go unrewarded. Dear Mr. Poe, look upon our home as your home in the future. * * * * * * *

It was growing late then and the neighbors said, "We must return to our home." The old lady Reynolds went to the organ, played the introduction to "Home, Sweet Home." We all joined in singing that beautiful song that never will grow old. We parted with each other in a beautiful frame of mind; that frame held the sacred love and union formed between the friends and myself. Young Mr. Reynolds and I walked under the trees smoking a cigar. He said, "Poe, I do not think it will be wise for you and I to disrobe to-night. We will lie down just as we are, in case that villain might return to sister; if he does, he will find us on guard."

All was quiet that night. In the morning she presented herself at breakfast with the rest of the family. Her manner was that of cheerfulness. She, her mother and father and myself, held converse under the trees until young Mr. Reynolds drove up with a buggy to take me to the steamboat landing, that I might go on my way to Albany. They got me to promise on my return down the river that I would stop off and make them a visit. I did so. I remained with them one week, and oh! what a happy week that was. I felt that heaven was in that home. It was held in the care of the divine angels. That wicked influence had shown no symptoms of returning. I reluctantly parted with the family. When I stepped into the buggy it seemed as if something had gone out of my life. I never saw them again in the physical body. Her brother acquainted me with the fact that she had become a good Christian woman, and had no desire to drink liquor again. That made me happy.

One Sunday morning I got an impression to call on a Baltimore family that had moved to Jersey City. I enjoyed my sail across the Hudson River, as it was a beautiful warm morning. The sun seemed to warm up the blood through my whole anatomy. The family that I was going to call on bore the name of Rogers. The head of the house was called James Clark Rogers. He was in the dry goods business, and also had a notion department in his store. I arrived at the home early enough to attend church with the family. Their preacher, I discovered, was a Scotchman—his pronunciation proclaimed for him that distinction. While preaching he acted in a singular manner, so it seemed to me, and much of his preaching was presented to his listeners in a strange way. As he finished he said to the congregation: "Go home—I am tired of it all," and sat down. One of the deacons said, "We will sing now," giving out the hymn to the congregation and reading several lines of the same. The congregation sang a hymn, the deacon pronounced a short benediction—or prayer, if you so choose to call it—over the congregation, and then they were dismissed. Mr. Rogers invited the preacher to dine with him that day. He accepted the kind invitation and accompanied us back to Mr. Rogers' home. I noticed his conversation was quite rambling; he introduced many subjects, and did not give a full explanation of either. At the dinner table he handled the wine bottle quite frequently. After dinner he acquainted me with the fact that he was the owner of a rich gold mine in Australia. He said: "I came from there about four months ago; the church had no preacher and I accepted the position to preach for them; they were a hard-headed lot, and were on the road to ruin. I'll bring them back onto the narrow road if I have to choke every one of them to do it. Brother Rogers is the only one that's got any sense, and he aint as bright as he ought to be. What's your name, and who are you?"

I told him my name was Edgar Allan Poe.

He scratched his head and said: "Poe, Poe, oh! yes, I've got it now; there was a fool by the name of Poe that thought he could write verses. They have got him shut up in a lunatic asylum, and I am glad of it. His poetry was making people crazy. All those poets ought to be placed on an island and kept there, for they're a crazy lot. By George, I must get another drink of that wine; it was good."

As he was walking out of the room Mrs. Rogers entered, when she saw the peculiar look upon his face. She said, "Brother Fox, return and converse with us about your sermon."

"I will, madame," bowing as he left the room. His name was Alexander Fox. Mrs. Rogers said, when seated: "Mr. Poe, our minister is a strange being. I cannot comprehend his actions and sayings; they are more those of a lunatic than a sane person. He has preached for the church four sermons, and they seem to me as if they came from a weak mind."

I told her I did not believe he was a sane person.

"Mr. Rogers says the church will have to get rid of him. Mr. Fox in time will become insane."

Mr. Rogers and his children entered the parlor, and when he discovered the preacher was not there, he asked, "Where is Brother Fox?"

Just then Brother Fox entered the door and backed out again. Finally he attempted it once more, fell headlong on the floor, saying, "By God, your water has weakened my knees. I won't drink another damned drop until you mix it with wine." He looked at Mr. Rogers in a foolish way and said: "Old chap, I want my salary; in Scotland we call it wages. I am going back. I've got two wives there. I want to see them and the bairns." Then he lay over and went to sleep.

That afternoon, when taking leave of the Rogers family, he was still asleep on the carpet. Five days afterward I received a note from Mr. Rogers in which he said: "We secured a passage on a sailing ship for our minister, placed him in his cabin, and now he is on his way. By this time I think the ship must have passed Sandy Hook. I will be over to-morrow and give you full particulars."

Those particulars I cannot mention here. The information that I had received concerning that minister was too degrading for publication.

The captain of the sailing ship wrote to Mr. Rogers from Glasgow: "That minister died on the way back to Scotland in a fit of passion; his actions on board ship were those of a low beast, and we had to lock him up in a stateroom to keep him from making insulting overtures to the women passengers on the ship."

Dear friend, that minister was obsessed by a low, degrading influence. Any one that says obsession is not a fact in every-day life I feel sorry for; they do not understand that state, and I am also happy to know that a large majority of the human race has not been inflicted with any such condition. I speak for a band of spirits: "May the higher angels bless and protect Brother Peebles, who has given to the world a publication called 'Obsession, or Demonism of the Ages.' We spirits call it the 'Herald of Truth,' and hope that all readers will understand its purpose, and that is to educate those that do not believe in obsession. Brother Peebles is the author and publisher of the book. It is a creation of ours, hoping that many will receive a benefit from its scholarly presentation to the public."

Dear readers, those cases of obsession that I have just described took place to my knowledge; they happened to be in the event and course of human life before the days of spiritual rapping.

The world is filled with many cases of obsession similar to the ones I have just described.

Thanking you, brother, for the kind office you have filled in taking down my communication, will you oblige me by sending it to "The Progressive Thinker," whose "open court" is a school of education to Spiritualists and freethinkers.

Spiritualists, Wake Up!

During the past few months, I have been a great deal more interested in a number of articles in The Progressive Thinker, than at any time before, especially those along the line of the Future of our Philosophy and Phenomena, and the question, so often asked by those in our ranks, and out of them, "Is Spiritualism a Religion?"

To me it is a religion, and yet to a great many others I have heard speak, they say it is not a religion. Then again those outside of our religious belief say if Spiritualism is a religion why don't we band together one with the other?

During the past few weeks, we have seen in the columns of The Progressive Thinker, where the President of the N. S. A. has been striving, with the help of Brother Dr. T. Wilkins, to get the number of Spiritualists throughout the country, and what success have they met with?

To me it seems very poor. About three weeks ago I visited a society on the South side and said a few words about the hard time that Brother Barrett and Dr. T. Wilkins, secretary of the Illinois State Association, were having to get the names from the different societies, and the president told me she never had any word from anyone wanting the names of all the members. It seems to me we have in our ranks a great number of those whom Christ said "were neither hot nor cold, but lukewarm." I think the sooner they get warmed up to the boiling point the sooner we will be able to stop saying, we are getting ready for another fight with the Chicago city council in the fall.

I would like very much to hear from one who knows beyond a doubt, what we have to do to be recognized as a religious body and be able to hold religious services, without being told to get ready to fight a new city ordinance, which is being gotten up to prevent us from getting our rights to worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience?

In my visits around the different societies this summer, I was very much surprised and sorry to see that three out of five had no Progressive Thinkers for sale, nor even mention that such a paper was in existence, and then ask "Why don't the societies prosper more?"

How can they, when the food their souls and minds need is lying in The Progressive Thinker office, instead of on the door-keeper's table, where everyone can know it is for sale and can be sent right to their home for one year for less than two cents per week.

Brother and sister co-workers, wake up! and help the one who is doing so much for us, not only in time and talent, but financially.

Trusting, dear Brother Francis, that by the time the camps close you will be able to say you have doubled your subscription list, is my best and sincerest wish.

WAYSIDE INNS AND TRAVELERS.

Things Inhumanly Cruel, and Things Sweetly Beautiful.

What a grand and beautiful world this is! How continually its glories praise the Mighty Power; the Infinite Intelligence behind the laws that command the perpetual pageantry of day and night, of storm and sunshine, of spring, summer, autumn and winter! Summer is now passing, her censer-ours casting their perfume on the air, and her many-colored pennons fluttering. * * * * * * * * *

From where the waters beat and break against New England's rocky coast, there comes a letter, read, this morning, where sweet winds are sweeping through great green woodland aisles, and bending low the lush grass of the sunlit meadows. It is read, and an answering cry—"Deep calling unto deep"—goes out into the love-filled spaces—the old-time cry of the child in the night the Pilgrim in the tempest—"Where is God, that these things be?"

The letter? Here it is:

"This morning I heard such a clamor, punctuated by a volley of shots, that I hastened out on to a little porch, high up on the seaward side of this great inn, to see what had happened. Two water-fowl near the rocks—one floating, with its white breast glistening in the bright morning sunshine—its mate swimming frantically around, refusing to leave its dead love, and save its own life. Above the roaring of the waves over Bass Rocks, could be heard its pathetic calls. Another volley of bullets from the thug below, (Created, so they say, in God's image) brought the grief-stricken one down, and I was glad. I closed my eyes and sent forth a prayer from the shrine of love in my heart to the Great Unknown the Giver of life, to unite their spirits where the slaughter of man can never reach them again.

"From the large porches below, the clapping of many hands echoed over the waters, as those 'images' strutted around discussing how the thing was done. Then they joined the ladies and received their congratulations. Later, they all went to church. I searched my mind for something strong enough to fit the case, but seemed to find nothing but 'God help them!' Meantime my eyes followed the birds as the waves dashed them about, and, by some strange coincidence, they floated close together, their bodies touching, and in this manner the tide carried them out on the bosom of the deep, rocking them gently, like a loving mother, as it bore them away."

"Where every prospect pleases, broke from the reader's lips.
And only man is vile!"

* * * * * * * * * *

From the same facile pen comes another picture, and I wish to share it with my fellow-travelers.

"Well, I have been walking, driving, and trolley car riding, among other things. Went over to Gloucester one day last week. Unlike 'Doctor Foster' I did not get 'caught in a shower of rain,' neither did I 'step in the puddle,' and I expect to 'go there' again." The people who built Gloucester certainly did not interfere with the Lord's work, but took things as they found them. Part of the town reached by the public steps, reminds one of Quebec.

At Gloucester I took a trolley-car and rode out to Annisquam. The way led by moss-covered rocks, and hills, beautiful little bays, streams, fine old trees and shady groves. Swaying willows, now and then, caressed my cheeks with cool green fingers, as the car rushed on. As you are so familiar with this delightful coast region, you must have before your mental vision the treat I had. The people up here seem to have the knack of making things grow in any old place.

"Flowers! Flowers everywhere! I saw them hanging from windows, (have no idea where the roots were fastened) running up and down chimneys, peering out of rain barrels, dangling from sheds, nodding over old stone walls, and smiling at one from the most unexpected places.

"And the trees—what loving care they take of them! And the trees seem to understand and respond."

* * * * * * * * * *

What a dear "nooky" inn is this from whence I write—the same under whose weather-beaten shingles I rested from my wanderings last summer. It wears the quiet, self-contained look of old; as of one who would say—"I do not need you; but, if you wish to stay, you are welcome.

Disturbed! The word is the very antithesis of the spirit of the place.

"'Tis-s-wee-t!" sings a bird from the depths of the shady grove on the east—"'Tis-s-wee-t!" again he declares and I agree heartily. 'Tis sweet, from the vine-covered well to the giant chestnut, that throws its shadow over the old shed with its moss-chinked roof—"father's workshop;" from the leaf-sheltered porch to the dappled lawn; from the fern-scented walks that wind under the elms and dogwood, the beeches, oaks and maples, to the sun-smitten garden with its riot of color and odor! 'Tis sweet! 'Tis sweet! The robins and the flickers, the thrushes and the woodpeckers, all find it so, and haunt its wood land and its hedges, the robins and flickers getting many a fine feast from its berry-burdened bushes.

When the summer sun shines, "as though the sun were only a mile out of town," as a certain funny man used to say—there is the grateful shade of the green woods. When the winds blow, there is a glorious symphony of sound, and the trees clap their hands for joy.

The night comes down so softly, and lays such a soothing finger on our eyes, we are not far behind the birds in seeking our nests under the rafters.

We may watch great Jupiter, or Venus, or some lesser star in the zenith, through the white-curtained windows; we may listen to the iteration of the katy-dids, and the many elusive sounds of the silence, but those slumberous fingers have us under their hypnotic spell, and—What is that? Drums? Marching men? Artillery?—No, the rain on the roof, its patter on the leaves, the roll of thunder which has not died away before we have slipped again within the gate of sleep, in search of the end of our dream.

A VISION OF THE LOST ATLANTIS.

A Poem by the Well Known James G. Clark, Taken From an Old Copy of The Arena.

In the mystic spell of slumber,
Through the sea's unfathomed gloom,
I beheld the Lost Atlantis
Burst the silence of her tomb;
And the grave-clothes that confined her
In the bonds of age-long sleep
By her hands were rent asunder
As she rose from out the deep.

I could see her gleaming rivers
Down the winding valleys run,
Where the olive groves and vineyards
Drank the kisses of the sun;
I could see vast mountain ranges
On her skies her glory trace,—
Winters wrapped around their shoulders,
Summers blooming at their base.

In the measure of a heart-beat,
In the twinkling of an eye,
I beheld her mighty cities
Lift their battlements on high,
And her strong, triumphant armies,
Which the very gods defied,
Marching to the field of battle
In their arrogance and pride.

Oh, the princes of that kingdom,—
How they ruled on land and sea!
How they spurned the God of justice,
And to Baal bent the knee!
And they reared a golden Image
In the grandest of their marts,
And the incense that ascended
Rose from ruined homes and hearts.

And the one word that the Image
Uttered day and night was "Give!"
Till the people only answered:
"Grant us work that we may live."
But the rulers babbled "Business,"
As they reveled at their ease,
And they locked up Nature's storehouse,
And to thieves consigned the keys.

And the wolves of want went prowling
Round the cabins of the poor,
While the toilers starved and perished
On the highway and the moor;
For the few claimed all the increase
From the ocean, soil and air,—
Precious stones and gems and metals,
Flocks and grain and fruitage rare.

Bishops feasted at the palace,
Christ sat hungry at the gate,
Mammon held the sway of Haman
In the halls of court and state;
Priest and scholar bowed in homage
To the one malign control
That in church and school demanded
Prostitution of the soul.

Still the multitude paid tribute
To the miser in his den,
Still the Shylock knife was sharpened
For the flesh and blood of men;
Crafty minds, like human spiders
Weaving traps for human flies,
Veiled with webs of legal pretence
Things that all men knew were lies.

And the victims felt by millions,
Under land and chattel bond,
Driven from God's soil like lepers
By the usurer's magic wand,—
Till the army of the homeless
Gathered like a rising flood,
And the cry went up at midnight:
"Give us bread, or give us blood!"

And the gathering flood climbed higher
Till it struck the palace door
And awoke the royal sleepers
With its wild, devouring roar.
There are tigers in the jungle
That delight in human prey,
But a fiercer tiger crouches
In a starving man at bay.

And the rulers and the robbers
Though they quailed with inward dread,
Answered back in bold derision:
"Give them blood instead of bread!"
And I saw the moon blush crimson,
And beneath the weird eclipse
Sat and rode the "Scarlet Woman,"
With a sneer upon her lips.

There was gathering of the legions
At the mandate of the Queen,
And the flashing of a million
Blades lit up the awful scene;
And a million starving toilers
Fell like blighted stalks of grain
In that horrid midnight harvest,
By their sons and brothers slain.

There are crimes that stir with horror
Saints and angels round the throne,
And whose judgment can be meted
By the courts of God alone
And I saw the kingdom sinking
At the scarlet woman's feet,
And her splendid cities plunging
Like a tempest-foundered fleet.

Mountain ranges met and melted,
And above the fiery tomb
Two great oceans swung together
Like the closing gates of doom.
And I heard a voice proclaiming
Down the solemn aisles of space:
"He who slays a starving brother
Smites his Maker in the face."

JAMES G. CLARK.

INVISIBLE CAUSE.

Progression on Earth and in Heaven.

As I sat on the front steps, watching the mass of human beings pass to and fro in their different modes of transportation, my mind was carried back to when a small boy; then we had the slow ox team, and thought the horse and carriage were fast.

What a change in one's short life. I look on the right from where I sit, and notice trains of fine coaches loaded with passengers, pulled by the monstrous steam engine, flying at the speed of a swift bird. On the left, are electric street cars packed with human beings, flying at a great speed; in front on the smooth street, were many different kinds of conveynces, from the sight-seeing automobile (which carries fifty persons) down to the motorcycle, and bicycle, that only carries one person, some of them propelled by steam, some by gasoline, and others by electricity. All seem to be on the rush of progression. Here we wonder what causes all of this rush and change.

It is that same hidden power of progress that existed in the mind and heart of the advanced and noble Christopher Columbus, who wanted to know what was on the other side; that something that awaits us in the future.

He was an honest investigator and had his opposition, just as the investigator has to-day, only more so. All men with new thoughts, new ideas, new inventions; all who try to climb out of the old rut, are considered by a certain class of "old rutters" to be crazy, just as they did in Columbus' day.

I am glad to notice many of that class are changing, for greater things are being discovered on the 'other side" every day. I am glad we are living in a day of freedom, and enlightenment.

Mr. Editor, you and your good paper could not have withstood the dark storm of ignorance even one hundred years ago, let alone in Columbus' time.

True, Spiritualism to me is much like astronomy, it proves itself by demonstrations as it unfolds itself to us.

When the astonomer tells us that the sun or moon will be eclipsed on a certain date, we look for it. Why? Because we know that he knows what he is talking about; but when the church fanatic tells us (after a long spell of figuring) that the world is coming to an end on a certain date, we pay no attention to it. Why? Because we know that he does not know what he is talking about, but just guessing.

Now, when our loved ones come and answer questions that no mortal eyes but our own have seen or known about, and these questions are placed in a sealed envelope and answered by independent slate writing between two slates bound together, answering all questions and signing correct names in full, while we sit by in broad daylight, with every proof that no mortal did the writing, then we have evidence as good as ever was produced in any court in the world, without chance for trickery or fraud.

We find by investigation that most of the greatest powers on earth or in the heavens, are invisible to our mortal sight, as namely: Love, spirit, gravitation, electricity, gases, atmosphere, and even steam is as transparent as the air, while confined in the boiler and cylinder, but when freed we see only the water that was in it. We understand that all of these invisible powers are everlasting, while the wood, rocks, iron and all visible material to our sight, will decay, crumble and perish; while our spirits, and these invisible powers, like Time and Space, are everlasting.

Thus, by forty years' investigation, I find and in fact know by actual experience that Spiritualism is true; although many mediums are not truthful, the same as in all other Church denominations.

THINKS ROOSEVELT FAVORED BY SPIRITS.

Washington Man Talks of President's Activity — Executive Unconscious, However, of Being a Powerful Medium—Interesting Interview Given Out by Capital City Resident.

The secret is out. President Roosevelt is the favored of the spirit world, and his tremendous activity is the result of the activity and counsel of friendly spirits, according to the declaration of a Washington man, who has given serious consideration to the scientific side of Spiritualism.

"I have the very best reason for believing that Theodore Rosevelt lives and moves in the midst of an army of spirits," said the man who imparted this interesting piece of information concerning the President.

"Is he conscious of it?"

"No, I do not think he is. He would probably laugh at the suggestion, but it is true, nevertheless, and this fact explains many of his acts that the average person cannot understand.

"Our investigations show that spirits dwell in a sphere not so much different from our own, and that they have pretty much the same feeling about things as when they were on the earth plane. They have the same aspirations, in a sense, that characterizes them here, and strive to accomplish those objects which during life they failed to bring about. You must understand, too, that battles are fought there between the forces of good and evil, just as they are here. The struggles are Titanic.

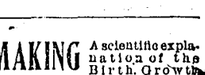
Do Not Lose Interest in Mundane Affairs.

"The spirits do not lose their interest in mundane affairs, but are always looking about for some means of advancing their causes to which they were attracted while in the body. Of course they seize upon the most powerful medium for this, and who is so powerful as the President of the United States?

"But there is not always in the White House a man upon whom they can make a deep impression. From their standpoint it is fortunate that Mr. Roosevelt was chosen President, for there has never been a man in the executive chair whom it was so easy for them to reach. Of course, as I have said, the President does not know he is granting them audience, but that does not detract from the fact.

"At this time there is as much turmoil in the spirit world as there is here. Those who have gone before realize the immense importance to humanity in general that is wrapped up in the industrial and political development of the next few years. They know that what President Roosevelt says has overshadowing weight with the American people, and so they are continually importuning him. They tug at his elbows and whisper in his ears. The opponents of certain policies, as well as the advocates, endeavor to attract his attention and support, and, as the President is very impressionable, many of the inconsistencies in his public acts and speeches may be explained by the contrary promptings he receives in this way.

What the Spirits Discuss.



"You would smile, perhaps, if I should tell you that States' rights, the trust agitation, railroad legislation and all other great questions that are now before the people are sources of lively contention among the inhabitants of the spirit world, and that the great statesmen of our country who have passed away, from Washington down to McKinley, are endeavoring to make the principles which they held on earth felt through the medium of President Roosevelt.—Worth C. THE PSYCHOGRAPH

Or

Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the

with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

The Greatest Among Men.

The Seer and Philosopher, Dr. Andrew Jackson Davis, the Author of Twenty-Nine Volumes.

There have been many seers and philosophers in the history of mankind. For many years Emanuel Swedenborg has been considered the greatest, and his school of philosophy has gained a foothold among thinking men the earth over. Swedenborg differed from A. J. Davis in that the former was an educated man and of himself was enabled to speak his thoughts in a normal condition; but Swedenborg worked upon theological lines already marked out, while A. J. Davis, being wholly uneducated, struck, or rather made, a new path through the mazes of abstruse speculation. He told the world of a newly discovered philosophy, independent of all that had been before promulgated. Therefore, in considering this subject, one must get upon high ground and soar to heights "where eagles dare not build their nests, nor insects wend their way," if one can.

During the writing and speaking period of this justly celebrated man, he evolved twenty-nine volumes—the mysteries of the whole material and spiritual universe; and yet he had never read a scientific book or treatise of any kind, and had attended school but five months in his life. He could read a trifle, but had so little interest in himself that he did not know where he was born or when.

Mr. Davis began his wonderful career by diagnosing the ills of his fellow-men. The X-ray of his mind penetrated the bodies of those he was called to aid, to locate exactly the seat of the trouble and suggest a remedy. In this work he traveled from Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to Connecticut, and became favorably known. Then the first great work of Mr. Davis began.

He was born in Bloominggrove, Orange County, N. Y., on the 11th of August, 1826. His father was a simple-hearted man, who followed the respectable occupation of shoemaker, and very poor. The mother died when this subject was quite young. Neither the father nor the mother was inclined to intellectual pursuits. Thus the son Jackson grew up without seeming preparation for the life which followed. He had neither the desire nor the opportunity to study; but the lad was honest and attended to such duties as were pressed upon him, until he entered upon his clairvoyant career as a healer.

LET ME HERE SAY THAT THE "PHYSICIAN," ONE OF THE FIVE VOLUMES OF DAVIS' "GREAT HARMONIA," IS WHERE MRS. MARY EDDY DREW HER INSPIRATION FOR THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CULT WHICH HAS HAD SUCH A PHENOMENAL RUN.

She drew largely from Davis's writings—some say almost wholly—and then kicked Davis and his teachings overboard and set up housekeeping on her own account. Indeed, it may be said with truth that most of the more modern cults have been built from material furnished by the Poughkeepsie seer, as he first and last treated upon almost every subject occupying the attention of mankind, such as cosmogony, astronomy, geology, etymology, archeology, mythology, psychology, history and metaphysics.

No wonder the ambitious have flown to the works of Davis for food to clothe their varied cults. And now he is furnishing texts and a better expression to many pulpit orators who would scorn to have it charged they were pilfering from one they have held up to ridicule these many years, for during the early part of A. J. Davis's career, the pulpit was mostly engaged trying to pull down the structure he had erected. While the theological storms raged, the author and lecturer was calm, self-centered, undisturbed. Great souls are always calm, or bend to the wind as do the billowy fields of ripening wheat.

But what was the mission of A. J. Davis, the Poughkeepsie seer? His biographers and those who were his constant companions for fifteen months, during which time the first book, "The Principles of Nature: Her Divine Revelations, and a Voice to Mankind," was being spoken into existence, say it was a demonstration from the other world to prove that man never dies; that the spirit lives and communicates with mortals; that this unlettered youth was chosen that there might be no mistaking the purpose, to show that an ignorant youth could catch the spirit's idea, for not a man up to that time, ignorant or educated, had spoken like Davis, who saw clairvoyantly all of earth, life and the glories of the heavenly state.

Thousands of persons had heard him at different times as he discoursed upon themes above human knowledge at that day; and he spoke with the ease and grace of one who knew his subject and the imparting of the information was an incident, a pastime, a pleasure. From awkwardness he rose to great heights of oratory and a grace of manner beyond depicting. When diagnosing disease, he used accurate medical terms to the astonishment of physicians as well as laymen. When he ascended to the stellar universe he was equally at home as an astronomer, and puzzled those who had studied astronomy as a science. Coming to earth he knew more than geologists had told, and in purer scientific terms. And so he went through the gamut of material and spiritual science, always using the most choice phraseology—words best adapted to express his specific intentions. The purpose was to establish the fact, his biographers say, that only an inspired one could so speak. To the satisfaction of those constantly in his society, the proof was established.

The book alluded to contains about eight hundred pages, and has been read by thousands with wonder and admiration. Of Fear, he said: "The highest hopes are mingled with the darkest doubts; even the courage of conviction is weakened by the fear of failure." How true!

The like of this subject under consideration, as to his scientific and literary productions, never appeared on this planet, considering his total lack of early preparation for the work. Unassuming in his ordinary walk, he struck a deeper depth and rose to higher altitudes of Nature's laws or principles than any other. He may be likened to the majestic Mississippi or the mighty Oregon, with their banks ever widening as their great tributaries empty into them. His Harmonial Philosophy is a procession of ideas, sweeping the earth and the heavens—every thought in harmony with the general trend of his great subject. On every page of the twenty-nine volumes are texts from which men and women have elaborated other thoughts. He has enriched pulpit utterances; and while the pulpit has borrowed largely, it has spurned and kicked him in return.

In the elaboration of his masterpieces, his only material assistant was a dictionary, and yet he quoted freely from books he had never seen or heard of, and quoted correctly. He described places on which his eyes had never rested, and had no visible knowledge. He saw more and further into the heavens than any telescope had divulged. His book called the "Summer Land" is a marvel of beautiful descriptive work, easily taking a receptive mind along to view the shining shores of lakes and rivers, woodland and birds of our heavenly home. In his "Great Harmonia"—five volumes—is portrayed not only the possibility of future life, but by masterful reasoning he proves the alleged fact by a natural process. Mr. Davis believes in theology; but the theology of Nature, not that of man's building. He is always reverent, dignified, and pure of speech.

After the issuing of the first volume, Mr. Davis dismissed his mesmerizer and amanuensis. By this time his mind had so unfolded that he lived and wrote in what he called "the superior condition." His natural mind had become educated or unfolded to an extent that he seemed to know by instinct. Music, poetry, philosophy flowed to him as naturally as the river runs, as the flower comes from the bud. When the twenty-nine volumes were completed he rested from that labor; in that direction his work was done, and he went back to healing the sick. For many years this extraordinary man has had an office in Boston, where his rooms are always filled with those wanting bodily assistance. It is said he cures them—most of his cases.

His books have never been a source of profit, although in the early fifties of the last century many whole sets were sold. They were turned over to a publisher without any reward, seemingly, and his support has come through his healing powers.

Dr. Davis is still living, old in years, but not feeble. His books are practically out of print, there not being a whole set of them in any book store. Therefore a movement is on foot to raise the money to have a new edition printed, but there are complications. The right to the plates belongs to another, and that other refuses to surrender them and fails to print another edition. Nevertheless Mr. Davis believes another large edition will be in the hands of the public "before the completion of the Panama Canal." They are works which the younger generation of men and women need. The earlier editions are scattered broadcast in this and other countries. They are being borrowed and read, although none can be bought. These works are not easy reading, but require a concentrated, healthy mentality to comprehend them. Hence few novel readers care for them; only mentalities of a higher order.

In his "Address to the World," at the conclusion of his "Principles of Nature," may be found this paragraph: "I have been impressed to speak the things contained in the following pages, not because truth was before undiscovered, but in order to give it a new and attractive form and a power to instruct, purify and elevate the race."

Again: "Exercise your choicest gift, which is Reason, and fear no corruption from truth, though new; and expect no good from error, though long delayed."

Still again: "Your duty is to search, and after searching, ask Nature and your own superior judgments how much practical truth there is herein revealed. In doing this you will display the dignity of your natures, perform your highest duty, receive the most unbounded interior approbation and obtain mental happiness."

He believed that man has rights founded in principles of Nature; that these rights have been perverted, crushed and prostrated. Folly has reigned in the place of reason; imbecility instead of thought. Vice has reigned instead of virtue; ignorance instead of knowledge, and bigotry instead of benevolence. Thus the holiest, highest and sublimest powers of men have been repressed and distorted by the degrading shackles of superstition and false imagination.

The Doctor believes the universe to be controlled by what he terms THE GREAT POSITIVE MIND, which we call God, and acts by unchanging principles inherent in Nature. He believes we should be directed by these unchanging principles instead of theological creeds dictated by the thoughts of men. Andrew Jackson Davis is an exceptional product of Nature, apart from any other who has ever lived, and, the writer believes, greater than all others. But of this each person must use his reason and think as he pleases.

Anything that one can say of such a character falls so far below, that one is discouraged for having made the attempt. All else but the character dwindle to shrubs.

On reading the first book of 800 pages, one is satisfied that all has been said that is possible for one mentality, but taking up The Great Harmonia, we find still newer and fresher thoughts are flooded forth, and then you say there is nothing more to be said, and still there are twenty-three other works as interesting as the six preceding ones.

ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS' NEW THEOLOGY IS NOT MAKING FAST STRIDES IN CREEDAL CIRCLES, BUT IS PERCOLATING SURELY, IF SLOWLY, INTO THE MINDS OF THOSE WHO APPEAL TO REASON, THE PRINCIPLES OR LAWS OF NATURE.

Wireless Telegraphy.

It was at this time that wireless telegraphy was first projected, it may be; for the two Boston men, Gardner Speer and T. S. Sheldon, with the aid of A. J. Davis, not far out of Randolph village, constructed a device upon an eminence, the use of which they religiously affirmed would enable one to transmit messages to Boston, New York—anywhere—without the use of wires. Of course the idea was so preposterous, so beyond human possibility, that each was denominated as off his base mentally. Undaunted, these men prosecuted the work with diligence, and declared its feasibility, the only drawback being just how to do it. The device was guarded and inclosed within a board shanty and securely under lock and key. After months of earnest work, the matter was dropped, but the locked-up shanty stood there. Davis had long since gone back to his Poughkeepsie home. Finally the boards were torn off piece by piece, the metals composing the device were carried away by curious boys and inquisitive men. The matter was apparently forgotten, or thought of as something unworthy of real sane men. But now we have wireless telegraphy. Those "crazy" men were only a few years in advance of Marconi, who bears no semblance to an insane person. Marconi succeeded. Perhaps the money of Speer, Gardner and Sheldon failed them. Possibly they were daunted by ridicule, for we all like the respect of neighbors and acquaintances.

In his "Pantheon of Progress" Mr. Davis paid his respects to most of the religious chieftains; to Brahma, Confucius, Buddha, Socrates, Plato, Zoroaster, Aristotle, Jesus, Paul, Martin Luther, John Calvin, and finds partisanism in them all. Up to the time of his writing about them, he had never read a book concerning them; but not any author, so far as I know, has dealt with those characters with a more open, intelligent understanding of them. He says Brahma's admirers did not exceed the Christian devotee in the way of manifestations. The venerable and reverential Hindoos lifted up their holy hands and voices in terms of unmeasured eulogy and gratitude; Brahma was so good, so merciful, so just, so all-powerful and surpassingly beautiful. Buddha had all the qualifications of Brahma; and as he comes along down he finds Christ a worship, also, He opposes the idolizing of any individual or any book, for personages pass away and only principles live. So far as these chieftains carried along the principles of Nature, they were necessary to the times in which they lived. He terms the high eulogies of those chieftains as "eloquent mischief."

Dr. Davis is not a believer in the infallibility of man; but every man has a natural mother. So he pulls down our idol worship and in its place substitutes Davis' Principles of Nature as a working basis, that reason should never be subjected to idolatry of any kind. Truly he blazed a new path. Every devotee has an "Incarnation" at which one can look at opposite sides; in front you see the god-side of your man, and behind you see the man-side of your god. The story is Oriental; yet the idea within is immortally useful. But Jesus gave the strongest, freshest expression of this saying: "Whatever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," and perpetually welled over the brim of his large spirit, which was truly adapted to feel and affirm. His charity was overmastering. While Christ had different occupations from his predecessors, his central idea was the same; but of tumultuous fires filled with countless myriads of incorrigible wretches as human beings on earth, Jesus said almost nothing positively. He analyzes all sides to that undefinable word called Truth—to the ultimate where none can reach, but ever ascending toward it.

Dr. Davis never claimed infallibility, as that belongs to the Father God and Mother Nature. He set forth that there is an ocean of spirit; that man was evolved from this ocean, the highest being possible to ever appear on this planet; so man is not infinite.

Of his many books there is no space to speak. Of himself he embodied what he claimed—a life beyond earth life—demonstrated the fact, some believe, by being acted upon by excarnated beings who once lived on earth and were exalted entities in the home not made with hands, with many mansions, where all mistakes on earth can be outlived and rectified on the other shore. There may be others who have spoken as profoundly; whether correctly or not, is not for me to say; but Davis is the latest of the seers, prophets and chieftains, and still a living entity among us. He wrote his first book before "Modern Spiritualism" was known, nor did he ever identify himself with the movement, but strongly claimed it true—a fact that spirits do return and converse with mortals, as he assures his readers that he had converse with varied spirit entities. But Andrew Jackson Davis is not an idol of the modern Spiritualist. He refused to become the High Priest to the Spiritual Cult, as solicited, on the ground that TRUTH can never be organized, as it changes form and color as evolution goes on; that what one thinks to-day may seem differently to-morrow; Truth must be free. So he has lived and wrought, never reading theology or history until his books were completed. When he pulled down an idol he attempted to put something better in its place. His highest thought was in behalf of the human race, which he exalted and found a heavenly home for it—to his satisfaction. To fittingly speak of such a personage is difficult, as he differs from all who have been before.

His mind seemed clear and clean, and rose to the altitude of his subjects with admirable ease and comprehensiveness—to grandeur!

And so one may say, as stated at the beginning of this subject, to comprehend him one must reach a height "where eagles dare not build their nests, nor insects wend their way."

What and Where Is God?

A Very Important Question Philosophically Considered.

To find the great First Cause,
Man seeks to know the laws
Of Matter and of Mind,
And force of every kind,
Accompanying every form,
The thunderbolt and storm,
That stirs the atoms and
The rivers, seas, and land,
And moves the world afar,
And guides the shining star;
For such must be the Soul
In Infinite Control.

"What and where is God" is a natural and important question; natural because it originates in the inquisitive nature of man; and important because it expresses a desire to know and understand, so far as possible, the most worthy object of man's trust and veneration.

There is no doubt that our early ancestors, seeing that all creatures had parentage, naturally concluded that there must be a parental power—an ancestor of themselves and and things about them. And because they saw in themselves superiority over all else, and were able to form, mould, and make useful things, as they themselves possessed the power to create, so they were able to think of, and imagine the necessity and existence of, a Creator, and thus account for Creation? And seeing that all life was generative; that families, clans, tribes, and nations were numerically increasing and rapidly populating the earth, so in meditative retrospect they conceived of a time in the past when man and all else must have had a beginning; and the story of Creation was formulated and taught according to the light they possessed; and then, as to-day, unable to comprehend any Supreme Being possessing other than the powers they were conscious of in themselves, their idea of God was naturally the image of man; and so it is written: "In the image of God created he them;" and so it is that God has ever been thought of as an anthropomorphic deity, vaguely located somewhere in the mystic realm of imagination, and omnipresent in the unlimited extension of his will and power.

Man can only think and conclude from what he knows or conceives. Primitive untutored man in his swaddling clothes, seeking to account for the phenomena of life and being about him, was forced to tax his imagination, and his ideals were reflections of his understanding, even as is the case to-day. Give me a man's conception of God and I will give you his highest conception of manhood. As is the one so is the other. A personal God, imaged in the mind of the person, can only possess the attributes of the human mind, because man can conceive of none other in a personality. He, himself, is the highest and most consummate expression of deity he can imagine; and so men have been deified and worshiped, and the gods of all nations appear on canvas in the human form. It has been said that every man has his god, and so he has—standing out upon the canvas of his mind, his highest ideal, commanding his respect and veneration, and,

As there are many men of many minds,
So there are many gods of many kinds.

In these latter days, in the increased light of the present, is there no way by which we may see clearer and understand better the source of life and being? There surely is; for as man has grown and developed and vastly broadened his field of observation, more knowledge is at his command upon which his reason may draw, making his judgment, conclusions, and beliefs more advanced and truer than ever before. As man has come up from the past gathering knowledge at every step, so his inspirations are transcendently truer and better, and must ever continue to improve and broaden as truly as he is onward-bound, impelled by an Infinite force unerringly causative and eternal, and which he has learned to know and honor as God.

It has been the perpetual crux of all time to know and understand the origin of man and his rightful place or consequence in the Universe. The difficulty lies in the infinitude of the object sought. But we are better equipped than ever before and may not question in vain. Indeed, as inquiry is the source of knowledge, and the way of understanding, perseverance must find its reward along this line as along all others, and with newer light we may yet see as never before.

In order that we may conceive of God in the fuller light of the present and arrive at a rational conception of the Infinite control, let us first settle the question in our minds as to whether God is personal or impersonal, an individual being, or an all-inclusive being, mind or energy—which?

Now, it is agreed, as it ever has been, that God is almighty, infinite, omnipresent and supreme. Now, then, how can such conception be made to agree with the idea of personality, or of an individual being? It is well to reflect that our early ancestors had not the glasses that we have to-day, and therefore could not see as we see. The authors of the Bible thought of the earth as the one great object of Creation and the only inhabited world anywhere in the realm of the Infinite; that the sun, moon and stars all revolved around the earth, and the author of Genesis declares that God created the heavens and the earth in six days and rested on the seventh (as though God could get tired and rest like a man). Such utterances are unmistakable evidence of man's primitive ignorance and consequent visionary conceptions.

And how is it now? Since that time man's vision and understanding have wonderfully extended, so that now he sees with the giant eye of the telescope countless millions of stars, suns and worlds in a universe so vast that light traveling 186,000 miles per second requires 15,000 years to span its greatest equatorial length. And beside this amazing armada sailing through shoreless ether, countless other universes greet the searching eye of man, so distant, we are told, that our agile ray takes 5,000,000 years to cover the intervening space, and with every increase of power in the telescope new revelations appear, so that it seems likely that an endless ocean swarms with nebulae, universes other than our own, doubtless with suns and planets, and most likely inhabited by intelligences related to the same Almighty Father with us; for spectrum analysis of light coming from these distant shores declares unity of being and control throughout.

The revelations of the microscope are no less wonderful and instructive. And with all this accumulated knowledge can we still see in our mind's eye only as did the author of Genesis: a personal God, bringing life and all things into existence by special creation, moulding man and breathing into his nostrils the breath of life, and, after a time, seeing him lonely and in need of a helpmate, taking a rib from his side and making Eve to be his wife; can we still thus think and believe, or has the increase of knowledge opened our understandings to higher and broader conceptions, so that now, instead of the Jehovah of Moses, we see an Impersonal, All-inclusive, Immanent Mind Energy, creative and constant throughout. Do we not see that law everywhere prevails, perpetual and immutable? Did water ever run uphill? Was the force of gravity ever set aside? Do not gravity, centripetal and centrifugal forces hold the planets and interstellar systems in continuous balance? Are not the chemical nd magnetic forces of life, whether in the animal, vegetable, or mineral kingdom, equally certain? And are not the laws of reproduction, generation, and procreation regular and constant? Indeed, is there not a creative energy resident everywhere, in great and small, in atoms and worlds, in monad and man, controlling all? Is not the whole universe a living, law-abiding whole? And is not every part related and responsive alike to the same Creative Energy, manifest in law, and as constant and certain as time and being? How, then, a personal God or a special creation, seeing that all comes into being by force of inhering law? And how the possibility of a miracle which would require a special act at variance with law and order? And how could a virgin conceive and transmit through her maternal matrix a personal and eternal self-existent God? However it may have been in the past, such a conception is impossible in the light of the present. Nothing is clearer or more certain than that Christ was a man; was born, lived, and died like all men, subject to law, to successfully dispute which one must impeach the constancy of God, who is "without variableness or shadow of turning." God is not a man to make a mistake and then mend it with a miracle. Neither is God circumscribed or limited in his occupancy. Law is a manifest of his existence, will and power, which we may witness everywhere in Creation, and honor in our thought and efforts to learn and respect his presence by the free and untrammeled use of our reason.

I believe in an inscrutable Intelligence manifest in the controlling laws and energy of the Universe. And I believe that Intelligence is the ancestor of all life and being, and also the heritage of man, on which rests his hope of immortality. I believe this because it seems to me clear that all life must have come from somewhere and from some causative intelligent source. As in all life I observe intelligence, especially pronounced and consummate in man, so I must recognize an Infinite Intelligence somewhere and in some way coexistent with and controlling all Creation, however vast and boundless, and by inflexible, uniform and unvarying laws throughout; and as like begets like, so man, begotten of the Infinite, must possess the attributes of the Infinite and the heritage of eternal life. Such is my conception of God and man.

I have sometimes thought man may be God, in a sense that he is the highest expression of the Supreme All-Mind, Infinite, omnipresent and omnipotent, having no limited local habitation or either personality other than the individualiztion of Mind in man, so that, as Christ said: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father also;" and how else can the verity of the statement be understood? And I am thinking of man and God as co-existent, potentially at least, throughout the innumerable Universes of an endless expanse! And if man's reach of sight and powers of conception continue to extend and increase, as in the past, what yet unexplored regions may he not enter? what new discoveries make, and what out of the present Unknown may not yet be revealed to his untiring gaze as the reward of unfaltering pursuit? Where the limit of possibilities and the goal he may not reach? Infinitude echoes, where!

Pensioning the Aged.

The British government is considering an old-age pension. The project is to give each person for life above sixty-five years of age, the sum of $1.25 a week. This, it is claimed, will require about $135,000,000 per annum. The large amount will probably delay favorable action for a time by Parliament; but the idea is a practical one, and will ultimately become the law in all advanced civilized nations.

The United States should, and probably will, be first to adopt the beneficent law. We can learn of the Chinese, if we will. Sears, in his "Pictorial History of China and India," p. 525, says:

"In former times, every male at the age of sixteen paid a capitation tax, which ceased when he reached his sixtieth year; then a pension for life was settled on him by the government."

The war spirit now prevailing with us must be first overcome. The great annual waste by army and navy must be abolished before we can expect relief for the poor, however deserving. And pensions given soldiers for fighting our battles become expenditures of the past, while war vessels costing ten millions of dollars each must be relegated to an age of blood.

A Congress of Nations must adjudicate all national disputes, and each power must furnish that Congress the munitions of war on call to enforce its decrees. Instead of each nation laboring to rival the other in its means of destruction it will only supply its pro rata force to the central power.

This done and money enough can be saved from the cost of the ravages of war to pension, not the paltry sum of $1.25 a week, but $5.00, and still have an excess for invalids and decrepit at a higher rate, who are unable to contribute anywhat to their own support.

War is a Christian institution. The founder of the system boasted: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword."—Mat. 10:34.

And he was true to his mission, as subsequent history through all the ages abundantly testifies. As his power wanes humanity, more and more relieved from its galling chains, escapes its tyranny, and will until the last vestige of the scourge that wasteth at noonday will disappear from the world. Then the aged and infirm can be cared for.

A New Monument to Servetus.

A new monument is to be erected at Geneva to the memory of Michael Servetus. He was born on the 29th of September, 1511, and the monument will be dedicated on the 400th anniversary of his birth. The old monument, erected four years ago, is in an inconspicuous place. The new is to occupy the site on which the martyr to truth was burned with his books, at the instance of John Calvin, one of the leading spirits of the Protestant reformation. Calvin was inspired by the same spirit that cursed the world with the Inquisition; and all were but practicing the teachings of the dear Jesus who said:

"These mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me."—Luke 19:27. This text justified the Inquisition with its torture-chamber, its stake, its fagot and its flame.

A Question for Thinkers.

An important question has lately been sprung on the business world, which deserves a thoughtful reply. The inquirer asks:

"Can a man succeed in business and be a Christian?"

Rev. H. L. Smith, of the Belleville Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Pittsburg, started the inquiry. He sent out six hundred letters to prominent business and professional men, and received a large number of replies. One response said:—

"Hang a dollar on the other side of the lake of fire, and the business man of America will have a try for it, if he has to go into partnership with the Evil One and swim the lake to get it."

A manufacturer put it this way:—

"The sweatshop has made it impossible for fair and wholesome goods to get fair treatment. So long as the blood-stained money of the sweater is raked into the pockets of our rivals we must rake it in too."

But these answers are evasive, and do not meet the issue. They are trifling with a great question which merits a straightforward answer. The Progressive Thinker is disposed to so treat it.

To us it seems positively impossible to carry out in practice the teachings of Jesus as he is reported in the Bible. Christians receive him as the founder of their religion, and the New Testament as the inerrant report of his inculcations. Begin with his sermon on the mount, when he said (Matt. 6:24): "Take no thought for the morrow."

Who can build, plant or sow, or engage in any occupation with "no thought for the morrow"? The merchant buys his goods to sell at a profit to-morrow. The inventor plans and constructs to-day, in the hope of to-morrow's reward. The scholar spends years of labor and thought to acquire knowledge for future use. The author writes for instruction of the people, while he spends even the midnight oil over his books to furnish fruits for a future generation. All governments would cease if no thought was given the future; for anarchy would everywhere prevail, and social chaos would be universal.

"Lay not up treasures on earth."

This is another of the unwise teachings of Jesus, which Christians are taught to observe, and failing to do so are not disciples of the Master. In practical life it is impossible to avoid laying up treasures on earth and continue a mortal existence. If the husbandman lays up no stores in harvest time, his family will starve when winter comes. The squirrel, with no savior to mislead him, gathers in the nuts to-day for the morrow's use. All Nature shows the falsity of such teaching.

The mother folds the child to her breast and nurtures it with tenderest care, confident of the morrow's happiness, when, with expanded mind, he will reciprocate that love, and in evening's decline will minister to her needs.

"What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" asked a kneeling inquirer of Jesus, at the same time telling him he had kept all the commandments from his youth up. See Mark 10:17-22. The reply was applicable to all the world as to the interrogator, and every Christian is bound to observe it if he expects the reward: "Sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasures in heaven."

Keeping all the commandments and belief in Jesus as a God must be climaxed by giving all one possesses to the poor.

There are no Christians, with this standard, in the world. Instead, we find the pretenders the most covetous of people.

It is but just to say the authors of the gospels, making poverty the passport to eternal bliss, were monks, who subsisted by beggary, and it was they who put into the mouth of Jesus their diatribes against riches and care for the future. And it was they who made Jesus a god.

Driven Insane by Fear.

Evansville, Ind., Aug. 14.—Fearful that the wrath of God was upon him because he was instrumental in having his sister declared insane and sent to an asylum several months ago, August Schlenshi, a wealthy farmer, became a maniac and was adjudged insane by a commission.

Oh, such a terrible record! Our prisons filled with victims, because of the teachings of the church which indorse crime; our insane asylums overflowing with raving maniacs; and our poor-houses mansions of wretchedness and despair, because of man's inhumanity to man;

Heaven hasten the day when an infernal system of tyranny, projected by pagan priests in Rome, and falsely credited to a humble and unknown Nazarene, with fictitious Galilean fishermen for apostles, shall give place to a system of religion founded on truth and the revelations of Nature.

The End in France is Not Yet.

Advices from Paris and Rome indicate that the troubles between France and the Vatican are not at an end. A resumption of conflict at an early day seems certain.

The French authorities are determined to make the separation of church and state complete. To that end they are directing their best energies.

The papists have opposed French action in church matters with so much bitterness that the latter are no longer in a mood to trifle with Catholic assumption.

It is reported that the statuary and paintings in French churches, with historical documents, will be placed in the museums. This done, then there is a possibility that the frauds and forgeries used as props to Christianity may reveal a state of facts which will astonish Protestants.

The pretended Greek originals of Paul's Epistles, it is said, betray some six hundred French words, which were used by the author where he had no suitable Greek term to express his ideas. This tells a dreadful tale, and explains why church prelates, who cannot be ignorant of the facts, are warring so violently to prevent giving the public access to their "sacred" records.

Talk about political rascality! All know of the methods to which the church resorted to force its teachings on the world. For full eight hundred years, and down to 1808, the Inquisition, with all its brutality and disregard of human life, was in full operation to compel belief in their creeds, their holy books, their saints and their gods.

The Protestant Reformation was only a partial affair. The great frauds of the monks were all projected, in force, and accepted as gospel truths by Luther, Methanchon, Beza, Calvin and associates. The principal warfare of these reformers was made on the sale of criminal indulgences, while they accepted the greater frauds, as their history, without dissent.

A riper scholarship, more independent thought, and greater freedom to express that thought, reveal facts of which the reformers did not dream. And these will come more clearly to light when the ecclesiastical archives of France are given to the public. The makers of those records were partisans laboring in a common cause, for a common interest, and, probably, under direction of the leading officials of Catholicism in Rome.

Extracts From Sears' Pictorial China.

"The system of Confucius [generally known as a religion], may more properly be termed a system of morality than a religion, as it is intended to inculcate the duties of men toward each other, rather that those they owe to a superior being.

"The word Joss is supposed to be a corruption of Deos, as it does not belong to the Chinese language, nor does it appear to have been in use before the settlement of the Portuguese in China."

The Chinese pay no observance to a Sabbath."

"The barbarian prince, Zinghis Khan, granted universal toleration [of religion]; nor did he suffer his people to interfere with each other on that subject, but to receive equal protection from the laws, whether they were heathen, Jew, Mohammedan, or Christian."

DEFINITIONS OF TERMS.

trance, or even in the condition you term abstraction, when the thought is far away, mingling with the sweet home scenes, the spirit does not act with the body; still the life is there."—Lecture of Emma Hardinge Britten on "Spirit, its Origin and Destiny," delivered in Chicago, Ill., October 28, 1860.

16. "A power of perceiving objects however covered or remote, without the use of eyes; said to be communicated to a person under the influence of animal magnetism or mesmerism."—Worcester's Dic. p. 248, 2nd. ed., 1888.

17. "A power attributed to persons in a mesmeric state, of discerning objects not perceptible by the senses."—Webster's Dic., 1881.

Having before me the foregoing definitions, I have attempted to formulate a definition of clairvoyance which I here insert for what it may be worth.

18. Clairvoyance literally means, clear seeing; but in Spiritualism it has a technical meaning and may be either objective or subjective:

(a) Subjective clairvoyance is that psychic power or function of seeing, objectively, by and through the spiritual sensorium of sight which pervades the physical mechanism of vision, spiritual beings and things. A few persons are born with this power; in some it is developed and in others it has but a casual quickening. Its extent is governed by the rate of vibration under which it operates; thus, one clairvoyant may see spiritual things which to another may be invisible, because of the degree of difference in the intensity of the power.

(b) Subjective clairvoyance is that psychic condition of a person which enables spirit intelligences to impress or photograph upon the brain of that person, at will, pictures and images which are seen as visions by that person, without the aid of the physical eye. These pictures and images may be of things spiritual or material, past or present, remote or near, hidden or uncovered, or they may have their existence simply in the conception or imagination of the spirit communicating them.

Definitions of Terms.

A Matter of Vital Importance to Spiritualists.

At the last Convention of the National Spiritualists' Association, held in Chicago, in October, 1906, President Harrison D. Barrett appointed a Committee on "Definitions of Terms used in Spiritualism," to-wit: Charles R. Schirm (Chairman), George W. Kates, W. A. Willing, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley and Miss Elizabeth Harlow. This committee was appointed to obtain from as many able sources as possible, definitions of terms, carefully digest them, and report to the coming convention the result of its labors. For this purpose it was authorized to publish such data as it desired in order to give the opportunity for making suggestions to persons not members of the committee, and in a manner to prepare those who will be delegates to the next convention to act upon the report.

Mr. Barrett turned over to the chairman communications on the subject from Andrew Jackson Davis, Dr. G. W. Brown, Hon. A. H. Dailey, Dr. George A. Fuller, Mrs. Helen L. P. Russegue, and Rev. Cora L. V. Richmond, and wherever their definitions are used, proper credit will be given. Copies of these communications were sent to each member of the committee with suggestions of a plan for prosecuting the work, but up to this time only two of the committee have made reply. As the time for the next Convention is drawing near, I have deemed it proper to place before Spiritualists the data in hand.

The importance of this work can not be overestimated and it should not be hurriedly done. In a number of instances, judges sitting in cases involving Spiritualism have asked for definitions of terms; and yet, it seems to me, we have not yet reached that stage where we can reduce these definitions to rigid form. By way of suggestion, I will say, that the entire data should be published in pamphlet form for general distribution, leaving for a later day, after thorough consideration, the difficult task of forming such definitions as we would be willing to rely upon under all circumstances. This plan, I think, will largely meet the demands of the courts and will permit us to take advantage of any form of definition, just as the right shade of meaning may be selected from the various definitions of words given in the dictionary.

The terms thus far presented for consideration are: Clairvoyance, Clairaudience, independent writing, automatic writing, mediumship, trance and inspirational speaking. We will begin with definitions of clairvoyance.

Definitions of Clairvoyance.

1. "According to our definition, "Clear Seeing, or Spirit Vision," while yet in human form, is the opening of the one faculty of the spirit that takes the place of all sensation, i. e., perception. This, in our view, is always the result of the action of a spirit outside of the human form who produces upon the spiritually sensitized brain the impression of sight. Evidently there is no science of spiritual optics. The physical senses are but so many divisions of faculty, perception; the blind perceives through touch and hearing and the other avenues of sensation; when these are also closed the perception will still find a way. Spirit influence awakens and sets in action the perception of the spirit, and it takes the form of vision. In other words, it reproduces an impression upon the sensorium in the form of sight. It is quite certain that the impression of sight in the clairvoyant is not actual optical vision, but a more real perception that takes the form of vision."—Rev. Cora L. V. Richmond, A. A. Ballou, spirit influencing.

2. "Clear Seeing: a sensitive state of all degrees of acuteness, from that where the personality predominates and modifies the perception, to that where the mind is independent of the physical body and its surroundings, and is in direct contact with superior Intelligences. The last phase of clairvoyance is often seen in the dying, death being the separation of the spirit from the body."—Hudson Tuttle's Glossary of Terms Pertaining to Spiritualism and Psychic Science," quoted by Dr. George A. Fuller.

3. "Clear seeing, or seeing with the spirit eye; the indestructible part of the physical eye. An exercise of the spirit function of the physical eye."—Rev. Geo. W. Kates.

4. "Clairvoyance is from and of the soul—not of the spirit. For soul is an individualized chemical unit (an ultimate body) surrounding and protecting the spirit. Soul sees by the eyes of perception. Soul is often deaf and dumb, or it may by growth become clairvoyant, and also, it may become blind by means of disease impairing the outer organization. Soul is a growth of evolution. It acts by means of the bodily senses and through all organs and parts of the physical body.—Letter of Andrew Jackson Davis.

5. (a) "It is the faculty or power, possessed by certain sensitive persons, of seeing or perceiving, as though visually, forms and scenes invisible to others."

(b) "Soul, or spiritual perception of scenes and conditions, invisible to the physical sense of sight, hence, usually without use of the organs of sight, though not necessarily so."

(c) "It is a power of perceiving, exercised by certain sensitives, upon special occasions, when the sub-conscious mind rises above the threshold of mental consciousness."

(d) "The faculty of seeing distant objects, or objects regarded as on another plane of existence, invisible to organs of sight."

(e) "Clairvoyance is a term commonly applied to a function exercised by sensitive persons denominated mediums, phychics, seers, and prophets—who possess the power of seeing hearing and perceiving, without the use of the ordinary senses or in combination with them."

(f) "Clairvoyance is synonymous with telaesthesis, when applied to the discerning of distant objects, and is confounded with telepathy, when applied to distant scenes and conditions connected with the contact of the mind of distant or absent personality."—Letter of Hon. A. H. Dailey.

6. "It is generally impossible to deal exclusively with any single phase of psychical experience; it often happens that clairvoyance and telepathy are practically inseparable, * * * * * Experimenters in telepathy should resolve to keep their minds concentrated on some clear and definite topic of mutual interest, as by so doing they are certain to secure satisfactory evidences of the transference or transmission of mental pictures."—W. J. Colville in Sunflower, August 10, 1907, quoted from "Light;"

7 a) "The ability to see or discern objects not within reach of the eye under normal conditions, as in a trance, claimed to be possessed by some persons in the mesmeric trance state."

(b) "Clairvoyance is a natural trance condition as opposed to mesmerism or hypnotism which is induced —by artificial or external means."—Standard Dictionary, Vol. 1, p. 347. 1902.

8. "A power attributed to persons in a mesmeric state by which they are supposed to discern objects concealed from sight and to see what is happening at a distance."—Century Dic. & Cyc. Vol. 2, P. 1023.

9. (a) "Under this form of mediumship spiritual intelligences who understand the process are able to control the nervous organism of the eye through which impressions are conveyed to the consciousness of the medium. By this method of operation they are able to impress upon the consciousness of the medium whatever picture or image they desire."

(b) "Or, they may, in a higher form of clairvoyance, produce a condition which opens, for the time being, a direct channel between the spiritual world and the consciousness of the medium. In the latter case the medium unconsciously employs the spiritual sensory organs of sight. He thus sees whatever there is to be seen upon the spiritual plane within the immediate range of his spiritual vision.—The Great Psychological Crime, p. 155.

10. "The eye of the soul is independent of the eye of the corporeal body. * * * * * * When the body is thrown into a magnetic slumber, so deep, indeed, that the murderous roaring of a battle field could not disturb it, then the spirit's beautiful, sun-lit eyes can contemplate very distant localities as though they were present; and its gentle eyes can also fix their observation distinctly upon objects, persons and facts hundreds of leagues away, with all the accuracy and objectivity natural to the bodily vision. * * * "The clairvoyant vision is positive, not delusive like a sleeper's dream. Thus it has been proved repeatedly to the medical world, that the physical organs of sight are not always necessary to accurate seeing. * * * * * * * * *

"The cerebral organization is not the sole agent of intellectual phenomena, but, positively, it is demonstrated that the various physical organs are simply containing vessels and vinducts for the development and flow of man's mental capabilities."—The Great Harmonia, Vol. 5, pp. 319 & 330, by Andrew Jackson Davis.

11. "In subjective clairvoyance, where mediums perceive the spirits, as you speak of it, they do not see them in the sense that you see objectively; the external organs of sight are excluded in this operation of clairvoyance. It is a utilization of the interior centers of the visional tract upon which it depends. Thus if I, as a controlling intelligence, have a desire to produce a scene in a locality where the medium has never been, then it would be simply necessary that I should have sufficient wisdom to manipulate or energize the neurotic centers at the terminus of the optic nerve so as to produce the same result, the vibratory impress upon those centers which would have been produced had the medium actually observed the scene. In the latter case the vibrations of light would have operated upon the external organ, the vibration would have been carried through the optic nerve and the consciousness of sight would have resulted; but, in subjective clairvoyance, as I have shown, the same result is accomplished by a different process. Thus a spirit intelligence can impress with accuracy upon the consciousness of the medium scenes at a distance, externalized in the brain of the medium by the method to which I referred."—Trance Lecture of Oscar A. Edgerly on Mediumship, Dr. Chalmers, the spirit controlling.

12. "Clairvoyance, n. (Fr.) Literally, clear-sightedness; a power attributed to persons in a mesmeric state, of discerning objects which are not present to the senses."—Webster's Dic., p. 209, 1852.

13. "A faculty of power claimed to be possessed by some persons while under the influence of mesmerism. By it the clairvoyant claims to be able to see mentally things concealed from sight, to see and describe things happening at a distance, and to discover things hidden."—Universal Dic. of the English Language, Vol. 1, p. 1032, 1898.

14. "The alleged ability (in certain states) to see things not normally visible; the pretended ability to see the internal organs of a patient, and thus diagnosticate his ailments."—Gould's Illustrated Dic. of Medicine, p. 301, 1903.

15. "In the state termed clairvoyance, or clear-seeing, there is no action of the will; there is no thought; there is no evidence that the life follows the spirit; yet the spirit is away across the wide ocean; the spirit is in the depths of the captor's dungeon; the spirit is in the cloudy region, far off in space; it is away among the shining stars, in the land of souls, in that remote realm where nothing of flesh and blood can enter. The spirit is far away, and yet the life is present. And so is the body; still the silver cord is not loosened; still the golden bowl is not broken."

Mediums Arrested as Vagrants in Seattle

HELEN RICE TELLS OF HER BELIEF IN OCCULT.

Pastor of Seattle Psychic Circle Discusses Experiences in Realm of Spirits with Reporter of The Seattle Daily Times—Intangible Beings Always at Her Call—First Knowledge of Mysterious Power Came at Close of Illness, and Since Then She has Lived in Another World.

Helen Rice Burleigh, pastor of the Psychic Circle of Seattle, and alleged fortune teller, will soon appear in the Superior Court to answer a charge under the vagrant law, which makes a clairvoyant a vagrant in the State of Washington.

Mrs. Burleigh, or as she is known professionally, Miss Helen Rice, was seen this morning in her rooms at the Vendome Hotel and asked to talk, not so much about the specific charge against her, as about her beliefs and experiences as an accredited medium of departed spirits.

When found she was sitting with a circle of friends in her reception room, and it needed only a glance to tell which was Miss Rice. She was sitting in the center of the circle, and wherever she had been would still be the center, for her personality dominated the little gathering and gave an air of occultism to the room.

In the little darkened room to the rear where the spirits come, and with the canopied chair in which the clairvoyant takes leave of her earthly form and calls up her friends of the spirit world, she told the story of her discovery of her mysterious power and its effect on her life and beliefs. She says she makes no denial that she gives readings to her friends and others, but makes her defense on the ground that it is her religion. It is more than a religion with her. It is part of herself.

Parents Were Methodists.

"My parents were strict Methodists," she said, "and had no faith in Spiritualism. I was from my earliest childhood an emotional and very impressionable child. When I was 24 years old I was seriously ill and the physicians had given me up, when, one night about dusk, a face appeared to me. I cannot remember much of my sensations except that it seemed familiar, and that there seemed to be nothing unusual in its appearance.

"Shortly after I became conscious of its presence I was either entranced or went to sleep, and as I awoke I felt a hand slowly withdrawing itself from my throat. The sensation was so vivid that I looked to see who had touched me and found that there was no living person in the room. The next day my throat trouble had completely disappeared and I left my bed and went fishing with my brother.

"From that time the spirits came to me at shorter and shorter intervals, until I found that I could call them to my side at will. Then I began to ask them questions and to prefer their society to that of the people who were about me.

"Spiritualism is, after all, only an increased and highly developed sensitiveness. The spirit world is all about us, and the spirits, when they leave their earthly form, are little changed. That is one erroneous idea many persons have. There are no sudden changes or developments in the universe. Everything is the result of slow and gradual growth, and the spirit is subject to the same law as the earthly body.

Cause of Inspiration.

"Why do people who profess not to believe in Spiritualism speak of 'inspiration' of writers, painters and great orators? They confess to a belief in our creed by another name. There are times when the inspiration fails them and they cannot write or paint, just as there are times when I am out of tune with the great spirit world and the spirits refuse to come at my call, and I am speechless. It is the same phenomenon. We have a name for it; they have none. That is the only difference.

"Spiritualism is as old as time and older than history. Christ was the greatest of modern Spiritualists, and he said, 'Greater things than these shall ye do.' Clairvoyance means literally clear seeing, and we have claimed the promise of power which came direct from the fountain head of spiritual power, 'Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face.'

"What are my sensations when giving a reading? More nearly like having hold of a battery than anything you can understand. Some times, too, there is a sensation like an overpowering drowsiness. It is then that I have my deepest visions, for then I am attuned to the most delicate suggestions of the great mind of the universe."—Seattle Daily Times, Washington.

Must Pay a License.

They Must Pay License of $30 Monthly—Supervisors Hear Pleas of District Attorney and President of Anti-Faker Society and Pass Ordinance.

All persons practicing clairvoyance, mediumship, fortune telling and similar professions in Los Angeles county must pay a license of $30 a month hereafter. This was decided by the board of supervisors at its meeting yesterday.

While the ordinance is not designed as a hardship, but only to give the supervisors control over unscrupulous fakers, it means that "Dr." H. W. Moore, who has been fleecing a number of credulons dupes near Edendale, will have to get outside the county to practice his wiles, as he was compelled to get out of the city when the attention of the police board was called to his nefarious methods.

Robert M. Hale, president of the Anti-Faker society, appeared before the board of supervisors yesterday afternoon and petitioned that body to pass an ordinance creating a license of $30 or more, which should affect all Spiritualistic fakers throughout Los Angeles county.

Fredericks Wants Ordinance.

Mr. Hale was encouraged in his fight by the fact that recently District Attorney Fredericks wrote to the board recommending such an ordinance be passed and put into effect at once.

In his letter to the supervisors the district attorney pointed out that as the city authorities had found such a mode of procedure advisable owing to the rank frauds which have been exposed in the police courts for the past several months, it became incumbent upon the county to adopt a similar measure in order to save unincorporated districts as well as the county at large from the impostures and rapacity of the faker.

In addressing the board yesterday Mr. Hale said: "Your honorable body will undoubtedly know the reign of terror which the Spiritualistic faker has wrought in the city of Los Angeles. In the past few months time and again have instances arisen where families have been broken up, the wife and daughter asked to give up the pure and loyal lives they were leading and seek the society of other than their father and husband, and the latter made bankrupt through the advice of the medium.

Are Moral Lepers.

"You owe it to yourselves as guardians of the public morals of the county to promote any cause which would lead to the decreasing of the great number of those moral lepers. Fix a license, raise it to the dignified point to where it is beyond the reach of the many fakers to continue their practice, and you will find it the most efficient means of eradicating the evil.

"Gentlemen, I can conceive of no phase of graft more heinous than that which reaps its profits from the victim's moral and material ruin.

"In some instances they have robbed their victims of entire bank accounts.

"If there is any truth in Spiritualism, which the State recognizes by the fact that it grants papers of ordination to those who are worthy of them and who exclude materialization in all its forms from their ritual, I say that the mode of procedure with the services of the fakers, or those who have not these papers from the State, is illegal and should be treated as such.

"If the well-meaning Spiritualist believes in the 'religion' of Spiritualism, he must concur with the sentiment of the Anti-Fakers' society that the bartering away of his religion through mediumship, in whatever form, is the prostitution of his religion.

Spiritualists Sign Petition.

"This, a friend of mine, who is acquainted with the tenets of Spiritualism, claims that its followers agree to. Any right-minded Spiritualist will tell you he is in sympathy with the principles of this petition.

"In fact, some of the signers of this instrument are Spiritualists.

"Gentlemen, I ask you in the name of this society and of the citizens of the county of Los Angeles that the petition be granted and go into effect at once."

Hardly had Mr. Hade finished when the district attorney entered the apartment and made a statement which coincided perfectly with the views of Mr. Hale. Later on several of the supervisors also concurred in the sentiments expressed by those furthering the passing of the petition.

Chairman Patterson, who was evidently impressed with the drift affairs had taken, struck his hammer and asked: "Is the board ready to take any action in this matter?"

One of the board immediately moved that the ordinance be passed as submitted by the district attorney's office, and that the license, which should go into effect at once, be $30 a month.

Driven from City.

"Rev." Hugh W. Moore, as he styles himself, who recently built himself a cozy fakery just on the other side of the city limits of the Edendale car line, will now be in trouble again if he continues his public seances.

Recently he bragged that he would never pay a cent toward license fee.

So far his bluff has not been called, but the real reason that he is not now paying a fat license fee to the city is because the police board will not let him. He applied for a license, but was turned down so hard it hurts yet.

Moore formerly found his dupes in New York, but his methods there became so crude that the attention of the New York World and Herald was turned to him.

Under the fire of their heavy guns he was forced to leave that city in a hurry and he came to Los Angeles last spring. Here he set himself, his wife and his two little girls to work giving seances.

The little girls, arrayed in gauze, were the spirits of departed children. Moore and his wife were arrested one night a few months ago and the whole thing shown up. Moore was caught with a trumpet in his hand, giving a correct imitation of a ghost in distress, and little Niobe Moore was seen flitting around in her little nightie when the glaring electric lights were switched on by a profane hand.—Los Angeles (Cal.) Herald, Aug. 20, 1907.

SPIRITUALISM.

What Is Its Mission? An Important Question Considerered.

The most highly developed minds in the realm of the finite can only grasp in a small measure its possibilities, and it may seem presumptuous and conceited for us to undertake to illustrate that important subject; but we will be justified before the courts of the superior world if we do the best we can, even if we only to a limited extent succeed. It is a great subject, one that needs both intellectual and spiritual powers of a high order to do it justice. We will use all the abilities at our command and accept the verdict as to how far we have succeeded.

What we term the modern manifestation of the great gospel of Spiritualism is only a revived edition of a glorious truth that has illuminated the past ages of human experience, and kept the life of the race quickened with a yearning for something superior to that which it then possessed; and also with a determination that it would succeed in reaching those higher planes of life.

Modern Spiritualism appeared among the creeds and dogmas of the religious systems that were then dominating the thought of the world, not as one who in fear was asking for recognition, but, conscious that it possessed the truth, it came to the front and insisted that its voice should be heard in the councils that were moulding the thought of the world. The expanding political, social and religious thought was becoming weary of the husks upon which it was being fed. Its mission is to extend its beneficent arms and enfold all the phases of human life. It does not merely tell the world that its duty is to anticipate heavenly conditions in the elysian fields of the spiritual world, and leave the hellish conditions existing in mortal life to continue their existence, corrupting the fountains whence life should receive strength to advance on its upward journey, but its mission is to cleanse the temple of life here in mortality.

One great work that through its influence is being accomplished is in removing the old effete political systems represented by the autocratic monarchies of the world, and to enlighten their people so that they may understand the duties and responsibilities of republics and make them determined to have the principles of political and religious liberty incorporated in their governmental systems.

That it is accomplishing this work, every intelligent person will admit. Opening a canal across the isthmus is a great undertaking; the expanding civilization of the world demands it; but, using external things to illustrate the spiritual, if such a thing is possible, the labor that is needed to accomplish the work of human progress in the lines of its moral and spiritual advancement is far greater than that which need be applied to any external object, however desirable it is of attainment. To remove the obstacles that are hindering the race life, so that it can build more perfect structures in the political, social and religious world, is at present the most important work that can be accomplished.

The present mission of Spiritualism is only one chapter in the great history of its beneficent mission, and without the recording of those various chapters on the history of the world it would not have advanced beyond the barbarous plane of its existence. What was it that endowed our forefathers of the Revolutionary period with that indomitable courage and determination to break the political bands that bound them to monarchical systems of Europe? It was a manifestation of the mission of Spiritualism which was preparing the soil and sowing the seed which would produce a higher type of life and be an encouragement to the oppressed of the world, causing them to make more determined efforts for their emancipation. Without that strengthening influence from the higher realms, those who are standing in the vanguard as the representatives of human progress could not succeed in the work that they have undertaken; but with that help they can do nothing less than triumph. The law of human destiny says that the time has come when a higher civilization must be made manifest on this earth; that the old systems have seen their best days and must arrange for their departure from the arena of human life. That they are obeying the mandate, though reluctantly, is evidenced by the trend of events at the present time.

What is it that is arousing the energies of the subjects of the autocratic governments of the world and causing them to demand constitutional freedom?

It is Spiritualism working out its mission among the nations of the earth. It is working in all of the departments of life. It is no respecter of persons, its mision being manifest even among those who do not yet understand the work it is doing; not favoring one political, social or religious organization more than another, but uses what is best adapted as a medium to perform its mission, which life, placing them on a higher plane.

is the reorganization of all the systems of human

What is the cause of that strong protesting voice from the citizens of our republic demanding that those enormous combinations of capital designated as trusts shall be placed where they cannot be a menace to the stability of our republican governmental system?

It is Spiritualism manifesting its mission; extending its beneficent influence, directing the citizens of our country to deal with those conditions according as the occasion demands.

It tells them that through the influence of the spiritual world one form of human slavery was abolished in this republic, and other forms will not be allowed to take its place. It tells the citizens of this republic that its organization and development was not merely one of the accidents of governmental growth, but it has had from its first inception the influence of the spiritual powers that has directed it on its journey to the position it at present occupies, and that the labor of those who built the foundation and reared the structure has not been wasted on something of no value, but it will stand the tempests and convulsions that assail it with demoniac fury, for it has a mission to perform, which is to teach the world more perfectly the great law of progress and liberty.

What is it that is calling the nations of the world to convene their peace congresses that they may evolve methods by which the ghastly armaments of war may not manifest their hideous forms?

It is the power of Spiritualism appealing to the advanced thought of the race, telling it that the time has come to prepare to leave the barbarisms of the past ages and come upon that plane of life where race hatred and all of the demoniac forces that have caused such violence between the different members of the human race should cease.

It tells those nations which are claiming the highest civilization, that those desires for mighty armies and enormous battle ships come from the influence of the animalistic forces of life. In time the yet undeveloped spiritual powers of the world will be dominant, assuming control of human life, placing it on that exalted plane where the long-anticipated millennial age will be realized and the influences of the lower life will cease to be a controlling power in guiding humanity.

An important truth which Spiritualism presents is that human life must be incessantly active; it cannot rest content on past achievements. As soon as one problem is solved and the horizon of human knowledge is broadened, other problems are presented for which it is to work out a solution. It must realize that nothing is gained only by labor. If otherwise, life would receive something from nothing, and that cannot be, as it would violate one of the most important laws of the universe.

What is it that is urging man to investigate the causes of the extremes in human life? Some having more than an abundance of the material wealth of the world, using it to pander to the instincts of their lower self-hood, while others are suffering for the necessaries of life?

It is the operation of the great law of spiritual growth directed by the powers of the higher spheres in spirit life who are teaching mankind to more fully understand and obey the law of justice and mercy in a more equal distribution of the wealth of the material world, which produces enough for all the dwellers in mortality, so that gaunt famine would not stalk through some parts of the world and other sections have more than an abundance.

Spiritualism is performing a mighty work in overthrowing those barbaric systems that have clung to the race, handed down from the past ages till, on account of their ancient lineage, many cling to those systems as something worthy of veneration. It tells the world that all the truth the old time had will be retained and incorporated in the new progressive systems of the coming age; because that is the only thing that is immortal.

All the different manifestations of the truth that have been given to the mortal world from the spiritual planes of being have been in concord; but when political or ecclesiastical organizations tried to graft upon human society ideas that did not have the stamp of truth, it showed that it had the stamp of error.

What was the cause of the organization and wonderful development of that humane association, the Salvation Army, and has blest it with such wonderful success in the moral upliftment of those human lives that were down on the lower planes of spiritual degradation?

It was Spiritualism performing its mission as the renovator of the race.

Many of those who are engaged in the work of that army are under direct control of the powers on the higher planes of the spiritual world, who are using them to accomplish the beneficent designs that have been planned for the physical, moral and spiritual regeneration of the race. The most glorious fact about the gospel of Spiritualism is that it makes no distinction in regard to the nationality, color or religious association of the believer in that glorious truth, if the stamp of its principles are engraven upon the character. It will work among all the grades of spiritual development, wherever there is a responsive thought that can be impressed with a desire to reach upward toward the light. It will reach down into any of the depths of human degradation and help the soul to rise, and direct and strengthen it on its upward journey.

Our modern civilization, of which we make such wonderful claims, has clinging to it some of the forms of thought on political, social and religious questions transmitted to it from an inferior age, and which need to be removed, or, more properly, destroyed; for if they are not, they will destroy our civilization. A very important responsibility rests upon those who are the professed believers in the principles of Spiritualism, that they stand loyal to that belief; that they place themselves without reserve on the side of the truth, even if it upsets some fossilized theories on political or religious questions. Whether collectively or individually, life must advance or recede; there can be no standing still.

The beneficent work that it is the mission of Spiritualism to perform will be accomplished, whatever the antagonistic forces arrayed against it. It may appeal to our vanity and worldly ambition to know that we are on the popular side, but to those who profess the principles of the gospel of progress it is vastly more important to know that we are bravely doing our duty, battling for the cause of truth, whether it is in the political or religious arena, for eventually the truth will prevail.

What is it that is causing those advanced minds, of which the Rev. Dr. Crapsey is an honorable representative, to break away from the fossilized beliefs retained by the old religious systems of christendom?

It is the power of the spirit growing in their lives, causing an earnest yearning for a higher manifestation of the truth; and that desire for greater light will be granted.

It is not so much a question with such souls: are the doctrines that I am advocating popular, but are they established upon the truth?—knowing that in time the truth will receive a majority endorsement. They seek to receive their inspiration from those life-giving fountains that strengthen every one that partakes, enabling them to meet the battle of life and be victorious.

There is a mighty work to perform in the removing of those systems of life founded upon error, and in their place establish those that have the truth for their foundation.

The mission of Spiritualism is to impress upon mankind the fact that the Divine Spirit is not mocked, and whatsoever individuals or nations sow, that shall they reap.

It tells them that the truth will enter into the temple of each individual life that opens the door for its admittance, and assist it to make that temple a place where ministering angels can come as the honored guests, and to every one who will accept their instructions there will be removed those false beliefs in regard to life and its destiny, and in their place establish the soul upon that everlasting foundation which will endure when creeds and parties are known no more. They will be shown how to create, by their own acts, heavenly conditions while here in mortality, and telling the world of mortal life that "not enjoyment and not sorrow is our destined end and way, but to act that each to-morrow finds us farther than to-day."

It is the mission of Spiritualism to present the only consistent plan, by which the soul can successfully progress from darkness into light, and that is by individual effort and placing itself in concord with the forces of progression, which are ever ready to present new revelations of the truth to those who are willing to receive the increasing light. It tells each individual that he must work out his own salvation; it cannot be done by proxy; but to all those who are anxious to receive assistance, it will be given. It tells the world that in the pathway which leadeth unto life there is room enough for every one who is anxious to commence the journey; but if he would be successful, all customs must be discarded that are not in concord with the truth. It tells them that as they progress on their journey and become emancipated from the errors of life, the boundary of the soul's horizon is broadened; the pathway which at first was narrow, it representing the soul's undeveloped state, becomes the illimitable highway of progression.

We are placed here with a commission from the higher powers of the spiritual world to subdue the material world and make it blossom like the rose.

That commission also tells us that we must work faithfully to spread the light of greater knowledge in regard to the duties that must be performed if human life would be emancipated from those conditions which at present are preventing it from making a successful journey to the higher realms. Those of us who have received into our souls the glorious truth regarding life, its mission and its destiny, have a great responsibility to see that the truth is presented to the world free from any admixture with the false theories of the old theologies regarding human life, its duties here in mortality and its destiny when it lays aside the mortal and enters into a more perfect realm.

It has been the mission of Spiritualism to teach the beautiful truth of the communion of the spirit, through the interchange of thought, when those who desire that communion have placed themselves in concord, having the instruments through which it is to be transmitted harmonized. The cumbersome systems that are largely used at present will be superceded by the more simple but more perfect ones.

It teaches mankind that by this perfected method of transmitting thought, the nations will be brought into closer communion, that sense of isolation and separateness that even at the present time still exists among them will be removed, and that glorious truth will be realized that the Holy Spirit hath made into one communion all of the jarring nations of the earth.

It is teaching mankind the glorious law of the spiritual resurrection, and that it is constantly manifesting its power—a mighty attractive force—which is lifting the soul out of the lower planes of its existence, placing it where it can more clearly view the highway over which it must travel to reach that heavenly state of which it has at times caught a faint glimpse.

It is teaching the world that the heavens and hells are states of the individual soul, more than localities. It has manifested its mission by destroying that false and barbarous doctrine of everlasting punishment, and in its place presented the truth that there are none so low down in the scale but there are forces in operation that will in time lift them out of their degradation and exalt their lives. It teaches that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

The mission of Spiritualism has been made manifest in teaching the truth of the power of spiritual healing; that life here on this material plane can be healed by the power of the spirit, and even while resident here be brought into close communion with that plane of being that is free from sickness and all of the antagonistic influences which so greatly oppress human life at the present time. It also teaches that if life would receive this gift, it must cease to cling to those customs and habits that hold it down to that plane of life which is under the dominion of the lower law.

The majority of mankind have for ages believed that the physical manifestations of life were the dominant ones, but they are being enlightened on that subject, realizing that the external is only secondary—the reflex of forces that are beyond the comprehension of those who are living on the lower planes of their being. In seeking to develop the spiritual powers of life, instead of its being a sign of weakness, it is indicative of a strong, well-balanced mind.

It is the mission of Spiritualism to destroy those horrible monstrosities that mankind have in their ignorance sought to exalt and make of them a deific principle, and in their place to teach them the truth, manifesting to them the loving care of the Divine Fatherhood and Motherhood, represented through an gelic ministrations which human life is constantly receiving, and without which it never would have advanced to the plane it at present occupies, and if it were withdrawn, retrogression instead of progression would be the course of life. But as it advances step by step the vision unfolds, life becoming more conscious of those ministrations from the spiritual world, and the truth which was formerly hidden comes forth, illuminating the highway over which life is advancing.

Spiritualism teaches the glorious truth of the exaltedness of human life. It tells the world to look upward, to abandon the old fossilized belief in its inherent badness, because bondage to such thought holds life down to the lower levels, preventing it from coming into its rightful inheritance. It tells the world that the clouds which have overshadowed it will be lifted and it will be illuminated as never before. What we call destiny is the operation of the great law of spiritual progress which is lifting all the world from its present plane of thought, upward to that exalted station which at present it cannot understand, no more than the child in the kindergarten can comprehend a complete university course.

It is telling mankind that to make the perfect life, the intellectual, moral and spiritual powers must move in concord in the work of advancing it to those higher planes of life which it is striving to reach. It is telling the world to be brave in the conflict, for, whatever may try to impede its journey upward, the truth alone will stand.

We appeal to you, believers in the gospel of Spiritualism, to show to the world that by such a belief your lives are exalted, and that every honest effort for human advancement receives the endorsement and active support of those who accept its philosophy, recognizing the fact that it has been and now is an important factor in advancing the cause of human progress.

It also teaches us as far as possible to be at peace with all men, and that our warfare is not carnal but spiritual, for the contention is against the powers of spiritual darkness, and toward which we must not compromise.

With all of the advancement that the human race has made—and it has been great—there are conditions existing that are the remnants of its lower life which have not been outgrown, and which is striving for the mastery; and the soul must meet those demoniac forces with a grim determination not to yield. Every step taken to attain unto the present plane of development has been contested, and it must give fearless battle to the powers of darkness if its struggle to receive the light is successful. Every intelligent observer, watching the trend of events in the world and seeing the struggle which it is making to rise to higher planes of being, will acknowledge as correct the statement of what is necessary for the soul if it reaches the higher planes of being and becomes a resident of the celestial city.

We not only have hope but a consciousness that the truth will triumph. There have been many battles fought for liberty and progress, and though at times apparently defeated, slowly but surely the cause of truth has triumphed, and the race has steadily advanced toward that condition, when attained, it will realize its emancipation from the environments which at present seek to impede its upward journey.

One of the greatest blessings given to mortals is the fact that they can hold communion with those who in the battle of life have become victorious and have entered into the celestial city, knowing that they can come to us and help us in every honest desire.

It is the glorious mission of Spiritualism to teach the truth of eternal life; that our pilgrimage here is only a short one, and if we obey the light that is given to us, it will be increased, and even while here in mortality we can "lay up treasures where moth nor rust can corrupt nor thieves break through and steal.

We hope we have illustrated in a small measure the wonderful work that has been, and is being, done by the power of truth, and if through our humble efforts some who are in darkness have been enabled to see the light, we are amply rewarded, for a great blessing will come to every soul who reaches downward and through the law of sympathy and love draws upward those who are on the lower planes of life. If we minister to our fellow-beings in this spirit, our own lives will be exalted, and the communion of the spirit will be a reality, encouraging and strengthening us on our pilgrimage journey toward the celestial city, our home in the heavenly realms which is ours by rightful inheritance.

YOU'VE DRIED MY TEARS FOR ME.

(Dedicated to Mrs. O. M. Schmidt, San Diego, Cal.)

"You've dried my tears for me;"
What more, pray, could I do?
To fill the heart with joy,
To bring so near your boy
That he will walk with you,
And you in spirit see.

"You've dried my tears for me;"
Oh, mother, I'm so glad
To bring into your night
A sacred spirit light
That cheers your heart o'er sad,
And fills life's song with glee.

"You've dried my tears for me;"
Once seeking you have found,
And quickened in your heart,
The spirit's better part;
Now life to life is bound,—
The truth has set you free.

"You've dried for me my tears;"
Not I, but truth that came;
If I have wrought the act
That showed the sacred fact,
Blessed be Truth's holy name,—
Go dry another's tears.

THE HAYWOOD TRIAL.

The Evil Wrought by the Commodity Called Money.

The great Haywood trial in Idaho has passed into history and what a revelation?

I am prompted to point out some facts in the developments, and the outcome.

Every reader of The Progressive Thinker may not realize that the cause of that crime for which Wm. Haywood had to stand trial for his life, from first to last, was that commodity we call money. This is the keynote of the whole concert as rehearsed day after day, during all those days at Boise City, Idaho, and the people of Idaho will have cause to remember it away into the next generation, if not beyond, because it will be a continual drain and strain upon their material resources, to meet the demands of the tax collectors; but if it has commenced to wake up their spiritual and mental resources, the revelations may not have been in vain. And if the laying bare of the hideousness of such a degrading system of theological religion as was there developed, should set people thinking along those lines, even the sufferings of all the innocents will not have been in vain.

To me it has always been a mystery how any intelligent person can accept such a delusion as the vicarious atonement made by the horrible death of that glorious Man of Nazareth, although in my childhood and youth I was taught to say that I believed the degrading lie at the risk of being punished. And I can now understand how such a weak, degraded being as Orchard, with his long list of crimes running through his mental vision, could try and expect to find relief from torture, both here and hereafter, and especially when he was, no doubt, urged daily to acknowledge the efficacy of such a delusion, by his "Father Confessor" Mac Partland.

Whether the said "father," or any other father of such a faith, really and truly believes such a doctrine, is open to a great deal of doubt, but taking the theory as a fact it then becomes easy to see how the misguided Orchard could, with impunity, wish to throw the enormity of his crimes upon Haywood, as was so ably pointed out by Mr. Darrow in his summing up before the jury.

And as I read that masterly document, and the verdict of that intelligent jury, I could not help but be thankful, and deeply moved, as I thought of those brave and advanced thinkers who in the centuries that are long past and gone, gave to us our jury system; for although juries, like any other public bodies, can be corrupted, nevertheless they are the bulwark and safety of our liberties.

Yes, I cannot but think that the same spirit that prompted and guided those men who laid the foundation of our jury system, also moved and guided the men who rendered the verdict that W. Haywood was entitled to, and by so doing won an immortal victory for progress.

"ACTINA" A BLESSING

To Those Afflicted With Eye Troubles.

Every person with impaired eyesight or suffering from weak or diseased eyes should write for our latest free booklet, entitled "Positive Evidence."

The records of phenomenal cures by the "Actina" treatment, as described therein by grateful patients themselves—names and addresses given—will satisfy the most skeptical that "Actina" is not only a remarkable, simple and harmless invention, but restores eyesight even after specialists have pronounced cases incurable.

Following are a few of the successes produced by "Actina," but more fully described in our free booklet.

A Chicago gentleman, after suffering 12 months with inflammation of the iris, used "Actina" a few weeks. He says he can now see as well and as far as anybody.

An Iowa lady writes that after being under treatment of specialists for 15 years, "Actina" completely restored her eyesight and she no longer uses glasses.

Astigmatism and granulated lids impaired the eyesight of a Hartford (Conn.) lady. Specialists failed to cure. As a last resort, against advice of friends, she tried "Actina." She writes:—"For many months I have written almost daily without glasses. No more pain in my eyes and drooping eyelid is restored."

"Actina" removed a cataract from the eye of an Oklahoma lady; relieved the closure of a tear duct for a well known Chicago lady, and in scores of instances people have been able to discard eyeglasses through the faithful use of "Actina." To get an idea of the enthusiasm of our patients the entire letters as printed in our book should be read.

"Actina is made on common sense principles. Its simplicity, effectiveness and lasting qualities will appeal to any one that will investigate. Let us send you one on two weeks' trial. Use it as often as you please and if you are not benefited, or for any other reason are dissatisfied, send it back and no charge will be made. Write today. Journeys to the Planet Mars

A Narrative by Sara Weiss, Illustrated With Thirteen Original Drawings by the Authoress.

This strangely attractive narrative does not assume to be either scientific, philosophic, or as advancing any special religious creed. It is a plain statement of facts based upon the experience of a woman whose highest aim is to acquire a knowledge of truth, to earnestly strive to live it, and to offer to others a stepping-stone which may aid them, in their progress towards the light

From the standpoint of Spiritualists this is a most interesting book, as Mrs. Weiss actually took these journeys in spirit and has given them in all sincerity, to the world. The book is uplifting and full of beautiful thoughts. 548 pages. Price $1.50.

We were compelled to go to press on last Saturday in Consequence of Monday being Labor Day—two days earlier than usual, resulting in crowding out many items of interest.

Mrs. W. E. Brown, of 116 First st., Muskegon, Mich., would like to get acquainted with the Spiritualists of that city.

Mrs. Martha Woolsey writes: "Since I last wrote, Mr. Woolsey, after passing through a long siege of blood-poisoning, has fully recovered and returned to his "Home, Sweet Home." I am here, eight miles from Norfolk and five from the Exposition grounds, a beautiful spot on the Chesapeake Bay, with fine bathing. I am doing work here, but the people are very skeptical. The Exposition now has things in much better condition than two months ago, and attendance is much better, but far from completion. I have been quite busy the past few days. Norfolk has no use for mediums or their work. If you only work one day, it will cost you one hundred dollars, or it will hold good for a year, so I came out of their jurisdiction, and put up my sign and advertise in their papers. I shall stay here till after the Convention at Washington. I have been sowing the seed of Spiritualism freely wherever I go and I feel it will eventually bring forth abundant fruit."

Sollinger, all local speakers. The program for next season will be as followsas follows: September, Mrs. M. S. Greenmeyer of Lily Dale, N. Y.; October and November, Mr. Frank T. Ripley of Oxford, O.; December, Mrs. Henrietta Lichtig of Chicago, Ill.; January, 1908, Mr. Oscar A. Edgerly of Lynn, Mass.; February, we expected to have Mrs. Marion Carpenter of Detroit, but as she is going to Cuba this month has not been filled; March and April, Mrs. Fannie Spaulding, Norwich, Ct., May and June, Mrs. Antouette J. Pettingill of Malden, Mass. The above galaxy of speakers and mediums have been secured by the officers of the Temple Society. We are struggling hard, and success has so far met our endeavor to spread the truth of our glorious cause, and we hope and pray that we will find more friends in the coming season, who will assist in carrying the burden of maintaining and beautifying our Temple here."

Etienne Foutsch writes: "The Progressive Spiritual Society, after two months' vacation, will commence its regular Sunday evening service again, on Sunday, September first, at the well-known north west corner of Burling and North Ave., at 8 o'clock p. m., sharp. Dr. T. Wilkins, Mrs. Dr. Caird and some other mediums will assist our pastor, Mrs B. Hilbert. All are welcome."

Dr T. Wilkins commentingly writes: "A Program received, noting the 10th Annual Convention of the State Spiritualists' Association of Minnesota, to be held in the First Unitarian Church, corner 8th and Mary Place, Minneapolis, September 6, 7, and 8, 1907. The Program has a half-tone of Andrew Jackson Davis on its front page, and is neatly gotten up in every respect. President J. S. Maxwell and his able and efficient corps of officers are certainly worthy the patronage of every Spiritualist in the northwest, on this occasion, for their display of local and outside talent upon the program. It has long been known that this has been the banner association for enthusiasm and push. No stone is left unturned that will redound to the success of the Cause in Minnesota, by our beloved brother J. S. Maxwell.

Correspondent writes: "The opening services of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists for the season of 1907 and 1908, occurred Wednesday evening, August 28, with an audience of over two hundred people, and Dr. Caird and his aids at the helm, and Miss Elizabeth Harlow on the rostrum to do her duty as none but Miss Harlow and her eloquent guides can do it. She was in the hands of a severe cold, but under the inspiration she proved herself able to rise above bodily ailmens when there is spiritual work to do. She has never been known in Chicago to be under a stronger power than upon this grand and harmonious occasion. It was a rare treat to all present to be baptized in such a flood of inspiration and eloquence. Like a violin, she becomes stronger, more voluminous and sweeter with time and experience. Mrs. Lichtig read a prose poem, a beautiful selection, as an invocation, and Dr. T. Wilkins read an appropriate original poem, caught at the last moment previous to going to the hall, which called for the clapping of the "glad hands" of the audience and a voted request for its publication, which may be watched for later. The harmony was grand, the lecture good, the ice cream and cake "out of sight," and all wore their hearts on their sleeves, and went home reluctantly, even when the lateness of the hour bade them do so, and went "full" —of joy."

The Church of Spiritual Progress (colored) was presented with its Charter from the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, Sunday, evening, August 25, at their hall, 3329 Vernon avenue, by the Secretary, Dr. T. Wilkins, in a few well-chosen words, and a hearty welcome extended to them both in prose and a poem (that will appear soon). The enthusiasm, harmony and good cheer were the dominating features of the hour. They, on this occasion, numbered 101 members, and with Rev. Demby in the pulpit and Mrs. Lyons and her aids, mortal and spiritual, to give messages, there is no reason why their numbers will not double during the winter season.

Mr. I. C. Pope of Cleveland, Ohio, has been spending the season at Lily Dale, and sent us a list of subscribers from that favorite place of resort. He will act as agent for The Progressive Thinker wherever he happens to be. At his home in Cleveland, he frequently lectures and officiates at funerals.

M. E. Waller writes from Los Angeles, Cal.: "Mary C. Vlasek, pastor of the Society of Spiritual Progression, is attending camp at Harmony Grove. During her absence the best talent on the coast is our platform. Last Sunday the address was delivered by the noted lecturer and editor of Progress, Howard Carlton Tripp. His subject, "Physical, Mental and Spiritual Healing," was handled in a forceful and intelligent manner. Several in the large, attentive audience have reported favorable results from putting into practice knowledge gained at the meeting. Next Sunday morning the subject will be "Individual responsibility;" in the evening. "The Doctrine of Esoteric Wisdom." Always something good at our meetings. A cordial invitation to all to come and get acquainted, and enjoy the mental feasts with us, at 814 So. Main st."

Mrs. Barbara Hilbert, one of the North Side mediums, and pastor of the Progressive Spiritual Society, has returned from Camp Chesterfield, and will again enter upon the duties of her psychical gifts. Her home is at 204 Burling street.

W. J. Colville passed through the city last week on his way to California. He is to resume work at four associated centers there—San Francisco, Oakland, Berkley, and Alameda— on September 5.

Correspondent writes: "Georgia Gladys Cooley lectured and gave messages at Lockport, Illinois, last Thursday evening, August 29. A very large and representative audience greeted her. The most intense interest was manifested throughout the entire meeting and the most skeptical are wondering how it is done, etc. If it be possible to "show theem" how it is done this medium can do it. Mrs Cooley lectures at Geneva, Ill., on Wednesday, September 5."

A LUCID EXPLANATION

Setting Forth Cogent Reasons Why the Ministry Lacks Recruits.

That there is, on the whole, a slackening in the pressure of candidates for the Protestant pulpit, in spite of the statistics presented by some churches, is the only conclusion that can be drawn from the flood of articles on the subject in the religious press. If the actual situation did not arouse uneasiness it would not be so much discussed.

The Rev. Dr. David J. Burrell offers in the Christian Intelligencer an explanation that is novel, in that it really explains to the lay mind. He denies that the shortage is due to the fact that young men are growing less religious, or to the smallness of the preacher's material reward. He finds it is due to the "brightness" of the young man—to the keenness of his perception of what the pulpit, judged by many of its most conspicuous occupants, really stands for, and of what are his chances of really doing anything in the pulpit.

Urged to enter the ministry, the young man asks: What for?" To seek and save the lost? There seems to be a great deal of doubt whether there are any "lost," and some conspicuous preachers deny it altogether. To preach the truth? Yes; but what truth? A personal God? Again, many now in the pulpit seem to doubt whether there is a personal God—anything but an impersonal Law—a "something not ourselves that makes for righteousness."

A divine Christ? He is affirmed by many preachers to have been not divine, but merely a more than usually excellent man.

The atonement? "The idea that sin requires expiation is pronounced unphilosophical, and therefore untrue."

Justification by faith? From what and by faith in what? With no personal God to be conscious of an atonement, and no divine Christ to make it, there would seem to be nothing for faith to justify.

Yet if none of the doctrines once regarded as fundamental remains to fight for with the sword of the Spirit, the prospective preacher can at least devote himself to morals and ethics. But where is he to get his ethics?

In the Bible? It is said by many in the high places of the church to be merely one of many volumes of "world literature," superior in some respects to other "sacred books," but not essentially different from them.

Hence the young man finds himself invited to enter a profession which, according to the teaching of some of its most renowned representatives, has no ultimate authority for truth save such as may be found in the inner consciousness of the individual.

The foregoing summary of Dr. Burrell's statement of the situation confronting the young man, leads him, it will be seen, to the final question thus stated by Dr. Burrell:

"Shall I invest the assets of my life in a profession which has no end but to persuade a man to believe what pleases him, to be what he would like to be, and to do what, in his opinion, without any reference to 'authority,' he ought to do?"

The answer is inevitable for every young man who really wishes to do something in his life. With nothing to fight for and win, with nothing to change by his efforts, the ministry is obviously a game not worth the candle.

To decide whether Dr. Burrell is exactly correct or not in ascribing to the influences of what is called "the New Theology" the dearth of candidates for the ministry, thus finding in ministers the responsibility for the shortening supply of future ministers, would be outside the province of a secular journal. But here is at least an explanation which to the average layman is really explanatory.

The above editorial from the Chicago Inter Ocean is an exceptionally lucid explanation, but does not bring to bear one other important reason why the ministry lacks recruits. It is this: The fact that Spiritualism has destroyed the orthodox hell and heaven. DIVINE WRIGHT.

A LITTLE GOLDEN-HAIRED CHILD.

A Vision that Tells of a Terrible Hotel Tragedy.

I was to be married on December 20, 1888, in Baltimore, Md. [as set forth in the New York World], and in making my way from Tannersville, N. Y., to the Monumental City it was necessary to remain over night in the city of New York. I telegraphed to the — Hotel for a room, knowing well how crowded this hostelry was always, and especially when the approach of Christmas brought many shoppers to town.

Arriving late at night I found the clerk on duty knew nothing of my telegram sent early in the day, and there was no record left by the day clerk of a room reserved for me.

I was tired, disappointed and vexed, and was about to turn away to find another, more hospitable roof, when a bellboy coming up behind the desk reported a vacant room on the third floor, No. 27.

The clerk said, "The room is open if you care to take it," and I immediately ordered my bag brought up, leaving an order for an early call in the morning that I might make an early start for Baltimore.

Upon entering the room I became sadly depressed and seriously thought, even with my great fatigue, of leaving the hotel to find other quarters. I censured myself for entertaining this thought of fear, and began preparations for bed.

Before turning out the gas I investigated the lock on the door to find it broken and was glad to push the bolt to make my night's rest secure. I found myself wondering why the lock was broken, and I tumbled into bed without coming to any satisfactory conclusion.

I had arranged my clothing with great care upon the chair, that should I wake during the night I would not be alarmed by some hideous monster created by an untidy bundle of clothes.

I did wake in the very early morning, and by the light of the street lamps I saw, sitting upon the chair beside my bed, a little golden-haired child. One leg was raised upon the rung, with the elbow resting upon the knee. The eyes were covered by the tiny hand, through the fingers of which the tears were falling. I looked, and turning away tried to shut it out from my sight.

Thinking it would not be there again should I take a second look, I tremblingly turned my head and the child was still there.

I jumped from my bed, made a light and turned, half expecting to see a living child, but there was nothing save my clothes as I had arranged them.

I examined the door and the closet, looked under the bed, but nothing did I find save a blood stain, scarcely dry, upon the carpet near the edge of the bed.

I had not the courage to entirely extinguish the light, so turning the flame low, I returned to my bed.

Again I was awakened and again I saw the child. I could stand it no longer and rose to dress to leave the hotel immediately.

As I walked toward the depot I bought a morning paper and found upon the first page an account of a terrible catastrophe that had happened two hours before I entered that very same room.

A woman, beautiful and talented, worn out with the struggle of life, had taken her little child to room 27, — Hotel, and shot both the child and herself. FRANCIS ORMEROD.

GET IN SOMEWHERE.

A Little Incident and Its Apt Application.

I have been much interested in the efforts made through the columns of The Progressive Thinker to effect a complete organization of all the societies of Spiritualism in the United States, and perhaps Canada. The other day I picked up a slip of paper containing the first missionary work of a little girl after she had joined the church. I give only the part needed here, as it is to the point. The subject the little girl chose was her own grandfather.

"Finally she said: 'Grandpa, are you a Christian?'

"Yes, my dear, I hope I am."

"What church do you belong to, grandpa?"

"Oh, I belong to the Church of Christ."

"But what church is that? Are you a member of the same church that mamma and I are—the Episcopal church?"

"No, my dear, I am not an Episcopalian."

"Are you a Presbyterian then?"

"No, I am not a Presbyterian."

"Are you a Baptist then?"

"No."

"Are you a Methodist then?"

"No, I don't belong to any of the churches; I just belong to Christ."

After a pause in which the little one was thinking it over, she turned to her grandfather and said: "Well, grandpa, if I were you I would try and get in somewhere."

Now, Mr. Editor, do you not think that this incident can be applied to the many independent Spiritualistic societies that remain outside of an organization? Are they not only just a lone society, and actually nowhere? Would it not be well for them to get in somewhere, where they could be counted? If they are Spiritualists, as they claim to be, are they not in a place where it is impossible to count them? What does their influence amount to?

I have noted the appeal of Brother Barrett in urging the various societies to send in the number of members to the office in Washington, D. C., 600 Penna Avenue, S. E., so that the number of Spiritualists in the United States of America could be given in the United States census soon to be taken; and yet it seems that one-half of the known societies have not reported. Surely, they ought to get in somewhere. I am reminded of the remarks of Brother Moses Hull (now in spirit life), made at the National Convention at Buffalo, N. Y., a few years ago. It appears at one time some action in the New York State legislature concerning Spiritualism caused him to appear before that body, when he was asked if the Spiritualists were an organized body. He at once realized how the matter stood, for how could an unorganized body have any influence before a body of that character? What plea could he make? To realize this was embarrassing, very much so. Just here is where every lone society in Spiritualism stands.

It is to be hoped that these independent societies will see the necessity of gaining a standing by a good strong organization, and make their report up at once and send it in. Let them get in somewhere where they can be counted.

Yours in the interest of the cause,
J. L. MUSSINA.

WHENCE COMES THE POWER?

It Must Originate in the Spirit World.

I am prompted to make this inquiry by reading an article in The Progressive Thinker, No. 924, from the pen of Charles Dawbarn, in which he says "Human immortality is as much a proved scientific fact as human mortality. But spirit return is so embedded in imagination and so colored by mortal sense and experience, that the scientist who accepts immortality as a fact, can only accept spirit return in homoepathic doses of very high dilution."

I have been an investigator for many years, and am one still. I have had many and varied experiences, and from them have been led to believe that spirits do return and operate intelligently through mortals, and that many very wonderful manifestations have occurred, for which I have not as yet found an explanation except through the power of returning spirits. I believe that I have been an instrument in their hands for the healing of diseases. But I will say right here that I have never been before the public, nor have I received remuneration. Most of my work has been done by the "laying on of hands;" some by absent treatment when the parties knew of my intended efforts, and some by absent treatment when the parties did not know of my intended efforts. I have cured when I did not know that the parties were afflicted. I treated a lady for a cold in the head and cured a goitre of many years' standing. A lady came to me to have her eyes treated, and I cured a tumor of more than forty years' standing. Many years ago I slept with a man at his request, as he dared not sleep alone in the absence of his wife, for fear of dying in nightmare; he never was troubled afterward. I never failed of curing a felon; such I have always done by touch, but in some cases the parties did not know of my powers or intentions, therefore it could not be explained by hypnotic suggestion.

I cured a man of the liquor habit (for which he is very thankful). I never had any conversation with him or any other person in regard to it until the work was done. I asked my spirit helper to make him so sick he could not drink; the work was accomplished in that way. I am now unknown to the party, working on a person who is addicted to the excessive use of tobacco. I know he is getting very sick, and I have full confidence of my ultimate success.

I have stated but a few instances, but enough for my purpose.

Forest Home and Island Lake.

I have just returned home from camp work, after an absence of nearly three weeks. Forest Home Camp, in northern Michigan, is one of the best. The train stops directly at the gates of the camp, and the Intermediate lake makes it one of the pleasantest, both for boating and fishing. But the new boat Convoy, made and managed by Mr. Bennett, which carries about twenty passengers, was the delight of all. And for all who love Nature in her naturalness, where there are no flies or mosquitoes to torment one, and good accommodations for all, under an able management, with a fairly good attendance each Sunday, we felt that our efforts were not in vain.

Mrs. Cora Fuller Williams furnished the music, and her weekday entertainments were appreciated by all who had the pleasure of being present.

The bazaar was well patronized, which was a source of revenue for the camp.

Having completed our work there, we left the camp with the best wishes for their future success, and reached Island Lake Camp in time for Sunday service, where it was said we addressed the largest audience of the season. During our stay there it was indeed wonderful to see the changes that had taken place. It is really getting to be a little village in one of the finest groves. The buildings are well shaded. Many new leases were granted—in fact, there was a regular boom, with the result that there will be a number more cottages next season than this. As I have not attended any other camp this season, can only speak from hearsay, but hope all are doing equally as well.

We were hastily summoned from there to Port Huron, Mich., to officiate at the funeral of Mrs. Jennie Wysner. Four orders were represented, and with the many friends from in and out of the city it showed us how she was loved by her friends and respected by all. Our sincere sympathy went out to the husband and son in their bereavement. Knowing from sad experience what such sorrow means, still with the knowledge that only Spiritualism can give, we know all is well.

After September we shall be free to engage with any society desiring our services for fall or winter. Will also officiate at funerals in or out of this city, and would be pleased to make camp engagements for next season, 1908. With kindly greeting to all I remain, NELLIE S. BAADE.

New York Central Camp.

The last Sunday of a four-weeks' camp was one of the finest of days—everything in Nature to make one feel happy, and to bring a large audience.

We tried a new plan this year, that of throwing the gates wide open and admitting all free to the lectures, trusting to their liberality of collections, and it proved a success, which brought in many outsiders that had never attended camp or a Spiritualist meeting before. The morning service was opened with a solo by Mrs. Herrick, which did her credit; then D. A. Herrick gave an invocation and lecture, and it was a grand closing address as his last, being here all through the camp with his good wife. After a chicken dinner served at the dining hall, and many friendly handshakes, the afternoon service commenced with a solo rendered by Arthur Myers, which did the young man credit, after which Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond gave an invocation and lecture on her reception at the Peace Congress at The Hague, and she was the second speaker at the Congress, which is very flattering (being a woman), and the Spiritualists need take pride and courage of the advance and success. After another solo by Arthur Myers, Mrs. Herrick gave some very wonderful tests to the large audience, which were all recognized. The camp was a grand success, and we look forward to another year with great encouragement.

THE TIDE COMING IN.

It Sweeps Over Ecclesiasticism, Materialistic Science and the Mammonized Press—Even Rockefeller's Throne Trembles!

These are truly wonderful times. The tide is coming in. It has been a long time coming. Now that it is coming, we are daily seeing sights that ought to delight both gods and disenslaved thinking men. The coming great inrush of the tidal wave has long been anticipated and foretold by coast guards and lighthouse keepers of Spirituality. The effect is destined to startle the world. Crystallized ecclesiasticism, materialistic science, the mammonized press, with all the oppression, plutocracy and industrial slavery, for which it has long fought and for which it stands to-day—all will have to hurriedly change base or else be so deeply buried as to remain but a nightmare of the past.

None are so blind as those who refuse to see. Willful blindness will no longer avail, however. Playing possum will no longer serve. The Spiritual revolution is on. Held back, dammed, concealed, and ignored with arrogant self-assurance, it is now breaking all bounds. Do you still need signs? Must you still have pointed out to you the straws which show which way the wind blows? Look about you. Lift up your head—if but for a moment—from your downward peering after materiality, and you will see something coming beside which a Kansas cyclone will seem but an amusing plaything.

This is to be no little sectional or local disturbance. It will be universal and world-wide.

If you want an ecclesiastical straw as a guide—you who read and think at least a little—peruse the sixty-five articles of the Syllabus issued by Pope Pius X, full copy of which appears in the Hearst newspapers of about August 3, 1907. Following the sixty-five articles appears the official certification of Peter Palomelli, notary of the Holy Roman and Universal Inquisition:

"On the following day, Thursday, the 4th of the same month and year, a report of all this having been made to his holiness, Pius X, his holiness approved and confirmed the decree of the most eminent fathers and has ordered that all and each of the propositions cited above shall be considered by all as CONDEMNED and PROSCRIBED."

A perusal of the sixty-five articles, evidencing, as they do, a complete breaking over the line, FROM THE INSIDE, threatening and making almost sure a destruction of the very foundation of the great oligarchy, and the REASON for the condemning and proscribing is obvious, but the late act appears to some as locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen. Read and conclude on this for yourself.

If you want evidence as to how materialistic science finds itself up against a proposition that is seemingly playing havoc with all the cold, polished and dearly hugged negation pronunciamentos of Nature's helpers to hold the universe in place, read up the findings forced upon Prof. James H. Hyslop, formerly professor of ethics and logician in Columbia University, now secretary of the American Institute for Scientific Research. Prof. Hyslop has written a book on the subject. Read it.

If you want evidence as to how the mammonized press can no longer shut out the Spiritual Philosophy, its trend and deep meaning to humanity, let us cite you one instance:

In the Sunday Magazine of the Los Angeles Times, of August 4, 1907, in the department of "Care of the Body," conducted by Harry Brook, of the Times Staff, there has been smuggled in a three-column fine-print article which, whilst allegedly for the "Care of the Body," goes perhaps as deeply into the question of existence or non-existence of disembodied spirits, mediumship, telepathy, and kindred occult things as might be possible under the circumstances, and includes an interview of Prof. Hyslop, all of which is profound, enlightening, and suggestively significant. In the interview Prof. Hyslop shows he has cracked the shell of ultra-materialistic science, heretofore so compactly and rigidly encasing, when he says: "Caution and deliberation are the duties of the scientific man, and he is not to be castigated too severely for hesitation in the acceptance of every claim presented to his attention, but while he is justified in suspense of judgment at all times, he is not excusable for taking the attitude of a man who will not entertain possibilities for what he does not always believe."

If you want further proof as to how the mammonized press falls into line, perforce, in sensing of the spiritual wave now inflowing, note the article of Ella Wheeler Wilcox in Sunday's Los Angeles Examiner of August 4, 1907, entitled "What I Think of Spiritualism." This article is attemptedly illustrated, too, by the Examiner artist, Robert Carter, and whilst the supposed spirit being has a set of wings rivaling those of a condor of the Andes, and has a distressed facial expression as though suffering from a great overdose of green cucumbers, yet, as a whole, the article and the illustration shows what is coming.

In the industrial field it seems there needs but the citing of the Haywood trial, and the text of Judge Landis' decision in fining poor "Rocky" twenty-nine millions and upward for just a little favoritism in handling the earth's oil, priorly appropriated.

There are other signs, too numerous to mention, that he who is not entirely spiritually blind certainly must see, even in the fog of mammon and materialism now enveloping us.

Stand from under, ye worldly wise! There are great times coming to this world yet. P. O. CHILSTROM.

Nature Does It All.

If the question were asked me, "Do you believe in a God," the answer would be, I do not.

For eighteen hundred years the priests and preachers have been trying to teach the people that they must believe, that they say it is not necessary to know. But just believe; if you know, you will know too much, and then our church is gone to the four winds.

We live and learn and gain knowledge from Nature's laws; we do not have to believe at all, because there are too many facts we can learn, we have no use for fiction.

We have no use for a god, for Nature is boundless or infinite. We have no use for a creator, for there was never anything created.

What causes the earth to revolve around the sun once a year, and an infinite number of other planets have each one its respective rounds to go? It is the power of Nature. Nothing exists outside of Nature.

Spiritualism In Classic Antiquity.

I remember to have read somewhere an amusing essay on "The Ignorance of the Learned." Some curious additions might be made to it in connection with the question of Spiritualism, concerning which an extraordinary amount of ignorance is being exhibited by nominally erudite persons; that is to say, by university professors and others, claiming to be good classical scholars. In the first place they treat the subject as a science and philosophy of quite recent origin; and, in the second place, they ridicule and deride it, in apparent obliviousness of the palpable fact that a belief in Spiritualism was universal among what may be properly called the flower of the human race, namely, the philosophers, poets and historians of the ancient Greeks, whose writings teem with narratives of phenomena identical in every respect with those which are incessantly presenting themselves to the students of Spiritualism at the present day. These were observed and recorded by men of remarkable genius, whose works have been recognized, for centuries past, as possessing the highest value and the greatest authority in relation to the subjects of which they treat. The writers of them are acknowledged to be the great beacon-lights of the human intellect, and their historical works are the accepted sources of all the knowledge we have acquired concerning the history of the countries to which, and the people among whom, they lived. The exceptional mental power of such men has never been impugned; and yet the concurrent testimony borne by their writings to the great truths of spirit return and spirit communication is either studiously ignored or contemptuously disregarded, as superstitions, by men of reputed scholarship and learning. "Superstitions"? Imagine men like Socrates and Plato, Aristotle and Thales, Homer and Simonides, Pausanias and Athenodorus, and fifty others whose names "shine like stars upon the forehead of time," being accused of superstition by men who are not worthy to loosen the sandals of the more illustrious of the ancients. The audacity and impertinence of such a proceeding stagger belief.

In adducing a series of proofs of the universality of the belief in Spiritualism held by the ancient Greeks, I am spared the trouble and the loss of time which I should have had to encounter in wading through a copious literature, by the patient and laborious researches of that distinguished journalist, Count Caesar de Vesme, in his admirable "Storia dello Spiritismo," in two volumes, published in Turin, ten years ago, and reviewed by myself in the "Harbinger" at the time the work first appeared. To him I am gratefully indebted for the facts I have condensed in what follows:—

Plato speaks of spirits as intermediaries between the gods and mortals; and it must be remembered that the gods of classic Greece were the deified spirits of departed men and women of conspicuous distinction during their earthly lives. Pindar and Menander both assert that each of us has his or her tutelary daimon, or guardian spirit. The great epics of "the blind old bard of Scio's rocky isle" abound in narratives of psychic phenomena. Plutarch speaks of both good and evil daimons. Thales describes the universe as full of spirits, who are not only the spectators of our actions, but are capable of divining our very thoughts. Epimenides acknowledged that his writings were inspired by spirits. Pythagoras and his disciples had cultivated the faculty of inner vision to such an extent that they were greatly astonished, according to Aristotle, when they heard other people profess their inability to discern them; and the great Stagyrite himself was threatened with a legal process for seeking to communicate with the spirit of his deceased wife. Pausanias was haunted by the spirit of Cleonides, whom he had put to death. Cimon, the father of Miltiades, the hero of Marathon, made a journey to Heraclea for the purpose of consulting the spirit of a beloved sister. Periander, who is usually placed among the Seven Sages of Greece, visited a famous temple in order to consult the spirit of his deceased wife. The philosopher, Athenodorus, having bought a house in Athens, was disturbed every night, when he sat down to his studies, by the sound of chains clanking on the paved floor. Looking up, he saw an old man, very sad in countenance, and laden with fetters, who beckoned to him to follow him. Taking up a lamp he did so, and was conducted by the spirit to a courtyard, and having pointed to one particular spot, the phantom disappeared. He communicated the incident to a magistrate, who caused an excavation to be made, and not far from the surface a skeleton in fetters was discovered. It received honorable burial, and Athenodorus was no more disquieted.

A similar fact is recorded by Lucian, as having occurred to the philosopher Antigonus, in a haunted house in Corinth. Simonides, the poet, author of a hymn in honor of Castor and Pollux, was seated at table one day, when he saw the spirits of both in the street outside, motioning to him to quit the house. He did so, and a few moments afterward the roof of the dining-hall fell down, destroying the other guests who remained in it. The figure of Esculapius appeared to Aristotle in a temple, and healed him of a disorder he was suffering from. At Leuctra, Pelopidas, the Theban general, beheld the spectre of Scebacius near his tomb, who foretold the victory which he presently achieved. Tacitus relates some extraordinary psychic phenomena witnessed in Jerusalem just before the capture of that city by the army of Titus. According to both Pausanias and Plutarch the spirit of Theseus was seen marching in the van of the Greek army at the glorious victory of Marathon, while that of Erechtheus was likewise beheld brandishing a huge ploughshare. These apparitions were such notorious matters of fact that, after the victory, the conquerors erected a temple in the honor of both, and Miltiades, the Athenian general, not only attributed his triumph to their intervention, but in all his subsequent military enterprises he invoked their assistance. Herodotus, who is now admitted to be the most truthful of historians, and Diodorus Siculus, both affirm that when Xerxes laid siege to Delphi, and the Delphians fled from the city, they were forbidden by a medium to remove the treasure, and they themselves took refuge on the summit of Mount Parnassus. When the Persians approached the temple of Minerva Pronnea, two crags broke away from the mountain and fell upon them with a great crush, killing numbers, and a tremendous war cry issued from the temple, and the enemy, panic stricken, turned and fled. The Delphians came down from their place of refuge, and, headed by the commanding figures of two spirits, those of the heroes Phylacus and Antonous, they fell upon the fugitives, slaying them and chasing the survivors into Bocotia. The rocks were seen by Herodotus when he visited Delphi fifty years later.

A somewhat similar interposition of spiritual agencies occurred in 278 B. C., when the Gauls of the Danube invaded Greece. They attempted to sack Delphi, but a terrific hurricane burst over them, accompanied by an earthquake, which shook great masses of the mountain upon them, and they fled in wild confusion, their leader committing suicide.

I have already made mention of Epimenides, a Greek poet and philosopher, who was the contemporary of Solon, and is said to have lived to the age of 154, and to have fallen asleep for a long term of years, his awakening from which Goethe has made the subject of his poem entitled Das Epimenides Erwachen. Of them I find the following interesting particulars in Dr. Peeble's "Seers of the Ages."

"He possessed the remarkable power with which certain media of our own day are gifted: that of leaving his body and, conducted by immortal guides, visiting friends gone before, vast galleries of art, and the magnificent temples of the ascended sages of antiquity. These trances continued so long, and he revealed such strange truths upon returning into the mortal tenement, that he was held in high repute—almost revered—among the Athenians, and at death they gave him a place among their gods. His feelings, while in an inspirational condition, he described as most delightful. After his inner vision was more thoroughly opened, he declared that Plato, Demosthenes and Sophocles often stood at the foot of his couch and conversed with him. All through his marked career immortal daimons seem to have accompanied him, to whom he owed not only his health, but much of his wisdom.—J. S., in Harbinger of Light.

TRENCHANT CRITICISM.

Gentlemen with Wads of Hair, and Ladies with Soulful Eyes.

To the Editor:—I wish to heartily endorse Dr. Warne's utterances in your last issue in regard to the support of New Thought publications by Spiritualists. I do not mean to say that Spiritualists should not subscribe for or read New Thought publications, for I think that we should be big enough and broad enough to read anything; what I do object to is the practice of allowing the New Thought to masquerade as "higher Spiritualism." Spiritualism is to-day suffering far more at the hands of Christian Science and New Thought than at those of orthodoxy. The mistaken supposition, among our own people, that these cults are allied to Spiritualism is working us incalculable mischief.

Christian Science and New Thought have only one thing in common with Spiritualism, and that is their assent to the fundamental proposition of the unity of life. All the assumptions they draw from this first premise are erroneous and inaccurate. Christian science is neither Christian nor scientific; and the New Thought is not new, and its teachers do mighty little real thinking.

The basic proposition of the New Thought: "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he," is only true within certain limitations. It is no statement of a universal law of spirit. For instance, one of their teachers writes me: "If a workingman thought like a capitalist, he would be a capitalist." Capitalism is only possible when there are workingmen for the capitalist to hire; if all workingmen began to think like capitalists, then the "universal law" would have to fall down, because there would be no workingmen to hire! Suppose a thousand New Thoughtists should commence at once to think themselves into the presidency of the United States. The last one to prove the universality of the "law of desire" would have to wait 3,996 years for his inauguration.

To assert that "all is mine" is to tell a flat falsehood. All is not mine, so long as other people have most of it fenced in, and are watching their holdings with Winchesters.

To say that "evil is only undeveloped good" is to state a half-truth. There is destruction as well as construction; degeneration as well as generation. There are men and spirits who are not progressing, but who, instead, are going backward in the scale of being. These are not good in the making, but good in the process of destruction. It is all very well to claim that they will be reincarnated; but how do I know that the reincarnation theory is true? It produces no phenomena in support of its claims, and I refuse to accept any spiritual theory, however plausible, unless it can bring phenomena as evidence.

Spiritualism has nothing to do with any theories of life here or life hereafter which cannot be plainly deduced from its phenomena; and yet we are likely to be overrun by these gentlemen with wads of hair, and ladies with soulful eyes, who discourse so sweetly on the spacelessness of space, the timelessness of time, the allness of the All, and the muchness of the Much.

If the New Thought wants to come in with Spiritualism, let it drop its "soulful" posing, and its mawkish and prurient ideas as to sexual affinities;" let it get a "haircut," dress and look like the common people, and begin to talk sense.

THE GENERAL OUTLOOK.

As to Crime, Criminals, Religious Questions, Science, the Remedy.

The extensive space given to the editorials in regard to the vice and crime conditions in our country in the last few numbers of The Progressive Thinker imply that the editor wants his readers to think, and will, perhaps, allow us also to express a few thoughts on the subject.

That vice and crime, as well as outcroppings, graft, and a lessened regard for that high morality that should characterize a highly civilized community, is enormously on the increase, is not only true, but is exactly what we should expect at this stage of our development in the religious phase of our civilization.

The farmer sows his oats in the spring of the year, and in the fall he is sure to reap his harvest. This is also true of our present state of morals, and if I mistake not greatly, it is not at its high-water mark yet.

The older generations had hell-fire preached into them in their young days, and that effectively put them in the right road, for they were afraid to do wrong; but the young generation that has now grown up has not had this club held over its head, and the revision of the New Testament, in 1882, took this cudgel out of the preacher's hand, and the present generation is the result.

What will be the outcome?

When science will take the religious question entirely out of the hands of the theorist, and will substitute law and order for superstition and bigotry, then the individual will learn, obey and respect the law that controls religious impulses.

That time is coming.

As science is proving to-day that Jesus knew some spiritual laws that the church has entirely ignored, she will, perhaps, also, ere long, prove that the law of love that Jesus talked so much about should be our guiding principle through life; and when science proves this, then the world will change. Then will come a millennium, for men and women are all selfish enough to want for their own use what benefits them most, and when it is proved that by doing a kind act you are not only helping another, but that you are actually farthering your own individual interest, and when you do wrong you injure no one as much as yourself, then each one will become a unit in society that will attain toward perfection; and when this time comes then we will have a perfect society. Then vice and crime will automatically cease, but not until then.

The Christian church has not only constantly ignored the attempts of science, but has constantly opposed the effort that has been made to benefit humanity by trying to know her laws. She is now reaping her just rewards. The talent that she hid because she could not understand and would not allow science to try to unravel the secret for her, is now being taken away from her.

Should Spiritualists also oppose science?

If there is any class of people who should not only encourage but boldly appropriate every advance that science makes, it is the Spiritualist.

That religion will ultimately become as scientific as electricity, chemistry and modern scientific medicine, there can be no doubt, and the organization and the individual who gets the best knowledge of these things, and applies them to his or her life, is the one who is benefited, is proven each day, and the same will be true in the religious science that is sure to come. A GOLDEN SHEAF.

To Our Friends:—October next will bring the 50th anniversary of our marriage, and nearly the 55th of our labor in the field of Spiritualism. In the first years we published a volume, "Blossoms of Our Spring," thinking that should the time come in the autumn of life, we would have a volume fitting the occasion of the closing years, of fruitage. A half century has almost gone by, and this 50th anniversary gives the occasion for the issuance of this volume, which we have entitled A GOLDEN SHEAF. It will be made up of selections from matter not before published, in prose and verse; selections of the best sentences and paragraphs scattered through our various books; a new spiritual song with music; illustrations of fac simile automatically written manuscripts; photogravures of our home, birthplace, and brief autobiographical sketches

We propose to make the book in paper and binding as superior as the price, $1.00, will permit. Every copy will be numbered and contain our autographs.

The number of copies will be strictly limited to the number of subscribers, and the book will not be placed on sale after publication. As we have reached the conclusion to publish at a somewhat late date, if you favor the undertaking you will confer a favor by sending your name, by card or letter, at once (the price is not now wanted).

A list of names of subscribers will be published in the volume.

We thank you beforehand for your favor in inviting our book to your homes.

MASTERSHIP IS THE RIGHT WAY.

THE GREAT WORK is Vol. III., of the "Harmonic Series." It makes clear the Way of Mastership. This is the Way that leads to Individual Liberty here and hereafter.

Every intelligent man and woman who is seeking for Spiritual Truth should read THE GREAT WORK. Why? Because:

1. It teaches the Constructive Process of Spiritual Development whereby we may communicate with our spirit friends without becoming Mediums.

2. It explains the most mysterious and fascinating phenomena of human life simply and clearly.

3. It presents a new array of demonstrated facts which prove that MASTERSHIP, and not Mediumship, is the Constructive Road to Spiritual Unfoldment, and that it is open to all who elect to travel it.

4. Its author speaks from the standpoint of one who has "had the personal experience and made the demonstration."

5. It presents to the world a Moral Philosophy so simple and exact that it may be understood by a child, and yet so profound as to meet the deepest and most exalted demands of the human soul.

It will be sent post-paid to any address on receipt of $2.00. Address, Department P. T.

AN ENJOYABLE OCCASION.

The Psychical Research Society of Rockford, Illinois.

On August 18, 1907, The Psychical Research Society of Rockford, with friends enjoyed the beauties of Nature and Art Combined, at the home of Pres. D. C. McDougal and his excellent wife, where their hospitality had charming manifestation.

A picnic dinner was served in the grateful shade of the grape-arbor, where table and seats were provided, and a generous supply of all that could be desired, by nearly forty people, who showed their appreciation of all; together with friendly conversation and merry repartee.

Later, a continuous accession of numbers till an audience of near 70 people were seated on the spacious lawn, with expectant faces ready to listen to remarks by the president, followed by personal experiences, that led them to become converts of life.

Among the most interesting were those of Mrs. Grasmuck of Belvidere, who dated her experiences from childhood, when as early as her memory recalls these events, she saw, heard and played with spirit companions, in which they partook with as much zest as herself.

When she attempted to explain her conduct to her mother, she was accused of lying and punished. So she avoided saying anything more, but her powers have strengthened with the years.

When about six years old she had a vision of her deceased father, who told her that her mother was greatly disturbed by a lawsuit to recover $2,000 which he had paid and that she could find the receipt for the same in a tin box up stairs that was in a chest.

When she told her mother the reply was, "another lie," and she punished her severely.

The father came again and insisted the child should again report his message, and said the old lady, who was in the family would protect her from whipping; and so the mother listened to the old lady's entreaty that she go and see if she could find the receipt. She did so, and to her delight, found the receipt as told she would, and employed legal talent to defend the suit, which cost her $200, thereby saving for herself and family $1'800. The family then lived near Kansas City, Mo.

Mrs. Grasmuck is now 63 years old, and still retains the gift, and as late as Friday, the 16th, had a vision of some ladies who were strangers to her, which she had reported early in the day to some friends present, and two of those she had seen that day were recognized by her as soon as they came on the grounds. One is a hypnotist, the other a patient of hers, whom she had greatly benefited by restoring to use deformed feet.

She put her patient in a hypnotic sleep in the presence of the audience.

A gentleman hypnotist present gave some experiences of his, being able to make those needing the dentist's services unconscious of pain, no matter how severe the treatment.

Mr. Church gave a short address, very impressive, on the benefits derived by those whose aspirations lead them to seek spirituality, the results giving them the evidence of the unity of the life that now is with that which of necessity must continue; the assurance of which comforts in bereavement, and leads to purer living and helpfulness to others. Some tests were given by mediums present, and many encouraging words expressed.

MRS. LORINDA G. BROWN.
Rockford, Ill.

Lake Brady Camp, Ohio.

Lake Brady was at its best to receave one of its favorite speakers, Mrs. Marion Carpenter of Detroit, Mich. The Chairman, Dr. W. O. Knowles, presided as usual and after the opening exercises welcomed Mrs. Carpenter to the camp. She prefaced her morning remarks by the poem "Two Lives." As usual she took her topics from the audience; four were given, "Look Within," "The Now," "If a man die shall he live again," and "The punishment of crime outside of the law."

Before the afternoon address Dr. George B. Cock of Canton, gave a short talk on the school he wishes to establish to educate people in scientific Spiritualism. The largest crowd of the season gathered in the afternoon to hear Mrs. Carpenter. After reading the poem "Not Understood," she again took her topics from the audience, the main one being, "The rights of children." Mrs. Carpenter will remain a week at camp, she will assist at an entertainment given by the Ladies' Aid on August 28, and close the camp on September 1.

MARY L. BETTES.
Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio.

Parkland Camp, Pa.

Sunday, August 18 dawned fair, with a cool breeze blowing among the great trees that shade the fine new auditorium.

The first morning assembly bell rang, and soon, from narrow paths, came the gleam of summer dresses, and the voices of camp residents moving toward a common center. The ringing of the second bell, found a small audience—from which a disfiguring board fence, called by courtesy a railing, had been judiciously removed since the previous meeting—occupied by the vice-president, Mr. Luce, in the absence of R. T. Adams, the whole-hearted and much-missed president; Mr. Stretton, the musical director; Mrs. Goodman, soprano, and Helen Stuart-Richings, the speaker of the day, and beautiful with flowers and foliage from "Elizabeth's Garden."

One particularly beautiful piece, for which a city florist would have charged ten dollars, was a large and handsome basket of magnificent hydrangeas in the delicate creamy stage of their development, in a green setting of privet.

The service opened with the singing of "Come Friends and Brethren, All Unite"—and an earnest prayer for a realization of the presence and power of the divine spirit, and for open minds and hearts to receive its outpouring. Mr. Stretton then sang, at the special request of the speaker, "Lead, Kindly Light!"—sang it with such appreciation of its significance and beauty, such feeling that a wave of spiritual power swept through the place—a wave upon which the speaker's spiritual nature must have been for a time upborne, for the sermon that followed, from the words "Seek ye first the Kingdom of Heaven and its righteousness"—was deeply impressive.

During the delivery the auditorium had been quietly filling with city visitors, who came up from Philadelphia on the late morning trains, so that a good-sized audience, for Parkland had assembled before the close of the morning service. This was augmented in the afternoon by persons from the surrounding country, and more arrivals from the city.

Mrs. Stuart-Richings has many friends and admirers in Philadelphia, and they turned out in flattering numbers to hear her.

The afternoon discourse was on "The Vital Differences Between Spiritualism and Other Modern Religions," and, without a word that could be construed into an attack on any religion body or belief, was a logical analysis of the operation of the law of spiritual evolution, and a clear and comprehensive statement of the reasons for the Spiritualists' disavowal of ideas still held sacred by many people.

Both morning and afternoon discourses were followed by remarkably rapid and convincing psychic readings. Of perhaps fifty given, not one missed the mark.

A gratifyingly large collection was taken at both sessions on a plea from Mr. Locke, for and in paying off the almost liquidated indebtedness on the camp improvements.

Sunday, August 25, when Helen Stuart-Richings will again occupy the platform, will close the meetings, for 1907, of the Parkland Heights Spiritualist Home and Camp Association," and then—

Good-bye to Parkland's sunny heights,
For nineteen hundred and seven!
And may the truth we've heard while here,
Be made our lives to leaven.

PRESENT.

Harmony Grove Camp, California.

To the Editor:—Kindly allow me the space in the valuable columns of The Progressive Thinker to sound the news of Harmony Grove Camp, near Escondido, Cal., where I spent four days, August 17, 18, 19 and 20. The camp ground is certainly properly named, for never did I mingle with a more harmonious lot of people in a large gathering than I did at Harmony Grove Camp, and I must not forget the cook, Mrs. Roark, for she certainly prepared well for the inner man.

And now as to the workers. Well, I will simply say that fine talent was represented there, in the persons of Arthur S. Howe, president of the State Spiritualist Association; Mrs. E. G. Howe, State Missionary; Col. Dryden, secretary of the State Association; Mrs. Mary Vlasek, pastor of the Progressive Spiritual Society of Los Angeles; Mrs. Mary Morrill, of San Diego; Mrs. Sanford Johnson, a fine slate-writing medium and clairvoyant; Mrs. Pomeroy, of Seattle, Washington; with fine music rendered by our efficient musicians, Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Mack, of the First Spiritual Society of San Diego, Cal.

There has been a very good attendance so far throughout the whole time since the opening of the camp, and anyone that has never attended Harmony Grove Camp cannot even faintly imagine what an ideal spot it is for harmony, enjoyment, and health, and last but by no means least, the great spiritual benefit one derives by the intermingling of the great forces, both seen and the unseen. It seems as though Nature had purposely provided this particular place for Harmony Grove Camp, overshadowed by the beautiful broad-topped live-oak trees, and surrounded on all sides by beautiful mountains and hills it is simply an ideal spot, where angels come to dwell with mortals and impart to them a higher wisdom and knowledge, and where one can rest up the physical and unfold the mental and spiritual part of the being.

Queen City Park Camp Meeting.

Our beautiful camp has flourished in the bright midsummer days of the past week as during the weeks before, most of the accustomed faces of previous years reappearing or accounted for. Among those absent but not forgotten, is Mr. Newman Weeks.

August 20 being National Day, was appropriately observed.

August 21, Rev. B. F. Austin could not conveniently be on hand, and his place was filled by Mrs. Effie Chapman, who gave the address as well as the messages. August 22, the Ladies' Aid held their annual fair with much success, clearing considerably over one hundred dollars. Mrs. Abbie Crossett superintended the serving of refreshments, assisted by a corps of other ladies and misses; while Mrs. Gill, Mrs. S. M. Gould and Mrs. Chapman aided by other ladies, attended the fancy notions and candy tables. The fair was in progress during the afternoon and evening.

August 23 Rev. B. F. Austin gave his closing address, and August 24, J. Clegg Wright opened his engagement, which continues to the close of the camp meeting, September 1. As one of our best veteran speakers, his lectures are certain to give pleasure and satisfaction to listeners.

August 25, Mr. Wright was the speaker, Mrs. Chapman following with messages. The usual enlarged audience for Sunday was present in full force and apparently was much interested.

Friday evening a very enjoyable concert was given by Prof and Mrs. Gibson, who furnish the music at the daily meetings. Mrs. Mary Eddy Huntoon arrived early in the week, since which time she has held seances each evening, demonstrating that spirits can take on material forms under certain conditions. Occasionally some of the campers hold afternoon circles in the Grove formerly used for services, and it is said that the spirit moves to exercise divers gifts.

One more week of serene camp life and communion with disembodied friends—then comes the scattering.

The God of Antiquity.

Many teachers and leaders of this progressive age truly affirm our advancement, enlightenment and improvement upon the ages of antiquity. However, in some matters, especially in the line of Theism, people teach and believe precisely the same old doctrines "the airy nothings," of antiquity; void of truth and absolutely impossible.

They are confused and as conflicting as darkness and light; and are held by faith without a fact to support them.

Sacred absurdities and supernatural stories are accepted, not because they occurred, but because people are ignorant enough to believe them.

We could find far better reasons for believing in the many gods of Mythology than believing in the existence of one God who runs the universe by the miracles of supernaturalism, as alleged. It is the producet of superstition and fanaticism. The devotee is able to speak the thing which is not and never was.

Truth in narration is not required or expected. The religious purpose of the fable absolves it from the necessity of conforming to fact. Faith must agree with the mythological character of Scripture.

The Christian Spiritualists have got a new name for the same old God of antiquity. They call it "Infinite Intelligence;" and say "it is a principle, not a person;" and declare they do not believe in a personal God. But men do not worship an abstract principle—their conception of a God is a being possessing human attributes. We cannot conceive of its intelligence without individuality or personality to manifest it.

When Christian Spiritualists deny the personality of God, they deny the personality of Christ, his son; for if the God had no personality he could have no son. There is nothing left when personality is ruled out and lopped off.

Their "Infinite Intelligence" seems to be "a principle" of male gender—a He and Him always; and intelligence implies mind, will, memory, knowledge of a person. In spite of denial, their "Infinite Intelligence" is necessarily a personal God, and a figure of imagination, a fabulous being. They know nothing of the Infinite; in fact they say it is unknown and unknowable; nevertheless they talk, write and argue about it persistently, with assumption of knowledge.

Theism is a horrid jargon of confusion and nonsense.

A SONG FOR THE POPE.

A Man Who is Intensely Human, and Who Rules Over a Very Large Mass of Superstition and Ignorance in the Form of Human Beings.

The New York Tribune says: Let Princeton, Harvard, Cornell, etc., look to their colors this year. Their fellow countrymen at their various Catholic colleges and universities have a real, soul-inspiring college song. It is already being sung in the West and South, and before the college year closes may be heard on the campus of Fordham University, Manhattan College, etc. It's a song for "a king," "A Song for the Pope" of Rome. The song comes to this country by way of Maynooth College, Ireland, the nursery of priests. The "Song for the Pope" ispublished in the current number of the Ecclesiastical Review, and the editor urges its immediate adoption by all Catholic universities throughout the world.

Until now the "Song for the Pope" has been an anthem which was chanted in old Maynooth forty years ago. But the "anthem" has been set to livelier music, several verses having been added, and altogether in its present shape it reads and sounds like a knightly song of the days of Richard the Lion-hearted, or of Louis XIV. It was originally composed by a Dr. Murray, of Maynooth. The melody was suggested by Rev. T. J. O'Reilly, and the pianoforte accompaniment was written by Professor V. O'Brien. The "Song for the Pope" will be taken up by the Knights of Columbus and in a few weeks will be heard at all their gatherings. It is likely that it may be adopted as the official song of the knights. The first verse reads:

A song for the pope, for the royal pope
Who rules from sea to sea.
Whose kingdom or scepter never shall fall,
What a grand old pope is he,
is he!
What a grand old pope is he!

CHORUS.

Then hurrah, hurrah, hurrah!
Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah!
One cheer more for the grand old pope—
Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah!

The American students have edited the song a bit and a final verse has been suggested as follows:

O'er all the earth no land more true
Than our own dear Fatherland,
Through storms and stress it hath faithful stood—
O true may it thus forever stand!

And ne'er may the star by Columbus set
On her radiant brow decay.
Hurrah for the dear Columbian land—
For the grand old pope, hurrah!

The Citizen would suggest the following additional lines:

"As a first-class fake he takes the cake,
This Dago bunch of dough;
He's the Irish god, and he holds his rod
With his holy much-kissed toe.

"Then here's three groans for the bag of bones
That rules from see to see;
He's 'the boss of the walk,' so the Paddies talk;
But he can't rule you and me."

"HOLY" NONSENSE.

"To be Married Without the Presence of the Priest is a Grievous Sin, and is Illicit."

Bishop Muldoon declares that he has received no notice that Pope Pius X. has made any remarkable change in the marriage laws of the church. He declares that a part of the so-called changes are now a part of the rules.

"For the validity of the sacrament of matrimony the presence of the priest is unnecessary where both parties are baptised, but to be married without the presence of the priest is a grievous sin in the eyes of the church and is illicit; and if such a ceremony is performed before a non-Catholic minister, the Catholic parties thereto are excommunicated. This is true where the decree tametsi is in force, but where the decree is not in force it would not be true.

"That portion of the dispatch relative to the marriage contract being valid when the man and woman merely proclaim their intention in the presence of two witnesses, in case an authorized priest is not obtainable, is utterly unintelligible to me.

"Of course, the whole marriage idea in the Catholic church is not that either the priest of the church are the principals in the action, but that the man and woman are making solemn compact before God, from which there can be no divorce."

MINER, CONSCIOUS IN COFFIN SEES BURIAL PREPARATIONS.

Apparently Lifeless and Unable to Speak, He Regains Voice as Lid is Being Screwed Down.

MEADOWCREEK, MONT., August 27.—R. C. Hooper, a placer miner, was found unconscious in his diggings and was carried to his cabin. Restoratives failed to revive him, and in a few hours life seemed to leave his body entirely.

His companions became convinced he was dead, and so notified his relatives and friends.

Meantime Hooper, despite his apparently lifeless condition, was acutely conscious of what was going on about him. With the desperation of the dying he tried to speak when the undertaker came. Finally he regained his voice, just as the coffin lid was being screwed down.

The Psychic Riddle.

By I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D., Editor-in-Chief of "The Standard Dictionary"; Author of "The Widow's Mite, and Other Psychic Phenomena," "The Next Step in Evolution," etc.

A book full of psychic suggestions, supported by startling experiences, all told in a wonderfully conservative way. It harmonizes with the judgment pronounced by The Review of Reviews, New York, on the author's previous publication of this subject: "A very sensible, cautious, level-headed piece of work all through;" and also with the judgment on the same book pronounced by the Cleveland Record: "There has never been so fair and painstaking a book put forth on this subject as this one." Price, $1.00.

OUR CHILDREN.

Hints From Practical Experience for Parents and Teachers.—By Paul Carus.

In this little book "Our Children," Paul Carus offers a unique contribution to pedagogical literature. Without any theoretical pretensions it is a strong defense for the rights of the child, dealing with the responsibilities of parenthood, and with the first inculcation of fundamental ethics in the child mind and the true principles of correction and guidance. Each detail is forcefully illustrated by informal incidents from the author's experience with his own children, and his suggestions will prove of the greatest possible value to young mothers and kindergarteners. Hints as to the first acquaintance with all branches of knowledge are touched upon—mathematics, natural sciences, foreign languages, etc.—and practical wisdom in regard to the treatment of money, hygiene and similar problems. 207 Pages. Price, cloth, $1.00.

The Progressive Thinker.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT. 14, 1907 NO. 929

AN ENCOURAGING LETTER.

Detailing the Most Excellent Work Going on in Massachusetts.

To the Editor:—The interest with which we read the successive issues of your valuable paper is mixed with wonder that so many writers present such discouraging views as to the future outlook of Spiritualism. No sensible person doubts that the world is gradually growing better, and we believe that the standard of Spiritualism is being gradually raised as well. New people are being constantly added to our ranks, men and women of brains, education and high culture; the wheat is being sifted; when we get the chaff all sifted out we will find that we have some pretty good quality of wheat.

Reports come from all over New England, showing great interest taken in the work. Societies are preparing for the coming season, and some new societies are being formed. The Sons and Daughters of Spiritual Progress of Boston, are starting out with the object of creating a sentiment (and incidentally, a fund) that shall lead to the establishment of a home for needy mediums. Taking into consideration the great expense of maintaining a "Home" and the hardship it must be to an aged person to be removed from friends and acquaintances and the locality where, perhaps, the greater part of their lives have been spent, we wonder if it would not be better to devote our energies to increasing the pension fund of the N. S. A., that our needy workers may be cared for in congenial families.

Although it is play-time with most of the societies, our workers are kept busy at the camps, which are all reporting good audiences and much interest.

Mrs. Kate M. Ham of Haverhill, came home sick after a strenuous season's work, and had to take time to recuperate, but has so fully recovered that she is again about the angels' work.

The visit of Mrs. May S. Vanderbilt to our state, afforded her many friends much pleasure and gave us renewed courage. We were afraid we were to lose her valuable services, and the fact that she will still continue to assist in the work is very encouraging. To form an idea of her popularity one should be present and see the crowds that assemble when her name is on the program. After her recent visit to Unity Camp, we heard a lady complaining that she did not get a reading, and another said, "Why, I did not care anything about a reading, it was enough for me to just sit and look at her." It would be a bright idea if the Fraternal Order people could induce Mrs. Vanderbilt to visit them next season and give Chicago Spiritualists a chance to "look at her."

The friends of Mr. and Mrs. Caird are watching with much interest the progress of the Fraternal Order, hoping that when they have the leaven well working there they will come back and scatter a little Fraternity around here.

Miss Harlow and Mr. Edgerly have been welcomed by a host of friends in the thoughts given out by their spiritual helpers.

Mrs. A. J. Pettingill, who is so loyal to the East that she can hardly be induced to leave it, returned from her visit to Ohio, quite enthused; she found that there were warm hearts and true souls in the West as well as at home and she has promised to make them a visit of several months next season.

Mrs. Nettie Holt Harding, one of best beloved mediums is taking a much needed rest. Mrs. Harding has been giving of her best to the spirit world for many years, and that she might have strength to resume her work in the winter she has accepted of no engagements through the summer except at Lake Pleasant and Unity Camps.

The sudden passing out of Mrs. M. A. Jacobs was a great shock to Spiritualists in this vicinity. Mrs. Jacobs was one of the best test mediums in the work and will be greatly missed.

Nearly all societies in this vicinity have a Temple fund, and they all seem to be growing. Mr. Ham, the president of the Helping Hand Society, of Haverhill, reports that they started a fund a year ago last February, and they have about four hundred dollars saved, but they certainly have a most exceptional society, or Mr. Ham is an exceptional president, for he says if they need a hundred or so dollars for any purpose, all he has to do is to ask for it, and they raise it. Those are the right kind of people to work with.

We are informed that the Lowell society has some fifteen hundred in their fund, and the Newburyport people quite a large sum.

Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing made a short visit at the close of her 34th annual engagement at Lake Pleasant. Mrs. Twing is in good health and spirits, and as full of enthusiasm for her chosen profession as ever.

The friends of that veteran worker, Mr. L. L. Whitlock, after having expected his transition for many months, were surprised and pleased to greet him at Camp Unity on a recent Sunday. Mr. Whitlock has been saving souls from error for many years, and it is to be hoped he may live to do more for the cause he loves so well.

We hear that Mr. F. A. Wiggin is to remain in Boston another year, continuing the work in Jordan Hall, and also that some of our best workers are engaged at "The Temple," on Exeter street.

Unity Camp, Saugus, has had a very successful season, much better than last year. One very encouraging fact in connection with the work, has been, the class of people that are attending these services. It has been frequently remarked that nowhere can there be seen a more intelligent class of people than at a Spiritualists' meeting. We surely can boast of an aristocracy of brains, if no other kind.

We wish there was some way of getting at the correct number of Spiritualists in the country, or near it. To be sure, President Barrett is doing his best, and it seems almost incredible that any society should not be willing to assist him in the effort to ascertain as nearly as possible the strength of our ranks. Even should he succeed in getting reports from every organized society in the country, the total would be far short of the correct number, for there are thousands of believers not connected with any organization. Come, brother and sister Spiritualists, let us "stand up and be counted."

A SLEEPING BEAUTY.

She Has Proved a Puzzle to the Scientists—Florence Bennett, of Kankakee, Ill.—Her Death-like Trance Has Aroused the Psychologists of the Country, as Set Forth in the Chicago American.

The "Sleeping Beauty" of Kankakee, Florence Bennett, whose slumber has lasted since August 19, with infrequent waking periods, is to-day the most discussed young woman in the United States among scientists and psychologists.

Appeals have been received from the Boston Society for Psychical Research that an agent of the society be permitted to visit the Bennett home and make a study of the sleeper,

Because—

It is the belief of the members of this society that Miss Bennett's mysterious dreamland travels indicate the wanderings of a soul in Purgatory.

Here are some of the things Miss Bennett has told in her waking intervals, which startled the psychologists:

1—When I am away from you I am in another world, where all the people we knew before they died are now living.

2—I do not know where it is, but my life there seems as real as my life here. The hardest part of it is going and coming.

3—I do not believe it can be heaven, because the people there look as they did when we knew them here. Willie Meuve, who was killed by the engine, has the hole in his head, and his arms are gone.

4—I met Mabel Blake (dead two years) in one of the halls. The first thing she asked me after I kised her was whether she hadn't got fat. Nobody talked to me about dying. Nobody seemed to realize that they were dead.

5—I met grandmother, and she knew me, but don't ask me about grandmother. I can't tell you, because I promised her I wouldn't.

Sees a White Coffin.

Mrs. Bennett, mother of Florence, begged her to tell what she knew of her grandmother, but the girl fell into violent weeping and begged those about her to desist from questioning.

"'When I am just half awake,' she said, 'I am frightened, because it seems that I can always see a white coffin.'

"She has asked her father and me many times, 'Oh, papa and mamma, why do you let me be put in that white coffin?'

"Of course that is only when she is half conscious. When she is fully awake she appears as clear-minded as ever, except that there is this awful realization of a world that none of us know anything of."

Study for Scientists.

Mr. and Mrs. Bennett are not satisfied with an investigation of the psychic aspects of this strange case. Well-known alienists of Chicago and New York are now making a study of Miss Bennett's curious obsession, and, while the physicians are inclined to attribute the girl's condition to a blood clot on the brain, psychic experts are practically a unit in the belief that she is a trance medium of marvelous power, whose insight into the beyond is God-given, and whose development of the strange power should be conducted along lines laid down by the students of psychic science.

Professor James H. Tufts, of the University of Chicago, is deeply interested in the psychological aspects of the Bennett case and will conduct an an investigation of the phenomena claimed on account of the university.

YOU HAVE BEEN WITH ME TO-DAY

When they came and gently told me
You had fallen quite asleep;
No caress or word low spoken
Could disturb such slumber deep.

Then I thought you gone forever,
Far from earthly sight or sound;
And all future hopes were buried
'Neath that silent, snow-white mound.

But my heart was sad and heavy,
And the day became so long
And it seemed but useless singing
When no joy awoke the song.

Then you came and stood beside me,
Whispering, like one of old,
"It is I." O, Love immortal!
Just beyond the shores of gold,

Love that lives, unchanged, unchanging,
Death need give no cause to weep;
Though the tired hands are folded,
And the eyelids closed in sleep.

Has Eye of a Prophet.

Articles Lost for Thirty Years Have Been Recovered.

A boy with a sixth sense has been found in a country district of Norway. He is fourteen years old, the son of a small farmer named Floettum. Young John Floettum is said by scientists to have "a real prophetic eye and the gift of divination."

His unusual powers make him very useful to the neighbors when they have lost anything or when anyone is missing. Articles lost for thirty years have been recovered by his aid.

What Is the Explanation?

A Weird Experience in Life Related by Rose Eytinge—A Gruesome Happening that Has Always Lingered in Memory—The Warning and Wish of an Apparition—A Young Actress and Her Husband the Principals in a Strange Case.

I have never told this little incident before [as set forth graphically in The New York Dramatic Mirror], either by word of mouth or in print. An indefinable inclination to reticence has always checked me. I have had a sort of feeling that, while I was drawn into it, it was in no sense mine. But all these persons who were the principals in it have long since passed into the "great beyond," and, after careful consideration, I can find no good cause for silence. As this is a time when the occult is occupying so much attention, it is, perhaps, likely that some student of the occult may furnish some explanation of the circumstances.

In the first company in which I played there was a young man and wife, both young; she a bonny, saucy little thing, with a beautiful face and a figure like a miniature Venus, and a head as light as a feather, and a heart that would have been of the same weight but for the fact that her boy-husband had fallen into drinking habits, and was fast becoming a hopeless sot. There were from time to time the usual dreadful scenes between them, and the poor little girl would occasionally appear with tear-swollen face, and some mark of brutal violence upon her delicate little body.

There was, however, one source of consolation always at hand for her—the manager. He was an old, rather than an elderly man. Though he was married and the father of a large family, he was inclined to youthful frivolities of attire, such as bright, scarlet ties, bright tan, well-fitting gloves, and had a "natty" appearance generally. In fact, I once heard: "a man having a clean shirt front and an unclean imagination.

This manager of ours had a great liking for the pretty Little Woman. She was the singing "chambermaid" of the company. We did not use the word "soubrette" in those days, and when her husband was either absent or unfit to take care of her on her way to her home, after performances, the manager was always ready to perform escort duty and to give her a little supper, or, if the weather was inclement, to take her cosily home in a cab. The Little Woman was in no way disinclined toward these intentions.

This was the condition of affairs when the incident happened. One night, when her husband must have been a little more than usually tipsy, he fell, and was picked up with an injured spine and a fractured skull. He was carried to a hospital where, in the due course of time, he was recognized and identified. His wife was notified of his whereabouts and condition. When this state had continued for some weeks, one evening while we were all in our respective dressing-rooms "making up," we were startled by a loud shriek—a shriek so full of horror and terror that it had the effect of electrifying the whole company. Simultaneously we rushed into the passage, I following the direction from which it seemed to me the sound had proceeded, ran into the dressing-room of the little chambermaid. As I entered I was passed by a figure leaving it—a man. In my terror and haste I did not observe him closely, but I afterward remembered that at that moment I was struck by a blast of air so cold that the very marrow of my bones shivered. The little inmate of the room shrunk into a corner, a picture of abject terror, her hands outstretched before her as if thrusting from her some dreadful object, her eyes starting from her head. When I approached within her reach she clutched me with such nervous force that her fingers cut into my flesh. After she had been soothed into something like calmness—though she was far from being composed—she whispered to me to send everybody from the room. The room was then crowded and the air was rent with questions and inquiries as to the cause of her consternation.

When the room was fully cleared of everybody she still clung convulsively to me. Her eyes were still filled with an expression of awe-struck terror, passing me by and seemed fixed upon the door.

"Did you see him," she whispered to me. "Did you see Dan?"

"Dan" was the name of her husband. Of course I replied in the negative.

"No!" she answered in an accent of surprise. "No! He went out as you came in. You brushed against each other. Oh!" she whispered shudderingly, "oh! he said such things to me! Such! No! he never said a word, he never made a sound, but the words came to me, to my heart, not to my ears; but he said such things! He told me to go home to—to—oh! he is gone; he is dead. My Dan, my poor, poor Dan!" She slipped from my supporting arms in violent, convulsive, sobbing hysterics.

When very shortly after we received news from the hospital that poor Dan had died, it was evident that his passing spirit had visited his little wife, had warned her of her danger and had bade her seek the quiet of her simple country home. And this she did. It was a piteous, but pretty sight, to see her in her simple weeds. Her little flower-face framed in her widow's bonnet and veil, her whole manner chastened by her grief. It made a profound impression upon me, I being little more than a child myself.

I never saw her again, though from time to time I heard of her. She returned to the stage and became an actress of assured position, being peculiarly successful in parts calling for gentle pathos. While she never achieved importance, she always had good engagements, and wherever she went she was, I heard always beloved for her gentleness and uncomplaining amiability.

ROSE EYTINGE.

THE HOPE OF HUMANITY.

A Thoughtful Essay Based on Experience and Observation.

The Progressive Thinker, No. 843, was a soul-lifter, and it was a feast of spiritual light and knowledge to all persons who can comprehend the truth.

The lectures were all excellent, scientific, spiritual, and full of historical facts which cannot be successfully disputed. The poems were of a high order. Education in the right direction, of right thinking, living and doing at all times, together with the works and light of science, they are truly the Saviors of mankind.

The lecture of Judge J. W. North, of California, was a volume of information in regard to the hindering causes of progress and advancement of humanity in real enlightenment by the forces of orthodoxy, through Romanism and Protestantism, combined or separate.

It will take centuries of time for human beings to emerge from the dark ages of ignorance and superstition of the present and past. Mankind learns so slowly that it will take much of eternity for all to reach perfection.

With all of the light and wisdom that civilized people get from study of books, experience and scientific research, all are enveloped in the realm of mystery and doubt.

It seems as though man will never get away from the mysteries of the universe, and the struggles of science must continue to investigate all phenomena on the earth plane, to enlighten the races as much as possible.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and Mrs. Mary T. Longley are spiritual souls of a high order, and they are giving to those individuals who hear and read their sentiments of love and truth about spiritual spheres and facts in the cause of Spiritualism, much information that must come through true sources. They are truly endowed with light from the higher spheres of spirit life.

Mrs. Richmond is prophetic, and her predictions generally come true.

We get much in the Thinker every week that is food for thought and reflection.

The lecture of Col. Ingersoll on The "Devil" is unanswerable from reason and logic. I had read it several years ago, and other eloquent lectures of his against orthodoxy.

I had been led to believe, from what I read and heard, that Ingersoll was a dangerous man to Christianity and christendom; and so he was, for he exposed the old systems of cruelty, throwing the errors and superstitions taught by priests and popes. My mind was first opened to impressions in favor of Ingersoll by reading his sentiments on the subject of love for his fellow-man and the family. I read about his making six lectures in California for one thousand dollars each, making six thousand, then of giving five thousand dollars of the amount to charitable institutions of the State.

I further read about his giving one thousand dollars to the suffering refugees of Kansas at the time of their want and distress.

In all of his acts and deeds he proved to the world that he was a humanitarian, carrying out in his life the principles of practical religion.

The Colonel was living the creed of Thomas Paine, in doing good to poor and needy humanity, showing his fellow-men, by inspired eloquence, that priestcraft and popery would keep mankind in ignorance and superstition if they held the power over the world. The inhabitants of christendom would have been in a terrible state of affairs had science and true education been entirely defeated by the evil power of dominant churchcraft!

Where would have been the principles of liberty and freedom established by our revolutionary ancestors in this great country?

The language of Ingersoll indicates in the latter part of his speech on "The Devil," where he grows enthusiastic on the subject of eternal life, that he was ready to grasp the truth, if he only had the evidence.

He says to "take your babe upon you knee and say 'mine, and mine forever'—what joy!

And further, he utters the words, "to clasp the woman you love in your arms and know that she is yours forever," etc., shows that Ingersoll would enjoy a blessed state of being in the great future.

I have been convinced by experience and observation that the orthodox devil is a myth. The evil inclinations in human nature are developed into the so-called devils of humanity by falling into evil habits and then living and practicing lives of sin and wickedness.

I have never been tempted to do wrong, only by men, women, and my own evil tendencies. It seems as though the devil was born in me, and I have had to fight him all my life, in order to be half-way good and decent. Is not that the experience of all persons who have been battling against their evil inclinations in order that they might live moral, honest and pure lives?

When I was young the first tempters I had were other boys, who wanted to lead me into stealing, lying, and of committing crimes of a small nature. When I grew older, had I listened to the siren voice of females, and males, who were developed in crime, I should have become an outlaw in civilized society.

We all realize in our daily lives that human nature is weak and frail, and the evil, or devil, within each man or woman is only kept under control by constant effort and struggle.

When individuals fall from true manhood and womanhood, they are under the control of these evil influences in their natures. If Jesus cast out seven devils from Mary Magdalene, they were simply evil spirits, or evil habits, and by overcoming them she could become a pure woman. And so it is with each person. He, or she, may cast them out themselves, or some other person of good influence and power may help them in the outcasting, so they can become useful men and women in their community.

The human beings cultivate the evil tendencies in their natures; they become drunkards, gamblers, thieves, robbers, murderers, fiends, and the worst kind of criminals and outlaws of the country. And thus, if we cultivate the good within our natures we can live pure and useful lives.

Man and woman have dual natures, so they can be good or bad, according to their thinking, living, doing, education, training or environments. The worst evils, or devils, the world over had, were priests and popes, kings and emperors—rulers and tyrants who carried on the awful wars of religion and conquest of the past ages.

The wicked rulers and leaders of past centuries in the kingdoms and nations of the earth, whose greatest desires and aims have been to keep the inhabitants of the world in ignorance, prejudice, superstition and darkness, so they might rule and control them.

In thinking of the world's tragedies, it is enough to fill the minds of enlightened people with horror and despair, and it would do so were it not for the hope and principle of progress in each generation of the world's growth and unfoldment of the human races.

Progress upon the earth plane has been slow and tedious on account of hindering causes.

The hope of humanity is in the grand philosophy of Spiritualism, in which all aspiring souls can progress and develop their spiritual natures, lives and characters, not only here on this lower sphere, but in the great hereafter.

SPIRITUAL PERSONALITY.

"Neither Can They Die Any More, Being the Children of the Resurrection."

I have read with a great deal of pleasure and profit the able article of Mr. Charles Dawbarn in The Progressive Thinker of August 10, and I am very much pleased to note that he accepts the great and important truth; that the immortality of the soul has been proved beyond any reasonable doubt by scientific demonstration. I read from his article: "Human immortality is to-day as much a proved scientific fact as human mortality. But spirit return is so much embedded in imagination, and so colored by mortal sense and experience, that the scientist who accepts immortality as a fact can only take spirit return in homoeopathic doses of very high dilution."

It is quite satisfactory and assuring to humanity that the fact of the immortality of the soul rests securely upon a scientific basis. It is a most glorious consummation at which we have arrived where we do not have to depend upon faith—that "substance of things hoped for, and evidence of things not seen," for the proof of the continuity of life.

But while science has proved to us the immortality of the soul, it has furnished us but little, if any, light as to the nature of that higher and grander life which awaits us on the other side of the grave. But from the present standpoint of civilization, it seems that the real nature of that higher life will never be known on the earth; that the incarnate soul will never be able to solve the mysteries of the future life until it lays down its incarnate mantle and passes through the golden gates of death.

It is well for the children of men, however, to give the question of the hereafter such consideration is its importance demands. While we may not solve the vast problems of the future life with any scientific accuracy, we can by contemplative spiritual prevision be able to understand some of its elements.

We know that in this life we have both a physical and spiritual personality; and by personality I mean those characteristics and differences which distinguish one individual from another. Every human being who has lived, suffered and died on this earth of ours since the genesis of man, has possessed a distinct personality. The physical personality ceases at the touch of death, while the spiritual personality passes on and enters that higher and broader existence on the other side of the valley, and journeys along the progressive pathway of immortality forever.

The question of the status of the emancipated soul seems to have been somewhat discussed and considered by Christ and the Sadducees, on a former occasion, but there seems to have been no definite conclusion reached by them. The Sadducees confronted Christ with an incredible supposititious case in order to present the question to him for an answer. They asserted that there were seven brethren, and that the first took a wife and died without children; that the second took her to wife and died childless; and that the third took her; and in like manner the seven also; and they left no children and died. Why the fact, so often repeated, that there were no children as a result of these seven marriages, cuts any figure in the question involved is mantled in obscurity. After the death of the seven brothers we are gravely informed that "last of all the woman died also;" which, by the way, was a very proper thing for her to do after having been so numerously married and widowed!

In the case presented by the wily Sadducees, they wished to know of Christ "in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife." He informed these disbelievers in the resurrection that those worthy of the world to come "neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

All, in the glorious land of the hereafter, will be equal to the angels, and will be the children of God. At death the physical personality will be destroyed, and the spiritual personality will be advanced to a higher plane of activity and intelligence, where progress will be more rapid and enduring. There may be here and in the hereafter change without progress, but there can never be progress without change. The personality of the soul is shaped and developed by the laws of eternal progress.

In this world of ours the spiritual personalities of men and women are continually changing, and is it not reasonable to suppose that this condition will change when we shall have advanced a step higher in the march of endless progress?

Physical and spiritual progress are the offspring of evolution, and evolution is the means by which progress is made possible.

The implication seems to be irresistible that the soul, as it moves onward, will be subject to continual change; that its course will be onward and upward, not for one century or a century of centuries, but for all time and for all eternity; that it is a part of Infinite Power and will never die; and that when it has advanced far enough to understand the grand purposes of its being, it can look back over the path of its progress and understand the purposes of its creation. Science has proved the immortality of the soul and we are vouchsafed eternal life.

Let us then be contented with this earthly life and make the most of it till its close; let us appreciate that it has been given us for a wise purpose; so that when the summons comes, as come it will, to lay down this earthly existence, we will welcome it as a blessed invitation to step up higher!

THE ANGELS CAME FOR HIM.

A Typical Death, Illustrating the Grand Truths of Spiritualism.

Mr. J. J. Whitney of San Francisco, Cal., passed from this earth to his spirit home, August 23, 1907, after an illness of several weeks.

Through his wife's remarkable mediumship, he had become a believer in spirit return, but the real knowledge had not become his until his spiritual eyes were opened during his illness.

He said to his wife the day of his passing out:

"My dear, the angels have come for me. This room is full, and each one holds a light in their hand. I see my brother; also our son. My mother says she has come for me. Kiss me, dear, and do not weep. Let me go to my home over there, while you stay in your home here. Go on with your good work; enjoy life, and be happy."

He then passed out like one going to sleep, and while the spirit was departing, Mrs. Whitney saw a white vapory cloud over him, and it seemed to form into a body, which proves conclusively, there is a spiritual body as well as a physical one.

Mrs. Whitney's control (Mr. Salsbury) said to her: "We shall not allow him to return to earth for one year. He must rest in his spirit home."

Mr. and Mrs. Whitney traveled the pathway of life together thirty-four years, never being separated a single day. They were "real companions." Where one went the other was sure to go. They traveled over land and sea and were happy and free.

The funeral services were conducted at Holsted & Co's parlors, 924 Fillmore street, on Sunday, August 25, at 2 p. m.

Many friends were present to pay their last tribute of respect and love to a true Spiritualist, and a good man.

Mary A. Wells officiated. Mrs. Darling sang "the songs that touched our hearts" and inspired us to better things. At his request, his body was cremated, for he loved freedom for his body as well as for his soul. May he rest in peace with God and the angels new and forevermore.

RELIGION GONE WILD.

Pittsburg Scandal Bares Voodoo Sect—Conviction of Rich Man Reveals Strange Rites of Creed—Call a Negress Divine—She Leads Followers Daily in Incantations and "Spirit Communion."

Declaring that he is a worshiper at the shrine of a woman who has proclaimed herself "God," [as set forth in the Chicago Daily Examiner of August 31] William McKnight, a wealthy merchant of New Kensington, Pa., stood before Judge McDonald in Greenburg to-day, accused of improper relations with Mrs. Lydia Regis, wife of a prominent New Kensington citizen. After hearing of the weird teachings of the "divinity," who is a negro "voodoo woman," and the conduct of her followers, the jury returned a verdict of guilty in twenty minutes.

For more than three years this strange sect has existed in Pittsburg, and it is charged that homes have been wrecked, families disrupted, fortunes and business sacrificed by men and women who fell into the snare of the voodoo woman.

Faithful to Sect.

Faithful in his belief of the teachings of the woman before whom he has prostrated himself for many months, McKnight defended his actions by declaring that he "lives only in the spirit" and that the "spirit marriage" performed by the "black God," as he calls her, sets aside all other relations.

This peculiar sect has its headquarters in a house in Murtland avenue in the heart of Pittsburg's east end residence district. Here, each Sunday, the faithful "children" of the leader, without regard to race, gather early in the morning, discussing their weird "revelations" and communing with each other as "spirits."

Scandal Reveals Sect.

The teachings of this strange leader, Mrs. Morrison, as she is known to the community, were revealed by the breaking up of two homes in New Kensington.

Mrs. McKnight, after a three years' effort to persuade her spouse to forsake his beliefs, sued for divorce, caused his arrest and took steps to secure possession of his property.

Mrs. Regis, who is named in the McKnight divorce suit, has sued for divorce and her husband has sued McKnight for $10,000 for alienation of his wife's affections.

BEAUTIFUL PHILOSOPHY.

Selected and Adapted.

If any little word of ours
Can make on life the brighter;
If any little song of ours
Can make one heart the lighter,
Oh, let us speak that little word,
And take our bit of singing,
And drop it in some lonely vale,
To set the echoes ringing.

If any little love of ours
Can make one life the sweeter,
If any little care of ours
Can make one step the fleeter;
If any little help may ease
The burden of another;
Angels give us love, care and strength
To help along each other.

If any watchful thought of ours
Can make some work the stronger;
If any cheery smile of ours
Can make its brightness longer,
Then let us speak that thought to-day
With tender eyes a-glowing,
So Love shall grant some weary one
True joy from our glad sowing.

How Your Astral Looks.

"IN THE HIGHLY DEVELOPED MAN SHOW FORTH THE COLORS PICTURING THE NOBLEST DEVOTION, THE FINEST INTELLECT, UNSELFISHNESS; THE LIGHT BLUE OF SPIRITUAL DEVOTION; THE LUMINOUS LILAC BLUE WHICH INDICATES THE HIGHER SPIRITUALITY AND USUALLY IS ACCOMPANIED BY SPARKLING GOLDEN STARS REPRESENTING ELEVATED SPIRITUAL ASPIRATIONS. THE GENERAL BRILLIANCY OF THE ASTRAL BODY AND THE MENTAL BODY IS MARKED, ITS DEFINITENESS AND THE COMPARATIVE BRIGHTNESS OF THE DIFFERENT CENTERS OF FORCE ARE ALSO CONSPICUOUS. OCCULT ADVANCEMENT IS SAID TO BE SHOWN BEYOND THE VISIBLE SPECTRUM, BUT ALSO BY THE GREATER LUMINOSITY OF THE VARIOUS BODIES, BY THEIR INCREASED SIZE AND MORE DEFINITE OUTLINE.

"ALTHOUGH SCIENCE IS NOT YET PREPARED TO ADMIT THE EXISTENCE OF THESE VARIOUS PLANES OR DEGREES OF MATTER IN NATURE, THERE IS SAID TO BE NOTHING IN THIS HYPOTHESIS IN THE LEAST CONTRADICTORY TO ITS TEACHINGS; AND ALL THE LATER DISCOVERIES OF SCIENCE ARE IN THE DIRECTION TOWARD A PROOF OF OCCULT SCIENCE. THE HIGHER GRADES OF MATTER FOLLOW ON IN ORDERLY SEQUENCE FROM THOSE WHICH WE ALREADY KNOW, SO THAT THOUGH TO SOME EXTENT EACH PLANE MAY BE REGARDED AS A WORLD IN ITSELF IT YET ALSO IS TRUE THAT THE WHOLE IN REALITY IS ONE GREAT WORLD WHICH FULLY CAN BE SEEN ONLY BY THE HIGHLY DEVELOPED SOUL."

Almost the whole civilized world, outside of the ranks of Spiritualism, is investigating OCCULT SUBJECTS in connection with SPIRIT RETURN.

In fact, avowed Spiritualists are far in the minority when one considers the simple investigation of THE TRUTH of SPIRIT RETURN, without any "tag" attached thereto. Millions of people without any semblance of a "TAG" attached to their person are investigating OCCULT SUBJECTS along scientific lines. Never before has there been such interest manifested along the lines of PSYCHICAL RESEARCH as at present. The following article from a prominent Theosophist will be read with deep interest, as it illustrates the important fact that OUTSIDE OF SPIRITUALISM there are minds in CLOSE TOUCH with the SPIRIT REALMS, and from whom valuable information can be gleaned, as it emanates from another point of view.

Never before in the whole history of this great movement has there been such an awakening on PSYCHICAL SUBJECTS as at present, and by those, too, who refuse to wear a "TAG," either as Christian Scientist, a Theosophist or a Spiritualist. Let Truth prevail, even if without a "TAG."

What is an astral body:

The scientists long have talked about it; the modern scientific men like Elmer Gates of Washington, D. C. and Dr. Baraduc have experimented with it; gifted and trained clairvoyants like Mrs. Annie Besant of Adyar, India, president of the Theosophical Society, with scores of others testifying to having seen the astral bodies of other people, to having consciously used astral bodies of their own, and, as a latter day wonder, certain well known occultists claim to have finally produced pictures of a now celebrated body which the wise ones say they see and study and which even the humblest member of the work-a-day, play-a-day world uses every day from morning until night, from night until morning, from birth until death, and after death, yet again many years.

Every Person Has an Astral Body.

The astral body, it is asserted, is the body we all wear in addition to the physical body, just as we wear several layers of garments. Over the dress is the coat. The physical body is the coat. We lay it aside when we go to sleep, and roam the starry dream-world through in the astral body. We leave behind us the familiar physical world, and we go into the astral or starry world in the astral body, which is the appropriate vehicle for our work and travels there. When we shuffle off the mortal coil we have quite discarded our physical bodies and our familiar physical playground. We go to other pastures, the astral plane, occultists say, to remain there at least for a time in our astral body.

The astral body, occult investigators declare, is a kind of second body—a shadow, as it were, of the dense physical body, made out of a more refined matter. Yet they say that astral matter is real matter—not spirit. The astral body is not the soul, although it slowly leaves the physical body at the time of death, and the man, living still, though dead, dwells for a time in the astral body, and perhaps haunts the scenes and localities with which the man is familiar. Some occult students are bold enough to say the newly departed man in his astral body experiences a sense of strangeness and perhaps grief in his new surroundings, and is not able to understand why his friends and relatives cannot see him. They say it is the presence of the astral body that gives that sense of weirdness to death, that feeling as if the atmosphere of the room is filled with some palpable presence.

Then why do not we see the astral body? The layman asks and the occultist answers: Why do we not see the air? Why do we not see the ether? Why do we not see gases? They are made of too fine a tissue for the ordinary gaze to grasp. Why do we not see the ultra-violet rays? Our optical nerve does not re spond to their vibrations. They vibrate only within limits of the solar spectrum. Some people cannot see even the rays of the spectrum. They are blind. Some people can see more than the spectrum rays. They are second-sighted, double-sighted, higher-sighted. Their higher vision is developed It is they who see the astral body, the astral plane. The rest of us live among the influences of the astral world, use our astral body often, witless of the existence of either, it is claimed, as the plant grows without eyes to see the sunlight of the world, yet a part of the life of the other. Yet there is scientific gossip about the eyes of the plants. Prof. Heberlandt has found them in the leaves, the rudest of rudimentary optical instruments. So in each man. are the elementary formations of faculties whereby he shall be awake to the wonders of the astral world, endowed with sight for astral bodies.

Astral Matter Finer Than Ether.

The finer matter which is said to compose the astral body and the astral body and the astral world is finer than the ether, interpenetrating the ether as the ether interpenetrates the air its particles moving freely between the particles of ether and air—that is to say, the astral body is made up of the same particles as the astral world, just as the physical body is made of the same particles as the physical world and interpenetrates the physical body. This subtler matter moves with far greater celerity, of course, than the heavier matter of larger and denser molecules. And the blush of the maiden coy which mantles the cheek of her physical body becomes in her astral body a vast charge of rosy or deeper red, oversweeping her entire frame.

Is she in love? Her astral body is pink of hue and suffused with innumerable lovely lights. Is she afraid? Her astral body is gray with the livid fears that cannot be veiled with the rigid calm assumed by her physical frame. Is she devoted to a noble ideal? Every aspiration is painted in its splendor in the radiant colorings of the starry world. Every emotion which stirs her heart, every state of mind of the livelong day surges over her astral body as fast as comets across a sky, steeping it with real, though often fleeting changes, as precipitate and real as ink in a glass of milk, so the believers claim.

The astral body of the ordinary man is so rarely at rest, one noted observer on occult planes has declared, that it is difficult to get an idea of it if attempt were made to do this without reckoning with the emotions which constantly are charging through, now one, now another. In a moment the astral body is thrown into violent agitation and the original colors are almost obscured for the time being.

Each Passion Has Its Own Color.

When a man is in love a gleam seems to come from above into the cramped life, it is declared, and the divine spark within glows with brighter response. The two astral bodies of "before" and "after" a man has been in love scarcely would be recognized as belonging to the same person. Selfishness which shows in the astral body with muddy browns, deceit which shows with muddy greens, avarice which is represented with brownish tints, have vanished. The brownish green of jealousy is there, extremely active, as is evidenced by the bright scarlet flashes of anger; the blue of devotion is improved, and a touch of pale violet appears as indication of response to a really high ideal. This is the picture of an ordinary average man, of "the commonplace type" with the stick and the "pipe."

For there is said to be a great difference between the astral bodies of savages and civilized men, between common types and geniuses and saints. A really undeveloped man's astral body, Mrs. Besant, the celebrated occultist, has described as a cloudy, loosely organized, vaguely outlined mass of astral matter, containing material drawn from all the seven grades of astral matter which correspond to the solids, liquids, gases, and others of the physical plane, but the coarser materials vastly predominate. The colors caused by the rates of vibration are dull, muddy, and dusky; browns, dull reds, smutty greens are in the majority. The various passions show themselves as heavy surges, or when violent as flashes. The astral body is larger than the physical, extending around in all directions ten or twelve inches beyond. In sleep the astral body, enveloping the man himself, slips out of the physical body, leaving it to slumber. The life streams are sluggish, and the astral body, stimulated neither from the physical nor mental worlds, is drowsy and indifferent. It floats just over the physical and has too little vitality of its own to enable it to go away.

How the Average Astral Man Appears.

Mrs. Besant says in the average moral and intellectual man the astral body shows an immense advance. It is larger. There is a larger proportion of the finer sort of astral matter which lends a luminous quality to the whole, the expression of the higher emotions sends playing through beautiful ripples of beautiful colors. The outline is clear and definite instead of vague and shifting, and it assumes the likeness of its owner. Its activity is constant and hence it is in perpetual vibration, showing endless varieties of changing form to which it constantly recurs when any pressure is removed that may have caused it to change outline.

In sleep this well trained astral body is said to slip out of its physical incasement and roam about in the astral world, drifted hither and thither by the astral currents. The consciousness within is not yet able to direct its movements, but engaged in the enjoyment of its own mental images and mental activities. Thus a man may gain knowledge when out of the body and subsequently may impress it on the brain as a vivid dream or vision; or, without this link of memory, it may filter through into the brain consciousness.

Hues Not Known in Physical World.

The astral body of a spiritually developed man, Mrs. Besant describes as composed of the finest particles of each sub-division of astral matter, the higher kinds largely predominating in amount. It, therefore, is a beautiful object in illuminosity and color hues not known in the physical world showing themselves under the impulses thrown into it by the purified mind. Every organ has been vivified and brought under the complete control of the owner.

When this man's physical body goes to sleep there is no break in consciousness. He merely shakes off his heavier vesture and finds himself unincumbered by its weight. He can move anywhere within the astral sphere with immense rapidity, and no longer is bound by the narrow conditions of the physical world. His body answers to his will, reflects and obeys his thought. His opportunities for serving humanity thus enormously are increased and his powers are directed by his virtue and his beneficence. The absence of gross particles in the astral body renders it incapable of responding to the lower objects of desire. The whole body vibrates only in answer to the higher emotions, his love has grown into devotion, his energy is curbed by patience. Gentle, calm, serene and full of power, but with no trace of restlessness, such a man, believers say, has powers manifold, unknown to the cleverest man of the street.

Lilac Blue Shows Higher Spirituality.

In the highly developed man show forth the colors picturing the noblest devotion, the finest intellect, unselfishness; the light blue of spiritual devotion; the luminous lilac blue which indicates the higher spirituality and usually is accompanied by sparkling golden stars representing elevated spiritual aspirations. The general brilliancy of the astral body and the comparative brightness of the different centers of force are also conspicuous. Occult advancement is said to be shown not only by colors beyond the visible spectrum, but also by the greater luminosity of the various bodies, by their increased size and more definite outline.

Although science is not yet prepared to admit the existence of these various planes or degrees of matter in nature, there is said to be nothing in this hypothesis in the least contradictory to its teachings; and all the later discoveries of science are in the direction toward a proof of occult science. The higher grades of matter follow on in orderly sequence from those which we already know, so that though to some extent each plane may be regarded as a world in itself it yet also is true that the whole in reality is one great world which fully can be seen only by the highly developed soul.

Sixth Sense of the Gifted Soul.

The highly developed soul simply has more senses, they say, than the ordinary man, just as the ordinary man has more senses than the animals who are without sight, hearing, smell, and so on. Each of the five ordinary senses slowly has evolved through the ages. And each creature sees the world according to the number of his senses in working order and according to accuracy and acuteness.

The trained clairvoyant has added the sixth sense, which is becoming a more and more common attribute among people in general. Even among people who have paid no attention to these matters a natural clairvoyance sometimes is noticed, and this gift or faculty of clairvoyance is becoming more and more frequent. So that more and more are joining the company of those who claim to know, for whom the higher bodies of man are not faiths, beliefs, suppositions, hypotheses, but facts.—Chicago Tribune.

REPRESENTING UNCLE SAM.

The Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands.

Says the Northwestern Christian Advocate:

"Hon. James F. Smith, Governor-general of the Philippine Islands and representative of the United States in that country, is being apparently made the tool of the Roman Catholic hierarchy, which is seeking to force the millions of natives who have broken away from Roman Catholicism back into that church. The Cable News of Manila, P. I., says that before leaving Antipolo, Governor-General and Mrs. James F. Smith, upon the request of Father Chonco, signed a petition to the Pope of Rome that the Virgin of Antipolo be made the patron saint of the Philippine Islands. The Virgin of Antipolo is a wooden image, brought to the Philippine Islands from Mexico by Spanish friars more than two hundred years ago. People adore it and believe that it possesses miraculous powers. The Cable News thus describes Governor-General Smith's visit to the shrine of the Virgin on Antipolo.

"The church bells were chiming when Antipolo was reached. Padre Chonco, curate of the Virgin's edifice, stood ready in ceremonial robes, to escort the governor-general and his wife to the altar, while the other members of the party remained farther back. When two pieces of tin were drawn aside by unseen hands, exposing to view the Virgin of Antipolo shining white under the dome, Governor-General and Mrs. Smith dropped on their knees. They remained in this devout attitude several minutes, while Father Chonco and his assistants filled the building with heavy incense and chanted in honor of the image to which thousands of people have made pilgrimages year after year that the lame might walk, the blind see, and the insane regain their minds. This being over, the Smiths and their companions were accorded the rare privilege of going behind the altar, where a closer view was had of the wonderful image."

"Since the acquisition of the Philippines the Roman Catholic church has used every means to convey the impression that it has established official diplomatic relations with this country, and in this effort it has been aided by Roman Catholic government officials. Such officials should be made clearly to understand that the nation is not to be hitched to their sectarian wagon. Governor-General Smith would not humble himself before such an image in America. He knows that his fellow-Catholics in this country would not respect him if he did."

THE GOLDEN WEDDING.

In Honor of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Emery, of Prophetstown, Ill.

Mrs. Eva Emery Dye, of Oregon City, Oregon, was unable to be present, but she sent the following poem, entitled, "The Golden Wedding, in honor of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Marriage of Cyrus Emery and Martha Ann Rose, July the 19th, 1857,"—as a souvenir from the grandchildren in Oregon, Emery, Tafton, Everett and Eva Dye:

When this old town was young and Prophetstown was new,
When Indian gardens bloomed and
Indian apples grew,
When groves of hickory nut and oak lined all the river shore,
And lingering Winnebago barks the dimpling waters bore,
When unfenced prairies stretched in endless waves of green,
Decked with the myriad bloom of Springtime's splendid sheen,
When pigeons flew in clouds across the Summer sky,
And turkeys gobbled greeting to wild fowl scurrying by,
A bride and groom from distant Maine came here to live and grow
In Blackhawk's Prophet's town some fifty years ago.

Around their home the poplar slim
Grew up and up to giant limb,
And children played beneath the shade
That apple, plum and cherry made.
Small feet went pattering o'er the floor,
Small hands plucked roses by the door,
Small faces slept on pillows white
Through many a frosty winter night.

Each season brought its glad surprise
Of mystery to youthful eyes,
A row of currants in the sun Came reddening out when June begun,
Big yellow apples, ripe and sweet
Came tumbling down at Autumn's feet,
And Christmas stockings ever bore
The richest gems that Winter wore.

The very clothes again I see,
That once we donned in childish glee.
The skating caps and mittens red,
And white pajamas for the bed;
The pantalets of brown nankeen,
And pretty low-necked frocks of green,
Ah! well again I hear the sound
That old melodion spread around.

The school bell called, and eager feet
Went hurrying down the village street
Till years and years had spread, anon,
And all of yesterday is gone.
The "Little Brick" is seen no more,
And yet, as joyous as of yore
The river flows, and grasses grow
As green as fifty years ago.

And two sit here with whitened crown
Who fifty years have known this town,
Who've seen the generations pass
As Summer wind across the grass,
Whose children, scattered far, obey
The call to celebrate to-day,
And wreathe with wealth of love untold,
This wondrous Wedding Day of Gold.

Long years, dear parents, may the sun
Shine down on you and benison,
As children's children rise to bless
Your early deeds of tenderness,
And as your footsteps slowly tread
The shining path before you spread,
May life's last years as brightly glow
As once,—some fifty years ago.

SPIRITUALISM IN PHILADELPHIA.

The First Association Making Fine Improvements.

We are making a little more noise in Philadelphia at the First Association.

DuringAugust, while services were discontinued, the inside of the Temple was redecorated in a very improved and delightfully modern manner, at a cost of about seven hundred dollars.

The board of trustees has approved a suggestion of our pastor Rev. G. Tabor Thompson and have chosen the officers for the society to be composed of ladies—an auxiliary to the Board of Trustees—which is to be called the Silona Temple Circle, in honor of Andrew Jackson Davis's first wife, whoes spirit name is Silona. This society gives a theater party at the old minstrel house on the first of October, and it will have other treats as the year advances, of which all may likewise partake with enjoyment.

Sunday, the first of September we had most pleasing opening services. With the old altar rail and pulpit of orthodoxy removed from the rostrum and the lower platform prettily decorated with palms, ferns, and cultivated and wild flowers, we found ourselves in a fitting place for spirit communion.

Mr. Thompson has supplied us with a new organ, which was used at this service for the first time. The blended tones of the harp and violin fitted in quite harmoniously, as did the solos of our gifted singers.

Mr. Thompson's discourse for the morning, "The Palace Beautiful and the Temple Beautiful," he handled with great spirit and touched both our hearts and pocket-books, holding his previously established record for collecting money, by raising during the two services nearly eight hundred dollars— more than the needed sum for renovating the Temple; we hope ere long to have it a newly carpeted and theater-seated building, which will be an improvement on the present bare floors and pews. In the evening the subject was "Dearest Thing to Man in the Universe." The lecture was followed by spirit communications given through the instrumentality of our most gifted medium, Mrs. Essen Wanger, who is one of our own members and gives positive proof of continued life in her sweet mediumship.

Oh, we are alive to the glories of both worlds! We intend to be as advanced in all other lines of life with which we are meeting in our work as we are in religious or philosophic matters.

Our dear Captain Keffer leads the rest of us in extending most cordial invitations to all of our readers who may visit our city, to come and see for themselves what good things are to be found in the "Little Church Around the Corner."

THE PRESENT CONDITION.

The Good Work of Spiritualism, and the Evils That Afflict It.

To read The Progressive Thinker from week to week one finds its pages replete with the best thoughts from earnest minds of logical reasoning, soul-uplifting sentiments, and on varied subjects pertaining to human progress and spiritual growth.

Since the advent of Modern Spiritualism a flood of spiritual light has been let in on the heretofore mental darkness of mankind as to his spiritual life hereafter, and it has gradually thrown off the false teachings and doctrines, and by the unseen forces has an unconscious influence been produced all-pervading and radically revolutionizing.

Modern Spiritualism has played an important part in this great work, and dates the commencement of the positive proof of man's future life, and the reaction against the dogmatic assumptions of the comfortless doctrines of the Christian churches, as well as the cold, heartless philosophy of materialism.

But we, as Spiritualist reformers are not to measure this great truth by the simple experience each one has had of tests and messages of a personal character from our loved ones, but by the universal principle its truth expresses to all the world. The moral influence of this belief of immortality is ennobling and beneficial, and the ground-work of all religions, and the impetus to our present scientific age of civilization. The Psychical Research Society, composed of every shade of religious belief as well as of infidel and materialistic minds, is doing invaluable work. for the truth of Spiritualism to-day, and helps materially the revival of our Cause through its crucial experiments and investigations, and placing their demonstrated facts side by side with those of our own personal experiences in the privacy of our home circle.

The inspired poets, Longfellow, Tennyson, Browning, Wordsworth, have anticipated the Psychical Research Society, but this inquiry on the part of science and the thinkers of the age is only to emphasize the truths that like the law of gravitation and all laws of nature, exists and waits man's discovery.

But I did not sit down to write my own thoughts and sentiments, so much as to mention the able and timely article in the last issue of your paper by Paul McArthur, of St. Louis, Mo., President of the Missouri State Spiritualist Association.

To my mind there has not appeared a more clear, critical arraignment of the present condition of our Cause and valuable advice as to the remedy than his timely words inspire.

In these critical and trying times, when the very air is vibrant with seeming ill, and impending wrongs of crime, and depredations of every kind, in every department of society and life, when our sensitives are brought under its baneful influence, and the blighting curse of selfish greed prostituting their divine gifts for the paltry dollar, it is high time as Spiritualists we arouse ourselves and devise means to guard our Cause against the incoming tide that threatens to wreck the last vestige of good in man and give him up to the devil and his angels, and the disease of sordid commercial Spiritualism.

To come to a more rational and Spiritual understanding of true Spiritualism and humanity, is to feel the seriousness of life and human existence, and while we may doubt the preachers' word and the spiritual faker, we listen to the scholar and inspired teachers and discern the signs of a new dawn of human life and destiny. MIRACLES.

Miracles Are Incredible and Impossible

I have here condensed and slightly modified some arguments from eminent philosophers and scientists on the subject of Miracles.

The essence of Christianity lies in a miracle; and if it can be shown that a miracle is either impossible or incredible, Christianity is false. If Christ wrought no miracles, then the Gospels are untrustworthy.

chance nor special providence, but by chance nor specil providence, but by the laws of Nature; and if there be one truth which the scientists and philosophers have established it is this, "The laws of Nature immutable." If these laws are immutable they cannot be suspended;; for if they could they would not be immutable. A single suspension of these laws would prove their mutability.

Now, if the alleged miracles of Christ required a suspension of Nature's laws, and that being impossible, the miracles were impossible and not performed. If not performed, then the existence of supernatural marvels and miracles is incredible and impossible.

To accept a miracle is to reject demonstrated truth. A miracle is a violation of natural laws; and as unalterable experience and knowledge have determined these laws, the proof against a miracle is as entire as any argument can be. So there is direct and full proof from Nature against the existence of any miraculous events.

Observation teaches us that miracles never happen but in times and countries in which they are believed, and before persons disposed to believe them. No miracle ever occurred in the presence of men capable of testing its miraculous character.

In the name of universal experience we banish miracles from history. In the Christian age people believed in miracles and demanded them. However trifling the alleged miracle might be in this atmosphere of unbounded credulity the breath of exaggeration soon expanded it into marvelous proportions.

If the survival of Christianity proves its divinity, then the survival of the miracle-attested faiths of Buddhism and Mohammedanism, its powerful and flourishing rivals, must prove their divinity also.

With the advancement of knowledge the belief in the supernatural is disappearing.

Those freed from ignorance and superstition know that miracles are myths.

What proved the strength of Christianity in an age of ignorance is proving its weakness in an age of intelligence. Christian scholars now recnise the indefensibility, yet some attemnt to retain the shadow of the supernatural when the substance is gone, and depend upon assertion.

The possible is not miraculous. Miracles must be dismissed from the domain of fact and relegated to the realm of fiction.

Badly Disappointed.

An Eminent Lawyer has been badly disappointed. Thoroughly anxious to become convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, he tells of his unsatisfactory experiences with various mediums. Thousands have passed through similar experiences and have at last been convinced, so he must not be discouraged.

To the Editor:—I notice that you are very liberal and give both sides of the vital question, advocated in your paper, a hearing.

I wish, therefore, to submit, in a few words, something of my experience in the investigation of mediums.

A few years ago I became quite interested, and while in New York attended several of the "materializing seances" given by a Mrs. Gray, in West 34th Street, but was not satisfied nor convinced that they exceeded anything beyond what is known as or called "show business." After that I attended three or four of the "dark seances" of Mr. Dell Herrick; who is a pleasant and well educated gentleman. His exhibitions were certainly very mysterious, but everything that was done was in total darkness.

I then procured a copy of the book "The Widow's Mite," which I read carefully, and discovered that, by "reading between the lines," the author had many doubts and misgivings as to the truths alleged in said book.

I saw in "The Light of Truth" an illustrated account of a wonderful seance held in St. Louis, describing the materialization of the wife of one of the audience assembled, who appeared in her bridal dress, and after greeting her husband in an affectionate manner, asked him to take hold of her dress, standing behind her, and while he held it she disappeared, leaving him standing there with the dress in his hands.

I then procured the books called "Rending the Vail," "Beyond the Vail" and "Guiding Star," all of which I read very carefully. I submit that an ordinary person in reading the account of the medium in St. Louis, and the wonderful phenomena set forth so elaborately in the three books above mentioned, would only come to this conclusion: That if he visited these mediums he would surely SEE something which would convince him of the reality—that death ends not all, but that our spirits are able to return to earth again.

I went to St. Louis, and in company with a well-known lawyer of that city, and his wife, attended a seance held by the person above referred to. I can only say that it was a disappointment to us, for the room was so dark I was unable to see my hand before my face. The day following I went to Kansas City (this was June, 1906), and in company with my old friend, Dr. S., one of your contributors, attended the seance of the gentleman from whom emanated all the wonderful accounts set forth in the three books above mentioned. There was a cabinet in one corner of the room, from which extended wires to, a shaded oil lamp at a distance across the room, so that the light could be turned up or down by the spirits, as it was claimed by the medium. The medium seated himself in this cabinet, drew the curtain, and the light was so dim that I was unable to even see the cabinet. Several in the room were called up to the cabinet and appeared to be conversing with some one and would return to their seats again. There was a woman present who seemed to be managing the affair. Finally it came my turn, and the woman guided me from my seat up to the cabinet and then grasped me firmly by the wrists, the curtains parted and a white figure appeared and disappeared several times. I asked the woman who held my wrists who it was, and she said it was my wife. I said, "Can't she speak?" She said, "She can only whisper to you." I then asked her to give her name, which she was unable to do until the woman manager suggested several names, which were not correct. I then mentioned her name and she said it was correct. I wanted to take hold of the spirit's hand, but was not permitted. Then the spirit disappeared and another came, whom the woman said was my son. From what I could see it was a man with a long black beard, but resembling no one whom I had ever seen or known. During the whole performance the woman manager held tight to my wrists, and would not permit me to touch either of the spirits. After the performance was over she led me back to my seat. There was no other person present who claimed to have recognized their friends in these spirits. This was very discouraging to me. Dr. S. stated that he had attended a great many seances and none of them were in any brighter light than such as we had that evening, which was in almost total darkness. I had intended to remain for further seances, but as they were all in the dark, I became discouraged and gave it up. My friend, the Doctor, remarked that "It is true; doubt will creep in."

In said paper of March 11, 1905, appears a most wonderful account of spirit-photography. Reading this, I sent my photograph, and in return I received my own photograph and those of five heads besides. Not any of these heads resembled any one I had ever known in life. I then sent a sealed envelope containing four or five questions, to the most noted of all slate writers, now in San Francisco. Not one of the questions was answered correctly. They were all very simple, such as, "Where did you live?" "When and where did you die, and of what disease?" I have sent like questions to other so-called test mediums with like results. True, you receive from them answers signed by the parties to whom they were addressed, in the questions addressed to "Dear Father," or "Dear Mother," asking them to sign their names in full, your answers are only signed "Your dear father," or "Your dear mother." This seems very strange to me because it would appear a physical impossibility for the medium to know what you had written; but when you witness the tricks of Houdini and other magicians, you can only come to one conclusion: that there is NOTHING SUPERNATURAL IN THE PERFORMANCES OF THE MEDIUMS.

To say that I am disappointed, is putting it very mildly.

SAYS THE PULPIT IS MAN'S BURIAL PLACE.

Portland Pastor in Leave-Taking Sermon Declares Church Has Lost Its Influence—Will Work Among Toilers—Minister Classes the Rivalry of the Clergy with Sharp Competition in Business.

PORTLAND, IND., Aug. 11.—The Rev. Frederick G. Strickland, pastor of the First Christian Church of this city, presented his public resignation to his congregation to-day in a sermon entitled "Leave-Taking." Although called by the church to serve them another year, he finally and formally declined in his address to-day. He spoke in part as follows:

"It is recorded of Jesus that during the last week of his life he looked upon his sorrowing disciples and said: 'It is better for you that I go away.' Such times come to us all. They are times of pain and of joy. It is time for me to leave this pastorate. Indeed the time is here for me to break with the conventional method of church work. In taking such a course I must give the reasons for my action:

"The ordinary pastorate is the burial place of a man's individuality. It is a well-known fact that the pulpit has lost its influence in the affairs of the world. When the plague overtakes us now, we do not ask the preachers to pray for us. We consult the doctors and sanitary engineers. Our religion of devils and demons frightens no one now save young children, weak-minded men and women, and other undeveloped souls. The prophet of righteousness in this hour must avoid the pastorate, or it will smother him. If we occupy a certain established role in organized society, we are more or less governed by its established customs.

Rivalry of the Clergy.

"The rule of the pastorate is that the minister go from door to door in a sort of perambulating confessional, inquiring and hearing about a mass of inconsequential things. Sharp competition in business leads to shoddy and adulterated goods. So in the keen rivalry of the Protestant clergy the great truths and the great duties are neglected, scholarship lapses and the time of the preachers is consumed in wheedling and scheming for membership, each for his separate institution. Thus it happens that while science is struggling with the problems of the hour and slowly building a new and better world, the churches are lost in a buzz of fashion and small talk. Honest men must leave the conventional pulpit in order to have serious attention.

"Organized Christianity is failing. It would not need to fail if it could discern the signs of the times and adapt itself to the changing order. But there is no fluidity in religious institutions. Roman Catholicism began as a surrender of Christianity to Roman law and political favoritism, and it still bears the impress of its first moulding. Protestantism is the surrender of Christianity to the ethics of the trading class. It offers an individualistic and competitive salvation, and builds its countless divisions on a basis of rivalry and mutual exclusiveness.

A New Civilization.

"But a new civilization is at hand, which is neither feudalism or commercialism. It is a new coming of the kingdom of righteousness (right doing), announced by the Nazarene carpenter. It appeals to the common people (the workers), as did he. It presents not a theology (and Jesus was never a theologian), but a new quality of life. It abolishes classes by setting all to work. It frees the love forces, and provides mutual affection as the basis of the home instead of commercial advantage or economic necessity. It offers co-operative effort as the basis of associated life, instead of war and competition, even as the first church of Christianity was a communistic colony. Catholicism and Protestantism are inherently opposed to this new coming of the Son of Man. They are part and parcel of the present world-tyranny. Catholicism is one of its greatest property-holders. Protestantism can educate its clergy only by endowments of the Oil Trust, the Harvester Trust and other monopolies. Brute money controls the choice of college professors. The present organizations of religion must go down with the social order which they uphold. Constantine, Luther and Calvin used the so-called Christian institution in order to slay their enemies by fire and sword. I owe no allegiance to any one of these. In the technical sense I am neither Protestant nor Catholic. Between two tyrants I choose neither. If I were a Catholic I would have to bow to the political power of my ecclesiastical superiors. If I were a Protestant I would have to bow to the rich man in the pew and be 'muzzled with the golden muzzle.'

"The time has come for new ethics and a new appreciation of Jesus. In all evolution, nature eliminates the useless organs. In human progress the commercial class will disappear because it is no necessary part of the human organization.

"Mr. Rockefeller testifies under oath that he has not been in the office of the Standard Oil Company for eight years. If the modern capitalist is useless, his very existence as a capitalist is immoral on the part of society, and society must eliminate the error. But this is a new moral code, a code that is springing up in the heart of the common life, in the street and in the labor union hall, but not in the church.

"The solidarity of labor, and the elimination of our social parasites by making workers out of all through the extension of democracy in the field of industry, must all be accomplished without the help of the church. All manifestations of the unity of toil, like the sympathetic strike, will be called immoral by the church. A new ethics of universal brotherhood must be established by the sons of toil. No one else dares to smite the monopolistic devil. The church stands paralyzed in the presence of the great world problems, its energies exhausted in adding new but useless wheels to its already silent and motionless machinery.

"To follow Jesus I must submit to being excluded from the conventional pulpit, even as Jesus was cast from the synagogue of his own Nazareth. Let the modern priests of Catholicism and Protestantism hold to their property interests. Their temples are the cemeteries of their faith. Their salvation of selfishness is recoiling upon itself.

"It is foolish to attempt individually to save people while upholding social conditions that blight and destroy them.

"But out in the pain of the world's toil a new faith is arising—a faith in the rulership of love instead of hate; a faith that shall make tyrants and commercial kings to tremble on their golden thrones.

"I see the pallid hands of millions of little workers beckoning me to their cause. I see the appealing eyes of the sweatshop workers gleaming through the darkness. I hear the pain-shriek of the countless women in the street. I hear the sobbing of the army of hungry children. The church stands silent. The helpless ask for bread, a stone is offered. Where is Jesus in this struggle? Is he a monk in a cloister? a pastor in his summering place? Nay, he is out in the ranks of labor, where he has ever been. I follow; for I believe that Jesus is right rather than the church. He lived and died for the kingdom of love; the church lives and dies for itself. He sought to bring heaven to earth; the church leaves us in a present hell, with the promise of a future heaven. He took sides with downcast man; the church refuses to take sides, although the weaker brother is being exploited by its silence. He scourged the buyers and sellers from the temple; the church gives them the front pews and places them on its official boards.

Pleased With Disapproval.

"I am glad that I have received the disapproval of our local clergy. Their painstaking omission of myself is a tribute I much appreciate. Not one of the brothers has offered to set me right, who say to others that I am wrong. There was a time when men with different religious convictions met each other in the open field and discussed the matters at issue. The modern clergy subscribe to creeds that by inference consign each other to a future hell, but they form a 'union' against the man who takes their own sacred book and espouses the cause of the toiling and the oppressed. But such a 'union' is ineffective, for it is only an 'armed neutrality.' In the absence of a common foe, on slight provocation they will soon become belligerents. I do not regret the opposition of such elements. I do regret that by occupying a pulpit I am classified in the same category.

"I love the Christ who loved the children. I love not a church which is silent when child flesh is ground into profits. So the conventional pulpit is not for me. Church respectability is not for me. I am going over to Galilee with my Carpenter Friend and cast my lot with the fishermen. They are rough fellows, but their hearts are tender and the future of the race in their hands. So I leave the synagogue and the clergy, and follow Jesus to the home of toil."

The Mystery of Christian Science.

It Is Comprehensively Illustrated and Explained by the California Philosopher, Showing How It Has Assumed Such Great Importance in the World, Building Magnificent Temples, and Gaining Millions of Adherents.

A gathering of Christian Scientists is always a happy family. There is unanimous agreement that, as a matter of fact, each one present has been healed by the teaching and practice of Mrs. Eddy; that is to say, every one present has personal experience of a cure of some physical ailment which legal doctors had failed to help. Those who sneer at a million such facts are, in their turn, laughed to scorn by these men and women who KNOW they were once sick and now are well. No wonder they sing hosannahs to Mrs. Eddy and call her "Mother."

They go yet further. Mrs. Eddy has been a great Bible student, and accepts every chapter and verse as divine, subject only to the inspired interpretation of certain names and verses, and has a verse to quote with every novel teaching, to establish its truth. She includes even immaculate conception by the Virgin Mary in her teaching and belief. Her devoted followers thus find their old Bible and the new science and health so blended that they cannot accept one without the other. They are taught that every cure depends upon the teachings of Mrs. Eddy, and as proof of the truth of those teachings they exhibit themselves as divinely cured. The special relation of a certain biblical teaching to the cure of disease is not exactly clear to a logical mind, but that does not affect the believer. He points to the cure—to a million of them—as irrefutable proof that the teachings as well as the cure are divine.

Such is the position to-day in every Christian Science Assembly, and the present writer has no quarrel with either the teachings or the cures. In fact he freely acknowledges that the world is the better for Mrs. Eddy having lived in it. But all the same, he proposes to show that neither Mrs. Eddy nor her devoted followers know what they are doing, nor how they do it. Since they tell us that every cure is a provable fact by actual individual experience, the present writer will present just such a case as the Christian Scientist would himself offer as typical of his divine healing.

It is now twelve years since a worthy citizen of Iowa was rejected as a life-insurance risk because of heart disease. He was further examined by leading physicians of Chicago. His case had then so progressed that there was a leakage of the mitral valve, resulting in an enlargement of the heart, also of diseased kidneys, and swelling of the limbs so severe he would occasionally fall in a faint. No hope of cure was held out by these doctors.

In the meantime his wife had become a Christian Scientist, and persuaded him to accept their treatment. As a result he proclaimed himself cured, and has ever since acted as only a man should act whose heart is in perfect condition. So for twelve years he has been a brilliant example of the healing power of Christian Science.

It so happened that recently he was examined by a physician in California, and the result was astounding. This doctor has been examiner for the Equitable of New York, so was specially qualified. To his surprise he found that heart exhibiting the same symptoms as twelve years previously. It was absolutely uncured. Yet it was doing its work so well that the man had become unconscious that he had a heart, so far as feeling its labored beat.

There is a similar case known to the writer, of a lady proclaiming herself cured of an organic disease, which remains uncured, although the lady feels herself perfectly well. Such cases, and there must be myriads of them, are interesting and instructive, and enable the thinker to understand just what Christian Science is doing, without detracting in any way from the merits of their renowned teacher. In this brief article we will confine ourselves to the above case of "a well man with a diseased heart," as typical of the healing power of Christian Science.

All of us now-a-days recognize the power of "thought" for both weal and woe. Thought can kill, and thought can cure. So much is established fact. The sick man is suffering from the thought of his sickness as well as its reality, and the doctor always tries to cheer him up. Still, if—as in this case—it is the heart which is distressed, the sufferer cannot well help thinking "heart," for sometimes every throb means pain. The heart is thus laboring under its own difficulty, with the added weight of the sufferer's own thought, for he thinks, and cannot help thinking "heart" with every paroxysm of pain. We may call it "self-suggestion," in itself a heavy load for any organ to carry.

The ordinary healer, whether calling himself mental or divine, tries to change the sufferer's thought by suggesting that his heart is well. But Mrs. Eddy teaches and practices a method vastly superior, which we may call NEGATIVE SUGGESTION. She ignores that heart and its troubles. It is true that the denial of matter and the assertion that all is good—or God—may arouse the ire of the materialist, but, all the same, the effect is that the sufferer ignores, and actually forgets he has a heart. His heart is, for him, NEGATIVELY SUGGESTED OUT OF EXISTENCE.

What is it that now takes place? That heart, which had not only carried its own load, but also the added thought-power of the sufferer, is suddenly relieved of half its burden. It has strength enough to go on with its physical duties when it is left alone by thought. Though, of course, still organically weak and diseased, there is enough power in that heart for that man's daily life. So he goes on his way unconscious that he has an anatomical organ called a heart. He proclaims the power and virtue of Christian Science to heal the sick, and joins in the hosannahs of Mrs. Eddy.

The reader will now see that the religious belief and teachings of "Science and Health" are effective so far, and so far only as they call into play this power of NEGATIVE SUGGESTION. But religious emotions are an all-potent power for a very great majority of mankind. They are the foundation for "miracles" in every one of the world's great religions. The great merit of Mrs. Eddy is that she uses these religious emotions to NEGATIVELY SUGGEST matter and suffering. This has never been done before in the world's history. And, I frankly acknowledge, I do not know of any mental effort out-worked by any system of thought power which, in man's present stage of evolution, can produce a like effect. So, for the few of us that cannot be reached by such a denial of our every-day experiences of matter, there apparently remains nothing to help save the discoveries of mortal science, which are so heartily despised by Mrs. Eddy and her followers. Yet there is left a ray of hope for the hard-minded sufferers who are not NEGATIVELY SUGGESTIBLE.

We are all hearing wonderful tales of their experiences, told by friends and acquaintances, almost always beginning with "I did not believe a word of it. I just went to a Christian Science healer because I was coaxed to. I told him I did not believe he could help me. He said my belief did not affect his treatment. I was to get up next morning, go to work, and eat what I had a mind to. I did what he said, and am well." The reader and I are hearing such tales every day, and the man who proclaims Christian Science a humbug, in the face of such facts, is simply exhibiting his ignorance and mental arrogance.

But stop a moment. It is not all smooth sailing such as this. When we follow up the practice of these healers, we find lots of failures amid many successes. The Christian Scientist healer finds many he can cure, and many for whom he can do nothing. Another healer can sometimes pick up his failures and send them away cured. In other words, there must not only be a natural and special power inhering to the healer, but it must be adapted to the patient. Both healer and patient must thus possess a harmony of vibration even if, at that time, the patient has no sympathy with the healer's belief.

We must remember that a successful healer must possess a special faculty, and no amount of Mrs. Eddy's theology can give him that power if it was not his at birth as distinctly as would be mathematics or music. And all that Mrs. Eddy does for him is to help him unfold or develop this power which he already possesses. The great majority of her converts are unsuccessful as healers, save through the power of suggestion acting upon the mind of the patient, and thus inducing self-cure where that is possible. But when either man or woman was born with this faculty and has, through the teachings of Mrs. Eddy, grasped the mighty power of NEGATIVE SUGGESTION, he easily establishes, as he thinks, his claim to be a divine healer. Societies then spring into existence, and believers by the million will presently assert their own cures as absolute proof of Mrs. Eddy's divine theology.

Yet further, we know that comparatively few sufferers have diseased organs. Nervous affections can simulate various diseases almost to perfection, and thought power will presently make them realities which will hurry the mortal to the grave. The orthodox physician knows this full well, and tries counter suggestion with his drugs or his bread pills. But Mrs. Eddy is still more potent with her NEGATIVE SUGGESTION, and presently a feeble body grows strong because its nerves as well as its organs are no longer victims of thought power. For those who can thus be impressed into NEGATIVE SUGGESTIVENESS she proves herself an angel of health, and a blessing to suffering mortals. All the same, some of us will continue to realize that her NEGATIVE SUGGESTION has no real foundation in her theology. But the writer confesses that to about four-fifths of civilization her theology will apparently remain the very best emotional treatment to induce the development of this healing power in such of her students as already possess the faculty as a gift from Nature at birth. But their cures will be based upon NEGATIVE SUGGESTIVENESS, AND NOT UPON ANY SYSTEM OF THEOLOGY.

THOUGHT-FORMS.

The Views of an Earnest Spiritualist and Medium—Has a Vision and Hears a Spirit Voice.

On one occasion while being under control, I apparently saw a four-story stone corner building, and on the sidewalk near the building stood a man whom I had known for many years. When this man saw me standing in the middle of the street his face lit up with a heavenly smile, as he stood speechless waiting for me to recognize him. He seemed to be the most happy and healthy man I ever saw, and appeared to be thirty years younger than I knew him to be. I knew him to be nearly bald, with gray hair and beard, though he seemed to have a full head of hair, without one gray hair in his beard or on his head; in fact, his glorious appearance placed me in doubt as to his material reality; then I heard a loud but pleasant voice say: "This spirit is known in the material world by the name of ——," giving his full name, and immediately the vision closed.

Some Spiritualists would argue that I saw a spirit, but that argument does not explain how the stone building appeared to be a reality, and any argument that will explain away the reality of that will also explain away the reality of a spirit.

No, I did not see a spirit, nor a stone building, but I had a vision; by a vision I mean a thought-form formed in the mind of a spirit, which spirit has the hypnotic power to suggest its thought-forms to a human medium, just as a human hypnotist can suggest his thought-forms to his subject.

Reason and facts in connection with human hypnotism prove that the subject does not see, hear, taste, smell, or feel what he thinks he does; likewise, when mediums, under spirit control, sense an imaginary pain or sickness, by which they are able to discern what caused a departed spirit's mortal death, their sense of feeling is positively deceived, because they have no real sickness or pain.

Again, when mediums under spirit control imagine they smell, taste or hear anything, they really do not smell, taste or hear; they are deluded.

So far many mediums will agree with me, but when I add that just as the other four senses can be deluded, so the sense of seeing can also be deluded, then I may expect to meet with some resistance; but truth is always cheap, no matter how much error is paid for it, hence I will not hesitate to state that no medium ever saw a materialized spirit. When mediums think they see materialized spirits, they only see thought-forms, which are suggested by controlling spirits just as human hypnotism suggests thought forms to his subject.

Spiritual phenomena has been much alike in all ages, but there have been few mediums in any age who sensed Spiritual phenomena correctly.

It is recorded in the Bible that Jesus took Peter, James and John onto a mountain where Moses and Elias appeared in glory; it is evident, however, that Moses and Elias were not seen in person, but in thought-forms, because Luke 9:32 explains indirectly that Peter, James and John were in a sleeping trance when Moses and Elias appeared, and Mat. 17:7, 8, explains indirectly that after the vision closed Jesus touched the other three to wake them out of a sleeping trance. These unnatural conditions explain that Peter, James and John were under some control; whether Jesus or some spirit was the controlling master, I do not know.

It is also recorded that Jesus was transfigured into a glorious body at the time Moses and Elias appeared. It is evident, however, that Jesus was not transfigured but thought-formed, just as the old man was thought-formed into a young happy man in the vision I saw.

We can read between the lines that Peter, James and John did not understand the vision on the mountain.

It is also recorded in the Bible that a witch called up the spirit of Samuel, who appeared as an old man clothed in a mantle. This tradition is not founded on a falsehood, but on a thought-form which was not understood. Spirits do not wear mantles or grow old, but they are immortal, and mediums who think they saw an old or baby spirit were deceived when they saw a thought-form.

The only difference between spirits that can be compared with old age, is their degree of intellectual and moral development, which itself gives expression of immortality. If old, enfeebled persons would be transformed into old, enfeebled spirits, I would advise all young people to commit suicide in the prime of life to escape the everlasting burden of enfeebled old age.

While I don't dispute the idea of "materialization of spirits," I do not dispute the possible presence of spirit friends, who may give the medium's controlling spirit the message they wish to send to their earthly friends, which spirit friend may be identified through the medium by either of the five senses.

In conclusion I will state that I do not wish to question the honesty of reliable mediums, but, on the contrary, I have a high regard for mediumship when it is practiced in righteousness. Furthermore, I am a Spiritualist by faith and by membership.

He Doesn't Like the Word Religion.

To the Editor:—If Spiritualism is a fact, how can it be called a religion? Is its field limited, and can one class legitimately claim to be better than another? Are not all children of the same Father, and is not Nature the Mother of us all?

Nature's laws are immutable. Nature and God are one. Big fish devour the little fish—God's will is always done.

If Messrs. Barrett, Peebles, Dawbarn, Dague, Colville or Caird can locate God outside of or above Nature, then there is sense in calling Spiritualism a Religion.

To Minnesota Spiritualists.

Ringing Words From Dr. T. Wilkins That Are Applicable to Every Other State—Sounding The Danger Signal and Advocating a More Thorough and Complete Organization for the Safety and Advancement of Our Cause.

J. S. Maxwell, President Minnesota State Spiritualists' Association—

Yours received, and under the inspiration that it brings to me I at once feel to write a communication for your people, as I sense the old fraternal closeness, born of beautiful associations, while a resident of the city of Minneapolis, and hope to partially satisfy the hunger of my old friends to hear from me a little more personally.

Just now, as the Secretary of the Illinois State Spiritualists' Association, I am paying some attention to an endeavor to more closely unite our forces, down here in the "Sucker State," and I am fully aware of the enormity of the undertaking, and the likelihood of a complete failure (which word is now erased from my vocabulary).

I have had my thumb upon the Spiritualistic pulse, through The Progressive Thinker for a number of years, and I know how divergent they are in smaller things, and how obstinate in the larger. But I also know that there seems to be a concerted action against us all over the nation. In almost every state legislative action is either pending or already in force against mediumship, and to me it is but the result of lack of system, order and union.

We have a National Association that has been kept busy trying to remain in existence; trying to grow; trying to build itself up as a religion, a science and a philosophy.

The executive head of that institution is everything that could be desird. No harder work could be expected of Brother Barrett than he has done. No greater efficiency could have been found than has been manifested in our special missionaries (when we had them). No more competency could be asked than has been had in our worthy Secretary and Treasurer. All have worked in harmony, with the one purpose in view—that of SUCCESS for SPIRITUALISM and the UPLIFTMENT of HUMANITY.

But with all the efficiency; with all the competency; with all the earnestness and labor, the cause is still cut up into factions, independent societies (sometimes of "knockers," which does not, however, mean all independent societies are real "knockers") that seem averse to every movement that does not promise special benefits to their own society.

To me this does not look large, unselfish and spiritual. Nothing looks so good as the "glad hand" of eternal fellowship and brotherhood.

No one of the many things that go to make up the cause of our disorder can be singled out as the prime and ONLY cause, but we have the fact before us now that we must unite and do something.

We love to visit our loved ones across the Great Divide, but we cannot and MUST not do that all the time. There is an awful effort on foot now to stay our onrushing truth that is threatening to revolutionize the entire religious world.

Every church in every nation has had to evolve new methods and schemes to hold their forces together against this mighty wave of enlightenment, of philosophy and reason, of new thought and heresy. Even science endorses our truth, and this is what is throwing our enemies into such a rage. They fought science from the start. It was made a crime to think outside of the lids of the bible or the dictates of the church, but PEOPLE WILL THINK, and when they do they soon see the folly of being mere parrots in the hands of tyrants.

We are making inroads into their old iron-clad creeds, and as a result we are spoiling their scheme of salvation and financial and numerical success; we are undermining their foundation and proving them the worshipers of a cruel, angry Deity, by presenting a real live truth and teaching people to think for themselves. We are doing this and more: We are making them angry, and now they are striving to turn the iron heel of the law against us, and we must "get a move on us" or we will be tied hand and foot, we will be shackled to the post of our own setting.

The only thing to do is to quit quibbling about whether we are a religion, a science or a philosophy. Spiritualism is ALL OF THESE, AND WE KNOW IT, and rightly understood and lived up to will prove itself the best religion the world has ever had; a religion to suit the analytical scientist, who MUST be SHOWN; to suit those who have only had a faith to cling to, and who absorb it, when convinced, with the enthusiasm and energy of one who has discovered the foot-prints of a long-lost hope.

Spirit return is not owned by Spiritualism, but it OWNS SPIRITUALISM, and it is coming through every opening discernible, and though our enemies may legislate against mediums, may make them pay a heavy license or go to prison for plying their sacred gifts, they cannot crush out the fact that the "gates are ajar," and we can commune with those we thought dead.

But the only thing left to do is to organize, unite and have a good financial foundation as well as religious, moral and educational principle, or Declaration of Principles. This we MUST DO or our Cause will be temporarily crushed out of existence.

We must have a dividing line between our mediums and the horde of commercial fortune tellers. We know many of our mediums can and do foretell coming events, but we must draw the line on selling charms, reuniting lost lovers, and such "wonderful" things as are advertised in the secular press, and which should be made a misdemeanor, and indication of fraud, and prohibited from the press.

When we can prove to the courts that ours is a true religion, we can back up under the National Constitution and secure shelter and safety under the wing of the American Eagle, but in order to do this we MUST be ORGANIZED from the ground up, and upon the proper foundation, and be able to define our principles so plainly that it will not be misunderstood, and above all, we must be able to protect our true mediums from the laws that are being enacted to break up the gang of impostors, the advertised "wonders" that are the cause of this opposing current in our channel of progress, and with whom we are classed, as in the same "bunch."

This must be taken in its broadest sense; I have reference to other states as much as to Illinois.

Our Sister State Association of Minnesota, now holding its Tenth Annual Convention has its own similar troubles, though it be the banner Association in enthusiasm and thrift.

I still hold a fatherly interest in this Association and here and now take the opportunity to send them GREETINGS, PERSONAL AND FOR THE ILLINOIS STATE SPIRITUALISTS' ASSOCIATION, and the best wishes of brothers and sisters, and—

May those voices from the beauteous realms above
Ever guide their words and acts with true, uplifting love.

It is hard to make all see the danger signal in time to prevent the catastrophe that is now impending.

Mediums (bless their dear sacrificing souls) are such sensitive creatures, or they could not be mediums at all, and they are also human, and MUST have food and clothes and shelter, and all the love that can be found floating around, and like other people, many of them are over-sensiteve and often become jealous of each other—I can feel the ground shake where I now stand, as I say these things, but all know this to be true, and there is no use subduing the fact—they are not all thus inclined, but this makes it hard to persuade them into uniting themselves in a common cause for their own protection. They must be self-poised and independent, or they would not have the necessary force to ply their sacred manifestations to a prejudiced, suspicioning and hissing and jeering public. These are facts too.

And here is where our cause rests, and whenever the mediums can be united under one banner Spiritualism's complete success is assured.

By way of a characteristic ending to this communication to my dear old friends in "The Banner State," I herewith add the poem which came to me about one hour previous to starting to the opening meeting of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists of Chicago, on Wednesday evening, August 28, and which proved appreciated by the vast audience.

THE HIGHEST MISSION.

Respectfully Dedicated to Speakers and Mediums in the Cause of Spiritualism.

Each one has a mission or a niche in life to fill,
And there's little time for loafing when there is no time to kill.
This whole world is ever moving in the Universe of space,
And each atom and electron has its rightful working place;
But upon this little planet nothing higher comes in view
Than the bearing of the message from the world of spirit true.

There are heights politic, social and financial heights to reach,
But above and far beyond them all are truths of life to teach.
There are churches, there are preachers and their fast decaying creeds,
There are many pious deacons with pretentious holy deeds;
And occasionally a heretic who has reasoned toward the right,
And is giving to the blinded ones a little brighter light,
But the one who stands the highest with the souls beyond the blue,
Is the bearer of the message from our loved ones when 'tis due.

Every speaker or expounder of the truth of future state,
Is a messenger of heaven with a mission high and great,
And the world is made the better by the work they strive to do,
In uplifting struggling beings from the old thought to the new.
But the one who lifts the angel in each mortal to a sphere
Where the light of love imbues them, holds the highest mission here.

CASTLES IN THE AIR.

Out of the sunbeams and mottled gold
Sprang my castles in the air,
With no stones of a baser mold,
But with sparkling jewels rare.
I gathered and fashioned the whole
From the ideal substance that grew
From the sunniest dreams of the soul,
Of pearly whiteness and dew.

These castles came often at sunset,
On the borders of the closing day,
Where they slowly and tranquilly met,
The cloud-lands of crimson and gray
And in waking or sleeping they grew
Before my vision in sight,
But alas! how little I knew
They were only a moment's delight.

These dreams and visions are still
As vivid and spotless and white,
And they gleam from my store-house and will
On Memory's undimmed sight:
They're the priceless treasures of the heart,
That lift me from earth and care,
Where the past like a picture will start,
And grow real and wondrous fair.

So I turn from life's lengthening years,
From the ragged hills of Time,
From the shadows of haunting fears,
To the star-world sublime.
And I see once more the land Ideal,
—Where my loved ones come and go,
Where my castles and dreams are real
In a world free from woe.

Was He Angered?

Is it possible when Jesus was standing on the pinnacle of the temple, companioned by the Devil, and viewing all the kingdoms of the earth, to which his associate had called attention and offered title for a paltry service, saw with prescient eye, which he ran all along down the ages, his devotees, the presidents and cashiers of banks, the frauds and peculators, the Sunday school superintendents, the dishonest clerics, and the endless array of government defaulters, all claiming to be his worshipers, and there and then fashioned his hatred of wealth, at that time became angered at riches? We see him lashing the money changers from the temple. They were there to facilitate the purchase of doves, by making change, that those harmless creatures could be roasted on the altar, his loved Father being permitted to inhale the ascending aroma, while the priests, ministering in the temple, were permitted to feast on the roast.

On every step of Jesus' after-mission we find him denouncing the rich, pronouncing woes on them, and glorifying the poor. The Scribes and the Pharisees were special objects of his dislike, because they were of the wealthy class. The good man who had kept all the commandments from his youth up was directed to sell all he had and give the proceeds to the poor, then he was assured he would have treasures in heaven. On a former occasion, see Luke 14:33, Jesus had said, in strict harmony with the above:

"Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

Though Rockefeller should give the hundred million dollars the Chicago University lately asked for to advance the interests of the church, if he retains anything, does not surrender the last farthing, he is no disciple of Jesus.

Too Big a Boo.

Once on a time there was a Dutchman who had a very skittish colt he was breaking to ride. He told his son Hans to go down the road, hide in the corner of the fence, and when he should ride past to spring out and hallo boo! He told the boy that when the frightened colt saw it was only Hans, he would see he had made a fool of himself, and would not frighten so easily again.

Hans acted his part correctly, but the colt sprang aside and threw the rider to the ground. Suffering severely from the shock, the old man rose to his feet and chided the youth with being too generous with his exclamation. He said it was too large a boo for so small a colt.

We often think of this adventure when reading some miraculous story, an overdrawn draft on imagination, too large to be credited by the person to whom addressed.

The story related in Mat. 17:24 to 27, wherein it is stated, in substance, that when tribute was demanded from Jesus, he instructed Peter to go to the sea, cast a hook, take up the first fish that cometh, and when his mouth is opened, find a piece of money, and give it to the collector for thee and me.

Was the fish acting the part of a banker for "our Lord" on that occasion? Is it not too big a "boo" for this incredulous age? It seems to us a marvel of the Holy Scriptures which should seldom be repeated outside of marine circles.

An Exalted Perfection.

"Be ye perfect, even as your father in heaven is perfect."—Jesus. Mat. 5:48.

This would seem, on first thought, a high standard for a mortal as we understand the word "perfect"—without fault or blemish; but the character of the Father, as a comparison for perfection, becomes important. This "Father," Christians claim, is the Lord, or Jehovah, the God of the Jews. Then we must consult the Old Testament scriptures to gain a knowledge of this model for human imitation. We find him a repentant God, regretting he had made man, and grieved to the heart because of it. We find him destroying all life, save that of a favored few, because of that regret. We find him a jealous God, suspicious the Babel Tower builders would scale heaven and usurp his throne. We find him hoodooing Pharaoh, smiting all the first-born of Egypt, both of man and beast. We find him directing Joshua to make war on the unoffending tribes of Canaan, and to leave alive nothing that breathed. We see him encouraging lying spirits (I Kings 22:22) and accepting their services in his behalf. Besides being brutal, jealous, repentant and untruthful, we find him of limited power. "The Lord * * drave out the inhabitants of the mountain, but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley because they had chariots of iron."—Judges 1:19.

All through the so-called Jewish records we find this "Lord" pictured as a great man, with all the organs of a man, hands, feet, head, heart; a barbarian concept, truly, of God.

Munge Park, traveling in Africa, found a people who worshiped idols. They followed the advice of their home-made god, as directed by his priest, and when misled they lashed the unfeeling monster to their hearts' content, to the end that he would not deceive and mislead others. We are sure a thoughtful reader of the Old Testament, who is conscious of the Jewish Jehovah's doings, under the introductories of "Thus saith the Lord," would favor his lashing for giving such cruel directions as he is said to have done at times, particularly when he ordered the killing of everything that breathed, saving alive only virgins, of whom he received a share (who were finally turned over to his priests).—Deut. 20:13 to 16.

Now if it was the perfection of this cruel Jew god, seated on the ark of the covenant, with cherubs in front and rear of him, placed on a cart and drawn by lowing cows on a run over the plains of Palestine, that Jesus wished us to imitate, then he gave us a very imperfect model, which is not worthy an intelligent man's regard.

If, on the contrary, Jesus had in mind that mighty Spirit of the Universe which holds countless millions of suns, with their planetary systems in equal poise; who directs the movements of all with exact precision, and endows the infinitesimal microscopic creature with thought and sensation as he does man; whose perfection is seen in bird and bud, in leaf and flower, as in flaming suns, and in all the multitudinous forms of vegetable and animal life, as perfect in the germ of the lowliest animalcule as in the developed mastodon; in the tiny molecule as in the central sun around which revolve, obedient to a common law, an infinite wilderness of worlds; that in all the boundless expanse, however humble, there is no place where he is not, ever active and ever striving for the greatest good of all—then he had the Spiritualist's God, INFINITE INTELLIGENCE, in view. That God has our adoration, and were we capable we would joyfully copy his perfections.

But, sorrowful to relate, we are unable to find the slightest hint that the dear Jesus had any conception of such an exalted character.

Another Human Sacrifice to God.

Albert Stemmelen, a bookkeeper at Detroit, on August 28, became suddenly insane and threw his two-year-old daughter into the river at Belle Isle bridge. He watched her drown, then reported his action to the police. The news dispatch says Stemmelen's insanity is of a religious nature. He told the police he was making an acceptable sacrifice to God for the sins of the world.

Such horrors are of frequent occurrence wherever Christianity has a footing. The deluded wretches find many examples in the dear old Bible for such acts. Old Abraham, according to the Jew record, was about to sacrifice his first born, Isaac, but a ram caught in the bushes served his purpose and saved the boy. Christians virtually concede human sacrifices were acceptable to their God, for he conditionally accepted the sacrifice of his son for the sins of the world.

We are very grateful that Spiritualists have no such a bloodthirsty god in their philosophy.

Man alone is and shall be our god.—Feuerbach.

Just Think of It!

The Bureau of the United States Census has just published a special report on criminal statistics. The investigation was planned by an expert, and was carried forward with great care till the final result was obtained from all the States. Two classes of offenders were taken into account, first juveniles who were confined prior to June 30, 1904, and, second, those who were committed during that year. Excluding all juvenile delinquents, and all held for non-payment of fines—a very numerous class—there were found 81,772 persons serving sentences, many of them for life, on June 30, 1904. This is over 1,000 for each million of population.

There were but 66,803 prisoners in all the State and federal prisons for felonies on June 1, 1890. They had increased during the intervening period 14,969, more than an average of 1,000 a year. Women prisoners have decreased in numbers during those years, to their lasting credit.

Since 1889, during a period of almost profound peace, there have been 139,951 murders perpetrated in this country, and only 2,286 of the assassins have been criminally punished, that is, less than 61 per cent. were convicted and brought to justice. If the same per cent. prevails as to lesser crimes, and the offenders escape, then there were 4,988,092 criminals who deserved punishment between 1889 and now. These figures are simply appalling. And yet they have been made with care and seem correct.

Within the last few years the great criminal hives of southern Europe have swarmed and settled in this country. They have brought their criminal instincts with them.

The vendetta, a private warfare, occasioned by insult or injury, wherein a whole family is held responsible for the act of any of its members, and may be avenged to the death, has been transferred to America by the criminal classes settling among us from Italy. They are, almost to a man, Catholic, and immune from punishment, if they can escape human justice, because the superabundance of Jesus' goodness, passing to their credit for believing in him, atones for all their wrongs. In every community where the Italian laborer is found, there are reports of murders among them, and rarely a conviction.

"The police of Youngstown, O., declare that members of the Black Hand society in that section have maintained a school for murderers, so says a Youngstown special to the New York World. Sessions were held in a secluded house at night, and a rubber man was used as the victim to instruct the members how to become adepts in the use of the stiletto. These remarkable disclosures followed a recent raid upon a resort in the east end of Youngstown, when a band of Black Hand leaders was arrested.

"Guiseppe Catronico and John Joti, under arrest, are supposed to be ringleaders of the gang that has terrorized not only Italians in Youngstown, but also in the western part of Pennsylvania. The police in their raid found a trunk belonging to one of the men, containing letters, stilettos and revolvers, which they declare will aid them materially in running down and breaking up the entire gang."

But the habit of private assassination will go on, and the guilty will escape convictions, because an oath has no restraining influence on a people who are educated in secret how to perpetuate crimes with impunity. They come among us to accumulate a few hundred dollars, intending to return to the land of their nativity to expend it. If guilty of a crime here they flee to some other colony of Italians, and with a changed name live in security until ready to recross the Atlantic, homeward.

Cruel Punishment.

As stated in the Chicago Record-Herald, Aliven Hulteen was sentenced by Justice Boyer in Evanston yesterday to attend four consecutive meetings of the Evanston post of the Salvation Army, whose religious gatherings he was accused of having disturbed. To make sure that he complied, Justice Boyer directed the patrolman who arrested him to visit the meeting place each evening and assure himself of Hulteen's presence, and also of his good behavior there. A fine of $10 awaits Hulteen if he fails to attend. He is 23 years old and lives at 1202 Chicago avenue, Evanston. He is said to have selected moments when members of the army were at prayer to create the disturbances.

While justices are allowed reasonable latitude in the infliction of punishment for infraction of the laws pertaining to the peace of the people, they are expressly debarred from the infliction of "unusual and cruel punishment on the offenders. To be compelled to attend four consecutive meetings of even the Salvation Army would be an "unusual and cruel punishment" to inflict upon many an offender, but perhaps this disturber justly deserves his sad fate.

The Richest.

"That country," said John Ruskin, "is the richest which nourishes the greatest number of noble and happy human beings; that man is the richest who, having perfected the functions of his own life to the utmost, has also the widest helpful influence, both personal and by means of his posessions, over the lives of others."

There would be more happiness in the world if we would rejoice more with others instead of feigning sympathy with their sorrows.—Max Bewer.

Heart keeping is the secret of happy housekeeping.—Anon.

AT HOME AGAIN.

After a Highly Interesting Trip to France, England, and The Hague.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond and her husband have just returned to their home in Chicago after their journeyings to The Hague and the fulfilling of Mrs. Richmond's engagements at the Eastern camps.

Mr. Richmond brings some added information in regard to Mrs. Richmond's experiences and work this summer.

The day Mrs. Richmond left The Hague she was given a parting reception at the "Cercle International," where she gave an address the preceding Wednesday. There was a very brilliant company assembled to receive her and bid her good-by. One gentleman present, a stranger to Mr. Richmond, expiating upon the brilliancy of the assemblage, said: "Why, all these people are the most prominent people at The Hague, including many titled people from different parts of Europe. After introductions to many of those present, refreshments were served, then Ouina entertained them by improvising a number of poems. Then there were brief remarks of delight and appreciation from people of different nationalities, concluding with the following address from Mr. M. de Pinto, president of the General Dutch League, "Peace by Right."

"In behalf of the Council and the members of the General Dutch League 'Peace by Right' (Viede door Recht), we had the great pleasure of hearing with the greatest appreciation the speeches of the Reverend Mrs. Cora Richmond, which are so excellent in every way. I want to speak a few words at the occasion of her last visit to this Cercle.

"A word of gratitude and sincere homage for the splendid and inspiring words which Mrs. Richmond has spoken with so much force and persuasive power; a word of appreciation and admiration for the most earnest and sympathetic way in which she gives her life to the noble task of promoting peace among mankind.

"We all hope that it may be given to you to continue this noble task for years to come, to your own satisfaction and to the wellbeing of the world.

"We hope that health may remain your part; that you may begin and fulfill—together with your husband—with the greatest prosperity, the long journey to your home, and find all those who are dear to you in good condition, and that you may keep a pleasant remembrance of us all.

"May the few flowers which we have the pleasure of offering to you be a token of the most agreeable impressions you have made upon us."

Then the young daughter of Mr. Pinto stepped forward and presented Mrs. Richmond with a magnificent bouquet of flowers. Then other bouquets were presented to Mrs. Richmond until she was literally loaded with flowers, which filled the carriage that conveyed her to the railway station.

In England, Mr. and Mrs. Richmond were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Tebb (the great reformers who succeeded in compelling the government of England, through its parliament, to repeal its compulsory vaccination law) at their beautiful country seat, Rede Hall, Burstow, Surrey, twenty-five miles south of London, one of the most beautiful rural districts of England. Mrs. Richmond enjoyed two weeks of tranquil rest at that lovely place, driving every day with Mrs. Tebb through the charming surrounding country, and visiting places of historic interest in the immediate neighborhood.

The day before sailing from Liverpool Mrs. Richmond was given a reception by the London Spiritual Alliance, where she met many old-time London friends and many new faces. The rooms were crowded and she received a royal reception. After a short address by Mrs. Richmond and remarks of appreciation from the officers and members of the Alliance she was bidden Godspeed in her work of teaching and enlightening mankind spiritually.

Mr. and Mrs. Richmond arrived via the American line at Philadelphia July 29, where they spent a few days visiting Mr. Richmond's brother, J. S. Richmond, in his home at Oak Lane, Philadelphia. From there Mrs. Richmond went to Lily Dale camp meeting, fulfilling an engagement of a week there; then she went to Onset for one week, then to Freeville, N. Y., fulfilling an engagement of three days there, then to South Lansing and Cuba, N. Y., finishing her camp meeting engagements at Chesterfield, Ind. Her last public addresses before reaching Chicago were given there Sunday, September 1, to very large and appreciative audiences.

She has arrived home in the best of health and looking fully five years younger than when she left Chicago three months ago. She will begin her regular work here at The Church of the Soul, 309 Masonic Temple, next Sunday morning at 11 a. m., when she hopes to greet all her Chicago friends once more.

More of Ingersoll's Creed.

"I do not believe in forgiveness as preached by the church. We do not need the forgiveness of God, but we do need forgiveness of each other, and of ourselves. If I rob Smith and God forgives me, how does that help Smith? If I, by slander, cover some poor girl with leprosy, or some imputed crime, and she withers away like a blighted flower, and I get the forgiveness of God, how does that help her? If there is another world, we shall have to settle with the people we have wronged in this. No bankrupt court over there! Every cent must be paid."

The Progressive Thinker, fully convinced of a continued life, adopts that portion of Col. Ingersoll's creed which declares we shall be compelled to right every wrong over there done to others in this life, and no clemency should be expected.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES.

As Adopted at the Chesterfield Camp.

The following definitions and expressions of principles were adopted by the Association at the adjourned session of the General Conference:

Resolved, by the Indiana Association of Spiritualists in convention assembled at Camp Chesterfield on this 30th day of August, 1907, that we declare the following as fundamental and essential principles of the religion of Spiritualism, as believed in, taught and practiced by Spiritualists of this association and of the world over:

1. That to the soul, or real man, there is no death whatever; that what is comonly called death is but a transition.

2. That man's condition on entering the spirit world is a natural sequence of his earth life; that the normal condition in the spirit world is constant progression.

3. That those who pass over in infancy and childhood, or in early life, develop to manhood and womanhood mentally, spiritually, and in all the attributes of individuality.

4. That we recognize the fact of spirit communion and manifestation in various methods and forms, through those who are designated as mediums, possessed of certain spiritual gifts, or unfoldment of soul powers, which gifts were quite generally and definitely referred to and described by the Apostle Paul in his letter to the church at Corinth, among which are the gifts of clairvoyance, discerning of spirits, or clear seeing, it being that faculty through which its possessor may see things and conditions not seen by the natural or physical eye. Clairaudience, or clear hearing, it being that faculty through which its possessor may hear spirit voices and the giving of messages from excarnate beings; the gift of inspiration and of speaking, writing or otherwise manifesting under spirit control; also to those so endowed, the gift of prophecy, whereby the controlling spirit may look forward to events in the future life of individuals in the earth life; also the power by which an arisen friend may materialize or etherealize in partial or full form.

5. That we believe in and strictly adhere to the efficiency and power of spirit healing through persons endowed with psychic power, whom we designate as psycho-magnetic, or spirit magnetic healers; either by the use of the medium's hands to direct and distribute the healing forces or by the psychic force alone, independent of physical contact. We recognize the practice of these gifts as important in carrying forward the gospel or religion of Spiritualism as it was in the days of Jesus and the apostles in establishing the work of the primitive Christian church. The practice of all of which spiritual gifts we consider as sacred and binding upon Spiritualist teachers and mediums the world over.

6. That we further believe in and teach the brotherhood of all mankind and the practical exercise of true and unselfish love of man to man in all associations and affairs of life and the strict observance of the golden rule as taught by Jesus and Confucius as a perfect manifestation of the divine spirit in man.

7. That we believe in and insist upon a pure, moral and upright conduct in all the relations of life as a necessity to the best spiritual unfoldment and advancement.

Interesting Particulars

In Relation to the Latest Confirmation of Psychic Aura.

Synchronous with the very pronounced scientific interest in the wonderful psychic phenomena produced through Eusapia Paladino in Italy [as set forth in Two Worlds, of Manchester, England], it is significant that other incidental proofs of our main contentions are forthcoming in quite unexpected quarters. In The Contemporary Review for May there is a short but most important article, evidently written by invitation, by Dr. Alfred T. Schofield, the distinguished medical practitioner of London, on "Measurements of 'Nerve Force.'" Recently the Daily Mail had a portrait of the worthy doctor, and some of his advice on health, etc., and probably many psychological students will know him by his very valuable work on "The Unconscious Mind," and those who do not would do well to get it and study it as one of the best epitomes of all shades of psychological conclusions found in our language.

As all Spiritualists know, our clairvoyants have consistently and persistently declared for fifty years that we are all surrounded by an aura that projects from six to twelve inches; and also that it is colored. Many of our clairvoyants, after careful observation and comparison of experiences, have been giving particular attention to this aura and its various colors as indicative of special states of health and character. As usual, of course, they were all drawing on their fancies. The doctors, scientists, and psychologists would have none of it, because they couldn't see it, and because it had not come within the purview of their curriculums!

Strange as it may seem, however, they have at last been brought face to face with the scientific demonstration of these old Spiritualistic conceptions; and personally I am very thankful for these, tardy but nevertheless irrefutable proofs as to the correctness of our clairvoyants all along the line. It is but one among many other convergent evidences that our grand Cause is "rising to the flood" which ere long will bear down all further opposition as to its essential validity.

Dr. Schofield tells us that he has been experimentalizing for two years with two little machines called the "Biometer" and the "Stethenometer," the first of which was invented about sixteen years ago by a French doctor, and the latter about ten years later. They both were invented for the express purpose of seeing if there was truth in the supposition that our bodies or personalities or souls, or something, radiated off an energy or something called an "aura," which enveloped us like a mist. And after two years of very careful experimentation, which I presume include some hundreds of cases, he adds his testimony to the inventor of the "Biometer," whose instrument was examined some years ago by the French Academy of Sciences and favorably reported; also to the inventor of the "Sthenometer" and others who have been experimenting on the quiet; and his testimony is that the registrations of these machines are absolutely reliable and invariably correct. He adds also that the conclusions have been further confirmed by photography and the coloragation by the unexpected clairvoyant sight possessed by some doctors.

Both machines are very simple, and might, I think, be constructed by anyone of a constructive turn of mind. Here are the descriptions in Dr. Schofield's own words: "The 'Biometer' consists essentially of a glass cylinder, eight or ten inches long and five or six inches wide. This cylinder is closed at the top and stands in a narrow circular groove on a circular wooden stand. From the top depends a circular twisted thread of cotton, very fine and very supple, about four inches long. The lower end is carefully fastened to the exact middle of a copper needle about three inches long, and suspended horizontally from it, so as to move with perfect freedom in horizontal rotation from right to left, and about one-third of an inch below this again is a circular horizontal card divided into 360 degrees. This again rests on a glass bobbin, having an exterior diameter of two inches and resting itself on the wooden stand. The glass bobbin has been wrapped around with alternate layers of blotting paper and fine iron wire, the ends of the layers of wire being joined so as to make a continuous length of some 160 yards. We have thus have a mobile needle that can rotate horizontally immediately above a circular card divided into 360 degrees."

The "Sthenometer," he says, "is very different from the 'Biometer,' and is, I think, more easily worked and not so delicate in construction. This machine consists of a wooden stand fifteen inches long by ten and a half, and about two inches high, and in the center of which is a white card some eight inches in diameter, its circle of two feet being divided into 360 degrees too, not numbered consecutively but in a special manner. What may be called the north and south parts are both marked 90, whilst east and west are both marked 0x. Every ten degrees are marked from 0 at east and west to the maximum 90 at north and south. From the middle of this card projects vertically a fine steel point about half an inch, and on his point, revolving on a glass socket let into it, is a perfectly-balanced straw nearly nine inches long. The stand, except where the card is, is covered with velvet, on which rests a glass dome enclosing the needle and straw."

Now the method of working those instruments and testing the truth of our psychic emanations are these: A person is asked to stand, with no other person near him, close to the glass cylinder or dome, and to stretch the fingers of his right hand to within one inch of the side, exactly on a level with the point of the needle or straw, and after from five to ten minutes the point is gradually attracted to the hand from 30 to 60 degrees. If now the left hand is held in a similar relation to the other end of the needle or straw it is seen to move in an exactly similar manner, but from ten degrees less. And this happens invariably when people are in good health, and the needle or straw remains at the point where first attracted as long as the hand is held in position, and the force of attraction neither increases nor diminishes. In odd cases, it seems, the needle is repelled, for some reason probably not yet understood.

It is further found that when people are ill this force is largely in abeyance; also during and after fits or during serious mental troubles.

Of course, as might be expected, many opinions have been hazarded as to what the radiations might be. Some thought they must be magnetic or electrical, and Prof. W. Crookes suggested they might be "radiant heat." But none of these theories hold. The most delicate instruments have failed to intercept any electrical waves whatever; and as the hands are always very warm after fits, yet will not then affect the instruments appreciably, so Crookes' suggestion was found to be untenable. What, then, is it? For want of a better name Dr. Schofield calls it "Nerve Force," and says it radiates all around the body like an aura, as the clairvoyants have persistently declared.

But the proof does not end with the "Biometer" and "Sthenometer." Since these instruments demonstrated its existence, the question occurred, "Could it not be photographed?" And this has been done. Various people have been taken into darkened rooms and their hands held over specially-prepared plates, and these plates when developed were found to have these radiations, which looked like very fine, long, straight hairs—that is, when the people were in good health. When ill they were found to hang, all drooping like innumerable feelers, without vitality, and after severe fits they seem to interlace like brushwood in a hedge.

A great many doctors have actually found they have an unexpected faculty to see and discriminate these radiations. So they have been comparing experiences and tabulating results, and they now find that this aura is also colored, and they have so far counted twenty-four distinct shades of color. Not only so, but they find these radiations and their colors not only infallible criteria of the health of the patients who consult them, but, even more wonderful still, of their characters. Thus we go from what seems physical radiations to psychic ones more subtle than any forces known to physical science, and at one bound pass into the wondrous chemistry of soul-pulsations as they intermingle in the outer grosser elements of bodily functions.

Dr. Schofield says he finds the left hand indicates our pathological condition, and the right hand our physiological. Could not our healing and clairvoyant mediums take a hint from this? Why not use a "biometer" to aid them in measuring the so-called nerve force of those who come to them? Since it is but a confirmation of truths long held by them, who better than they could legitimately use them to insure still greater accuracy in diagnosing complaints of their patients? ALFRED ROWE.

THE PSYCHIC CIRCLE.

The language of spirit is thought, and thoughts are visible to those living in the spirit world. "Thoughts are things." Fifty thousand persons believing this and sending out the same thought at the same time would create a power greater than any Marconi battery in the world.

Will you join the Psychic Circle and at 9 o'clock p. m. every Friday send out the following thought?—

"Heal the sick; comfort the sorrowing; send a special blessing to all members according to need."

Every Sunday at 8 p. m. send out the thought following: "Success! Success! Success!"—holding in mind that this applies to all who are working in any capacity for the cause of Spiritualism: mediums, speakers, editors, and especially those who are devoting their lives in other ways to the cause according to their ability.

A wave of thought so powerful as this would reach every brain attuned to it.

A SCIENTIFIC CONCLUSION.

The Amoeba Is Said to Possess Reason

Out of the brains of amoebas science has heard words of wisdom, or, if not words of wisdom, signs of choice. It exercises this power whenever it eats. Diatoms enveloped in flint are its favorite food. When an amoeba comes in contact with one of these minute vegetables it swallows it through an aperture, a mouth, which it conveniently makes wherever an opening is needed. But when the amoeba comes in contact with a small grain of flint he leaves it severely alone.

He does not treat it as he does flinty envelopes of the diatom. Another wise little animal is the amphileptus meleagris, who swims by means of cilia. When he encounters another infusorian, the epistylis, that anchors itself by means of a long stalk, he feels the latter and partly incloses it in his pliable body. He then fastens himself on the upper part of his victim, opens his huge mouth, and slips over the little epistylis like a glove finger slips over the finger of the hand. Then, having wrenched the epistylis from its anchor by twisting, he completes his generous meal. Here seems to be demonstrated not only power of choice, but also real intelligence.

JOHN A. HOWLAND.

The Civilization of the Civilized.

A Lecture by Spirit John Pierpont, Through the Mediumship of Mrs. Mary T. Longley, Before the First Association of Spiritualists of Washington, D. C.

"SEE TO IT, O YE COMMUNITIES, O SOCIETY, O YE NATIONS, THAT NEW AND YOUNG CRIMINALS ARE NOT FORMED FROM THE OUTCASTS AND THE WAIFS. TAKE THESE LITTLE ONES, PROVIDE THEM WITH SCHOOLS WITH LOVE, WITH HOME LIFE, WITH THE CARETAKER'S INFLUENCE AND TENDER GUARDIANSHIP. THE WHOLE WORLD WILL BE MORE BEAUTIFUL. CIVILIZATION WILL THEN BE A THING OF SPLENDOR; CRIMINOLOGY WILL BE KNOWN NO MORE; INHERITED CONDITIONS WILL BE OF THE FINEST AND BEST. THE WORLD WILL THEN MARCH ON WITH GREAT STRIDES TOWARD THE THE HIGHEST AND THE PUREST AND THE UNFOLDMENT OF A SPIRITUALITY WHICH WILL OPEN THE WAY TO THE ONCOMING OF ANGEL HOSTS WHO CAN THEN AFFILIATE WITH MORTALS, BLENDING IN HARMONY ONE WITH THE OTHER ON ONE PLANE OF SPIRITUAL VIBRATION THAT WILL SWEEP THROUGH THE UNIVERSE WITH GRANDEUR AND POWER, MAKING MAN INTELLECTUAL TRULY, SPIRITUAL SURELY, AND AN HONOR TO HIMSELF AND TO HIS CREATOR."

This is an age of civilization. So we have been told by the schools and the teachers; so we have been led to conclude by the various conditions and degrees of progress of the human race, along all the different lines which afford information, instruction and guidance in intellectual life, and also in that realm which we call spiritual.

An age of civilization means to mankind an altruistic age; a time when man lives with man in fraternal fellowship beyond question; an age in which human beings come together in the fraternal bonds of fellowship heart to heart, and hand outstretched to hand in loving counsel and in tender sympathy in all that makes for human exaltation along the lines of true life. Such should be the age of civilization and the life of the civilized.

Gazing over the centuries of past life in human thought and experience we may, in the histories written and unwritten of mankind, trace forward the varying stages, degrees and epochs of human advancement from one plane or grade of development in mental and in spiritual output to another. Coming down through the centuries of the past, when man lived in cave and hut, and with the first rude implements of his manufacture did the best he could to create and fashion for himself conveniences and comforts that would in a measure supply his need, and following on through the ages we find him advancing in skill and workmanship, in intellectual expression of strength, fashioning new implements for his convenience and developing that genius, that talent and that ability which has enabled him to create for himself and his fellows not only the beautiful habitations which we find on every hand to-day, but also the imagery of art expressed through those productions of the sculptor's skill, the artist's talent and genius, and all the varying mechanical expressions which are for the convenience and comfort of mankind.

The march of civilization has marked the way of human progress through the world and we behold its results in the life and thought and in the creations of man in this twentieth century. All of this we concede.

Mind has advanced from the condition of the rude savage in his forest cave to that plane of brilliant thought and execution of the man in the high places at the present time who has accomplished so much for humanity by his expressions that guide and bless or teach mankind. The upward way has been a severe and hard road, a struggle which mankind has been obliged to make all along the ages, and he is still struggling—this man of earth—to reach a higher pinnacle of mental expression and of material execution. He is traveling onward, and it would be unwise to presume that humanity has gained the acme of civilization even in this century of marvels, this wondrous time in which are given to the world through the brain power and the artisanship of the human being all of these glorious achievements which we find in every department of thought and industry. It would be presumptuous for us to think for a moment that even this age of electrical operation, this age in which marvelous experiments, investigations and discoveries have brought forth for human acceptance and advantage the various conditions and achievements which make life for the thousands so much better and practical and comfortable than it has been in past ages, is the acme of civilization.

As we look around us and behold the misery that still exists in human life, realize the great suffering that is in the homes of the toiling ones of earth through want, poverty, privation and lack of opportunity to gain knowledge and instruction; when we realize the conditions of the toiling millions held down by these limitations and these terrible conditions of poverty and of ignorance, we may well pause and ask, what of the civilization of the civilized?

We know that the world has grown immeasurably during the many centuries of human existence; we know that mankind has marched over steep and rugged places; with bleeding feet the pioneers have made the way for those who were to come in later generations. We know the schoolmaster has been abroad, and is at the present time, sowing the seeds of information and knowledge, and by his influence and guidance quickening these seeds in the human mind until they germinate and spring forth in mental growth for the advancement and benefit of the many. All this is clear to our minds, and, as we look back into the dark past, into the ages of superstition, of ignorance, of groping, of doubt and dismay in the mind of humanity that knew not how to cope with the varying lots and circumstances of life we shudder to think what it would have been with ourselves had we been obliged to live here in those days.

But every age and every generation of men have made the way possible for ourselves to be here in the present day. All that has gone before of struggle, of turmoil, of experience, of failure, as well as of success, in the life of humanity, has had its effect in opening the way for the generation of the present time, and we who are here may profit by the example of the past; we may rejoice that we can gather up the histories of by-gone days, of ancient times, of men and women who have gone from this existence, and make of these things a stepping stone to our progress and intellectual growth. We must, as thinking minds, realize that nothing needs to be despised; that small things and all things in life which are tending to bring experience to humanity are worthy of consideration, and in looking back over the past, with its conditions of life for struggling humanity, we may realize, if we will, that all this has been necessary in the growth of mankind and for the coming generations that are to advance to higher planes than the world has known.

In glancing over that which the world calls civilization, we of necessity must bring our sight and our thought to bear upon nations that we call the civilized, and it might be profitable if for a moment we pause to compare them with some of those nations which are called uncivilized, not having reached the same plane of thought and ability, of execution and achievement which the civilized world has gained. In some ways we might take lessons from those who have not become civilized according to the common acceptance of the term. Nevertheless we concede that these nations that are in the rank of the civilized have gained immeasurably in power; have advanced along the heights of intellect, and have in many directions been enabled to present to the world those beautiful and grand conceptions of life with the achievements and executions of power which make mankind at the present time a race of beings worthy the name of humanity and of the heritage which we claim belongs to man as a spiritual being. Still, in coming back to our own day and times, here in this nation of ours, of which we are so proud, this glorious country which is rightly our pride and which we love, we may pause to ask: Has civilization entirely civilized human beings? While the same question might be asked concerning other lands that are called civilized, we need not extend our questioning nor our consideration at this time further than to the confines of our own broad and beautiful country.

Are we a civilized people in the direction of mechanics and the achievements of art, the glorious creations of life that men and women have given to the world through literature, through music, through the various arts and sciences and principles of industry? With the expanding of the mind in its brilliancy to cope with the difficult problems and solve them for the blessing and benefit of the people, we may say we have attained to a height of civilization or progress—for we may call this advancement progress as well as civilization—we have attained to a height of progress in all these lines that is grand, that is beautiful, that shows advancement, cultivation and growth, but have we attained to that special degree of civilization or of progress which unites man to man, which brings human beings into accord with one another?

We have our little circles of friendship; we have our homes in which family ties are very beautiful and endearing; we hold our own personal loved ones in our embrace and would shelter them from the storms and the harsh conditions of external life; we hold our dear friends within our social clasp and give them the warmth of our affection and sympathy, sorrow with them in their woes, rejoice with them in their joys, and, in a measure, perhaps, we feel kindly toward humanity; but have we not some duty, some degree of responsibility that is more far-reaching than this which applies simply to the family circle and to the social associations and environments of personal friends?

Civilization, we apprehend, does mean progress; it means refinement; it means a cultivated condition for good. If civilization means anything at all it must mean fraternity of spirit; it must mean a oneness of humanity for mutual blessing. If it means anything at all, a civilized people means a people that are at one accord; that are so thoroughly united with each other and with the world that they could not possibly bear to see other individuals at war with each other or suffering to any degree whatever that could be alleviated by their ministrations. If civilization means anything at all, it means fraternal fellowship; it means the exercise of altruism—that beautiful principle which brings mankind into one tender and sweet bond of relationship, making all of one grand family.

Now, dear friends, if we behold a family here on earth, composed of mother, father, and brothers and sisters, children of those good parents, all loving and tender with each other, sympathetic and kindly, joy to the sorowing heart, and none of that family is ill or wounded, or in any degree whatever under the discipline of suffering, all the members sympathize with that one, and all the members vie with each other to bring to the sufferer that which shall be helpful, that will bring strength to mind and body, bring health to the weak and afflicted, bring joy to the sorowinrg heart, and none of that family are happy until the afflicted one is restored to health or to comfort and joy, whatever the condition may have been. When the sufferer is brought to a degree of comfort and the pain and misery have been dispelled, all in that family rejoice; it is an occasion for festivity; something must be expressed in a beautiful manner to show the gratitude and the joy that the dear one has recovered. This ought to be the state with all the members of a civilized nation. It should be the condition with all the members of nations everywhere. A civilized world should show nations sitting down together in accord and amity of purpose and desire for mutual benediction and uplifting. A civilized world should show all the nations meeting in brotherly love, in harmony discussing wide questions, seeking to solve great problems—not for the aggrandizement of rulers, of kings and potentates, of men or women in high position, but for the general good.

The spiritual realms of light and peace are composed of civilized beings, and we say this because they are advanced to such a state of progress that all work mutually and in harmony for the general good. There is no self-seeking among them; there is no looking about for any personal position of affluence or grandeur; there is no high title to be gained by any individual—it is all of one common life, beautiful and sweet because it is harmonious; because there is no instinctive feeling of enmity, nor is there any effort made by one to crowd another in any direction. It is beautiful because men and women and children love one another, and when the principle of divine love, implanted as it is in the human heart, flames out so beautifully that it illuminates all the darkened places of the earth and seeks out the outcast and the waif, and finds those who are in misery and distress, and brings them within the pale of its protecting influence, and gives them love and care, and makes for them home ties and associations and conditions, the world will blossom in beauty like the rose and civilization will be the grandest name that can be applied to humanity. But while warfare exists between man and man; while discord reigns in human hearts and expresses itself in deeds that show only hatred and animosity; while nations come together in warfare and murderous implements are manufactured for the purpose of destroying not only individuals but armies and city walls, and sweeping away whole communities of beings, we may blush at the name of civilization.

While altruism exists only as a word unthought of by the careless throng, unminded by the many who through each passing day seek to gain their ends and aims regardless of the rights of their fellow beings, the term civilized should be blotted from our vocabulary.

While miners toil in the darkness and damp of the underground for a mere pittance with which to buy their daily bread and to afford the meanest kind of subsistence to their loved ones; while little children are toiling in the factories, slaves to the greed and avarice of human beings; while thousands and millions of human souls are obliged to labor arduously for a scanty pittance, until long after dark in order that they may keep a footing upon this planet Earth, the word civilization is a disgrace to humanity.

But you look at human progress and claim that man has advanced in many things; we grant you yes, yet civilization is not complete; it only begins in by-ways and passages and is followed along those lines through the enterprise and energy of those minds that are able to achieve things which add to the comfort and convenience of the race.

We must look at these things clearly and closely and ask what it means to live the altruistic life—ask what it is to dwell in brotherly love one with the other, not to sing alone and to preach in words of the sweet relationships, the brotherhood and sisterhood in the human family and then proceed to forget all about it and go our many ways during the week so intent upon personal employ and affairs as to not realize that we are crowding a brother or a sister from their own God-given room and place that we may have a little broader space in which to move or a little grander opportunity by which to achieve success. This is not the spirit of altruism; it is not the fraternity that tends toward spiritualizing human beings, and not until the world realizes that the entire social fabric must be made over and so well woven that there shall be no spot or blemish on it, no thin threads anywhere, but a complete and perfect whole from which may be fashioned raiment of beauty for every human individual, shall we find the height of civilization and the grandeur of nations that shall save the world.

We have been told of the decay of nations in the past. Countries have arisen, have founded empires, have grown grand and magnificent in achievement and expression; art, science and various forms of industry have made their way and accomplished grand results among the people of those nations, yet ignorance abounded with the masses. The knowledge that had been attained was kept close by those in high position, the masses were made their slaves to do the bidding of the few who occupied high places; corruption followed among those who had become so satiated with the higher or the more worldly conditions of things and they fell. The masses in their ignorance did not know how to save the country and the people. Decay like a blight came upon such nations and they disappeared, to be followed by other nations of people with a little higher understanding of life, a little keener intuition of life's purposes, a broader grasp of things in general. Knowledge became a little more widely diffused among the people; the masses were not held quite so closely as slaves as were those of former days, and so the world marched on. But wherever spirituality has been cultivated and manifested by the human mind there have been found the seeds of perpetuity, there have been gained the germs of stability. People and nations that have been actuated in their lives and achievements by the spirit of good to man will not disappear and leave no mark of their beauty and their power.

Nations that have the foundation principles of honor and justice, who believe in the greatest good to the greatest number, will not disappear from the world and leave no sign, but they grow stronger as the centuries pass. The so-called civilized nations of the present day have attained a high degree of power, just so far as they have given forth to their people those marks of care and protection of helpfulness and strength, that are needed in the education of the masses and the enlightenment of the world.

And so we have great hope for the future; not only hope, but we have knowledge that the world has advanced and has attained much power, so shall it reach onward to higher grades of development and strength, and that as humanitarian principles are put forth and acted upon by communities and by individuals, just so far is the foundation laid for the greater advancement and stability of the human family. Thus do we know that as the principles of brotherly love, of altruistic thought and effort are inculcated in the human family and are manifested in kindly deeds, in loving activity toward our fellow men, just so much are we aided to bring forward a grander civilization than the world has yet known.

When society—which is only another name for a community, or a nation, or for the world at large—composed of intelligent, educated and industrious human beings, making up a band of workers for the helping of the whole, takes into its embrace and protection the waifs and the outcasts of life and places them in educative environments where they may gain the sweetest and most beautiful elements for their inner growth, mentally and spiritually, and provides these waifs and outcasts with the opportunities for instruction and the comforts of that love which they should have, then shall we find that civilization is nearing its pinnacle of power.

A city or a state that holds within it dens of infamy, street after street that is made up of hovels and of resting places for criminal classes, the vicious and the ignorant, that has within its environments perhaps hundreds of little children cast forth into the street to wander around neglected and to suffer, has a blot upon its civilization that all the rains of heaven cannot wash away.

A city or a state that formulates law, under the pressure of a society composed of intelligent and sympathetic men and women who love their fellow men, that say we shall have no outcasts, we shall have no waifs wandering along the streets searching for bread and shelter, but shall take them under our protection, give them homes and schools and the loving care that shall bring forth from them the highest and the best of which they are capable is on the high road to civilization such as the world has never known. The light and the grandeur of such a civilization gleams with splendor and will illuminate the very heavens and all the surounding places with a glory that tongue can never tell; but until society turns from the contemplation of that which is only material or which only appeals to the intellectual in mankind and does not strike down to the roots of the spiritual; until society as a whole—communities and nations—turns to the consideration of that which is ennobling, grand and pure, because it deals with human needs and the demands of human life, there will be no civilization that is worthy of the name.

Empires may rise and they may flourish in the grandeur of all that is resplendent in human thought and conception; nations may grow in power and spread forth their light and flaunt their banners on every hand; communities may be formed of human beings who open out their halls of intellect, their temples of music, and show to the world that they are a cultivated people, but unless the spirit of helpfulness is abroad and within themselves and manifests itself in practical, utilitarian ways for the uplifting of the forlorn and the helpless, the abolishment of ignorance and the foundation of education that shall truly educate the young into a condition of self-helpfulness, self-restraint, self-protection and self-respect, we shall not have that which the world itself has a right to claim.

Civilization may boast of all the grandeur that it may possess; intellect may flaunt all its brilliancy before the world, but we say that unless ye do unto the least of these little ones that which shall provide not only the necessities of life but those conditions which will enable them to become men and women self-respectful and self-respecting, and that will respect the true laws of all being and the rights of their fellow men included—unless that is done by humanity we need not look for the highest results in human experience and human achievement.

Civilization means refinement, cultivation, education, progress from the animal to the spiritual, from the crude to the finished, from the ignorant to the wise; it means always and ever advancement and growth, and we as civilized beings owe it to ourselves to so cultivate an altruistic spirit of brotherly love, of tender sympathy, that we shall put forth an influence day by day, silent and expressing in outward forms, that shall help to hold human thought and develop sentiment along those lines that look to the redemption of the race from criminal conditions to that higher state of nobility in which there shall be no waif, no outcast, no criminal, no prison bars, no halls of justice, so-called, before which human beings are brought to listen to condemnation and punishment, but because the schools will have been established, the prisons will cease to be; because the halls of education will have been opened where only beauty and love are found, all that is ignoble will have fallen away. The old criminals will have disappeared; spirit life can take care of them. If you are not constantly sending new detachments to the other world, there will be plenty of opportunity for ministering spirits to take care of those who have pased from the old life.

See to it, O ye communities, O society, O ye nations, that new and young criminals are not formed from the outcasts and the waifs. Take these little ones, provide them with schools, with love, with home life, with the caretaker's influence and tender guardianship. The whole world will be more beautiful. Civilization will then be a thing of splendor; criminology will be known no more; inherited conditions will be of the finest and best. The world will then march on with great strides toward the highest and the purest and the unfoldment of a spirituality which will open the way to the oncoming of angel hosts who can then affiliate with mortals, blending in harmony one with the other on one plane of spiritual vibration that will sweep through the universe with grandeur and power, making man intellectual truly, spiritual surely, and an honor to himself and to his Creator.

THE LATEST SCIENTIFIC TRIUMPH.

Why Don't Spirits Come to Earth and Give Instructions in Regard to Valuable Inventions and Thus Avoid Patents, and Thereby Benefit All Alike?

In the press and hurry of daily living few of us realize what triumphs man is constantly making over Nature.

What mention, for example, have you seen of the news that next month the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company will begin doing business regularly between America and Europe, across the Atlantic Ocean?

Yet here is an achievement that deserves to be celebrated by the whole world, and it is no more noticed than the passing of a trolley car.

Ten years ago a man who would have said that the day would come when a man could sit in this country and communicate instantly with a man in England, with no wire, even, connecting the two, would have been sent to the insane asylum.

That thing, however, is being done to-day, and has been done for several weeks past. One Marconi pole is at Clifton, on the coast of Ireland, and another is at Cape Breton, in Canada, and messages leap from one to the other as surely and as swiftly as though they were not six feet apart.

Marconi has at last overcome the trouble that heretofore has prevented long-distance wireless telegraphy. It was due to the sun's rays, which interfered with messages. But now this has been remedied. Communication can be had by day as well as by night, and by the end of September the Marconi Company will be ready for business.

This flashing of messages three or four thousand miles around the earth will soon be as commonplace as using the telephone is now, and men will make use of the service and think nothing of it. Yet such communication was beyond the wildest dreams of mankind only a few years ago. The world is moving fast in these latter days, and will move faster yet. Though the earth has been inhabited for millions of years, it is only within the last century that Nature's secrets have commenced to be discovered.

We are at the beginning of discovery and knowledge. What the next century will bring forth we cannot guess, but we may be sure that it will be full of wonders unspeakable.

The above from the Chicago Daily Journal illustrates the nature of the latest scientific triumph. The question here arises, why do not wise spirits give direct to many mediums information that will lead to something new and valuable to all in chemistry or mechanics, and thus avoid the patent office at Washington, that restricts valuable blessings. It is claimed by some that all great inventions originate from the spirit side of life. If so, where does the "patent right" come in?

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, special agent Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Co., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "Having used Actina for several years, I cheerfully recommend it for the cure of eye, ear and throat affections. It cured my mother, of cataracts."

Susan Cardwell, Lincoln, Kan., writes: "I am 73 years old. I was so blind I could only know persons by their voices. After using Actina I can now thread a needle without glasses."

Mrs. T. F. Moyle, Water ord, Wis., writes:—"About two years ago I was taken with iritis in both eyes and nearly was blind and it was thought an operation would be necessary. I sent for an Actina last April and it has taken all the inflamation out and my eyes are now well.

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and self-administered by the patient, and is sent on trial postpaid. The Influence of the Zodiac Upon Human Life,

With Character Readings of Persons Born Upon the Cusp.

The principles found in this volume are both a science and a religion, for a better and a far happier humanity. It points to the planets as an index to the human character and liability to diseases; also gives the gems and colors suited to temperaments evolved under certain planets. But the author, ELEANOR KIRK, lays special stress upon the fundamental principle that "All maladies known to man can be entirely dominated, forever cast out, by those who realize that mind is the master and body the servant." Price, cloth, $1.00.

E. W. Sprague and wife are now at their home in the city of Detroit, Mich., where they expect to remain in the missionary, and other fields of work for the grand cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Sprague's services may be secured for Sunday or week-day meetings, weddings and funerals, anywhere in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, or Canada, in places not too far away from Detroit. Mrs. Sprague will also respond to calls for meetings and seances. They are both well known platform test mediums. Individuals or societies desiring their services can address them at 1082 Trumbull Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Mrs. A. Fiedemann writes from Galveston, Texas: "The Secretary of our society, Mrs. Munro, was given a surprise party on the 24th of August, it being her birthday. About fifty participated. They served a very nice lunch, consisting of ice cream and lemonade. The president of the Auxiliary, Mrs. Deane, presented Mrs. Munro, in the name of the members of both societies, a very handsome ink-stand and gold pen and holder. The secretary was both astonished and overjoyed, but arose from the table and thanked them all in a few appreciative words. We expect Mr. Ring here on September 1st, and everybody is looking forward to his coming with great pleasure, for he is still loved by the people of Galveston."

Minnie E. Hanvey writes: "The Mass Meeting given by the Golden Rule Society, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 S. Western ave., August 31, and Sunday night, September 1, was an event long to be remembered, and a new interest was manifested by those who were fortunate enough to be present. Mr. and Mrs. Drake were the speakers Saturday night, and the message bearers were Mrs. Drake and Mrs. Kittie Gifford of Iowa, formerly of this city. Sunday night Prof. W. F. Peck of St. Louis, held the audience spell-bound by his intensely interesting lecture. He spoke in such a masterly manner that outsiders who were inclined to be skeptical, were convinced of the truth and beauty of Spiritualism. Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley one of the brightest lights of Chicago, was the mssage bearer. She made many hearts glad, and every test or message was acknowledged correct. Sunday night, September 8, Emma J. Hansen of this city will be the speaker. Nora E. Hill, our beloved pastor, has returned from her trip through Iowa in good spirits. Everyone was glad to see her smiling face agin."

Hattie Hoyt, Secretary, writes from Battle Creek, Mich.: "The First Spiritualist Church of Battle Creek, is pleased to announce that it has opened the season in September with Mrs. D. A. Morrill of Grand Rapids, who will remain with us during the month. Mrs. Morrill is well known in camp and society, as an excellent speaker and message bearer, and we are looking forward with much pleasure to her sojourn with us, as a time of profit and enjoyment. She will be followed, during the months of October and November, by Mr. Will J. Erwood, of Elkhart, Ind. Mr. Erwood stands among the first, as a representative of the cause. Broad, sympathetic and progressive, his labors for the upliftment of his fellowman extend from church to prison, and his lectures and messages impress his hearers with their sincerity and truth. We invite all who can make it possible to do so, to attend our meetings, and help to make them in every way a success."

Dr. Beverly writes: "I have rented the Assembly Hall, at 3514 Vincennes avenue, near Cottage Grove avenue. Holding services from 3 to 10 p. m. Sundays. The best talent only will be advertised, and all our old friends and many new ones are expected to make this the best meeting possible. My wife, Madam Dixon Beverly and her daughter, will assist. Local talent and mediums passing through the city are invited to help. I will deliver a course of lectures on the New Kingdom Sunday evenings. Conference will begin promptly at 3 p. m., followed by tests, till 5, then healing services will be held. Fine music will be provided. The Dr and his wife have just rturned from a 3 months' trip to the Pacific Coast."

S. A. Huntington writes from Malden, Mass.: "Malden Progressive Spiritual Society, 138 Pleasant st., Mrs. F. S. Sheriff, president, after holding interesting circles all through July and August, our fall and winter session opened on Sunday evening, September 1, with Mrs B. W. Belcher of Marlboro, Mass., as speaker and message bearer. She chose for her subject, "Working for the Angels," giving an interesting and instructive adress, showing the grand work being done by the angelic hosts through all true mediums, and indicating the great work to be done by all true Spiritualists in defending our mediums from unjust laws, and to work and fight to have those already on the statute books annulled, and prevent others from being enacted. After this able lecture the speaker devoted three-quarters of an hour to giving many beautiful messages. Mrs. Annie Coggeshall of Lowell, Mass., will be the speaker on September 8, and Annie R. Chapman of Brighton, Mass., on the 15th. Circle every Thursday evening and 11 a. m. and 3 p. m., on Sundays."

Mrs. H. S. Bigelow writes from San Jose, Cal.: "I am glad that there is one spiritual paper that we can depend on for news from societies, lecturers and other choice reading matter. We look for the paper every week and always find something good and interesting."

John Wallace, president, writes from Ashtabula, Ohio, regarding the dedication of the New Spiritual Temple at that place: ""We have been somewhat handicapped by the specifications and requirements of our seating contract not being complied with, but everything else pertaining to our New Temple, has moved nicely, and satisfactorily, and we are now delving deep in the preliminary work of arrangement for dedicatory services, which will be held in the New Temple, Sunday, September 15. A good program is being arranged. Our regular speaker, D. A. Herrick, assisted by Fred. D. Dunnakin, and others (some of our best speakers), will be with us. A musical program of a very high order will be one of the features of the occasion. A general invitation is extended to all workers and friends of the cause to come and help us by their presence and good will to make the occasion a success."

Mrs. I. W. Pope of Cleveland, Ohio, intends to spend the winter in California.

The Daily Herald speaks as follows of the Mt. Pleasant Park Camp, Clinton, Iowa: "The annual business meeting of the association was held Friday. W. F. Peck of St. Louis, for many years president of the M. V. S. A., has relinquished the cares and duties of his important office, an Ottumwa, Iowa, man, prominent in Spiritualists' circles succeeding him. During his long term of service at the head of the organization, Mr. Peck became widely known as an orator, capable business man, and a man of broad and liberal views, who did a great deal to advance the cause in which he has been working for so many years. The new officers of the assembly are: President, E. L. Kilby of Ottumwa, Iowa; vice-president, Mrs. E. R. Abbott of Alliance, Ohio; secretary, Mrs. M. B. Anderson, of Clarksville, Mo.; treasurer, Mrs. Christine Cooper, Clinton, Iowa; trustees, W. J. Olmstead of Webster City and William John Ward of Clinton, Iowa.

Mrs. M. L. S. Chase, from West Pullman, writes: "We seem to be favored with good talent at Bock's Hall, for our semi-monthly meetings. Sunday evening, September 1, Mr. and Mrs. Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson and Mrs. Schafesberg of the city; Mrs. Longstaff of Cheltenham all were in attendance, and a good meeting was the result. The attendance was good. Many investigators were convinced by the messages from their departed friends. There will be some of the same good talent and others to assist at the next regular meeting, September 15, and every two week continuously as long as we can secure the talent and the hall and the public will be interested by coming."

Ferd C. Suhrer writes: "The special meeting of the Fraternal Order of Spiritualists in Hygeia Hall, 406 Ogden avenue, on Wednesday evening, August 28, was for the purpose of giving the public an opportunity to hear Miss Elizabeth Harlow, one of the recognized leading lights of the rostrum. Our spacious hall was filled early by an expectant representative audience and we were given a rare treat, which had been anticipated for weeks. Miss Harlow is a Chicago favorite, and when it is known she is to make an address, the knowing ones promptly make arrangements to be there, and for a mid-week meeting in August, the large audience was a glowing tribute to this talented instrument's popularity. After a few remarks by Dr. Caird, the audience joined leartily in singing 'America.' Sister Lichtig offered the invocation which was followed by a beautiful soprano solo by Miss Bessie Johnson of St. Louis, who delighted us with her rendition of one of Dudley Buck's compositions. Miss Harlow voiced pleasant greetings from Unity Camp, Mass., which were well received. Our old friend, Dr. T. Wilkins, then read one of his inimitable poems in his usual happy manner, which was written for the occasion, and Prof. Jos. Singer's violin solo merited the applause of the audience. Miss Harlow then followed with the address of the evening. Frequent applause punctuated her remarks as she proceeded. There was not a moment's lull in the constant, easy flow of inspiration, or in our eagerness to catch every word uttered. At the conclusion of the services a reception was tendered Miss Harlow, and all were anxious to grasp the hand of one who had sweetened the lives of so many. Another hour had passed before we realized it, we were so interested that we forgot time. Ice cream and cake were served by the Fraternal Daughters, which brought a happy ending of the evening. Many have time and again suggested to Dr. Caird that he make an appeal to those interested for contributions to assist us in engaging such recoghized talent as has been our custom. Our season opens Sunday, October 6, for 8 months and an opportunity will be given those who wish to help us in the way to secure such able speakers as Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Miss Harlow, Mrs. Lillie and others. To those who feel sufficiently interested we ask to be with us on our opening day and contribute according to their means, either a small sum monthly or as they feel able."

Dr. Jose Montoya has December, January and March open for engagements to lecture and give messages. Address all letters to Suite 10, 407 E. Douglas Ave., Wichita, Kansas.

Mrs. Maud Lord Drake will hold a seances for psychic phenomena at 16 St. James Place, Thursday evening, September 12. She is well and favorably known in Chicago and no doubt there will be a large attendance.

TAKE NOTICE.—Correspondents are requested when writing for this paper to use either a typewriter or a pen, with black ink. Write on only one side of the paper, and in a plain, legible hand, and thus avoid the necessity of preparing your copy for the printer. Please bear this in mind.

A beautiful instance of spirit guidance is recorded in the New Testament. It is there related that "the angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, ""Arise, and take the child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word;" but the majority of those who believe that this incident occurred, because they have been educated to accept it, will not give credence to simillar manifestations which are frequently reported now-a-days. Yet we know of no valid reason why the one incident should be accepted and others rejected.—Light, London, Eng.

Mrs. Mary L. Gates writes from Detroit, Mich.: "Mrs. Amanda Coffman of Grand Rapids, Mich., recently visited our city on business, and at the request of her many friends in Detroit, she held a meeting at 164 High St., West, on the evening of September 1st. All who listened to the words of wisdom as they fell from her lips, realized she was fully inspired by her guides. Subject, "Home and its influences," was ably handled. After the lecture a veritable love feast was ours. Sweet messages from our loved ones were received, and positive evidence given of their presence. Although this noble worker has practically been out of the field for a year on account of poor health, yet we know her to be doing a missionary work, sowing seeds wherever she goes."

Dr. Jose Montoya writes from Hutchinson, Kansas: "A very pleasant visit to Hutchinson, Kansas was my experience last Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Arriving in the city, made famous in the west by having the largest salt plant in the world, located here, I went at once to the Midland Hotel and took rooms. After tea the evening was pleasantly spent among friends and acquaintances at the different places of amusement, among which I would like to mention the Rose Theatre, which is owned and operated by a leading Wichita Spiritualist, Prof. J. Edward Cook. Sunday I was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Cash at dinner, and the time was very pleasantly spent in conversing upon the deeper meaning of the Spiritualist Philosophy. Their home is a model of harmony and a veritable retreat to rest tired and unstrung nerves. That evening I had the pleasure of addressing an audience of about one hundred as intelligent souls as I ever met in this part of the world, in the G. A. R. Hall, which is the regular meeting place of the society here. The best of attention was given the speaker during the entire service. The messages, though few in number, owing to bad conditions, were well received and nearly all recognized. The society here is in good shape in every way and in numbers ranks among the first in the State. It has been built up in the last few years and is at present under the efficient leadership of Wm. Hobson, its president. Its speaker and medium, Mrs. Myrtle Cash, is giving the best years of her life to the work and this lady fully deserves the appreciation she receives from the public she serves. I leave on the 7:30 train to-night for Wichita, where I resume my work in the morning."

Mrs. O. B. Wilson writes: "A Birth Day Celebration and Farewell Reception will be given Georgia Gladys Cooley, Friday evening, September 13 8 p. m., at the Hyde Park Occult Society Hall, 319 East 55th street. All turn out and give this well known and popular medium a grand send off to foreign countries. That she will be well received at the places she has decided to visit, we all know, and feel that she will make as fine a record there as she has in her own country. Mrs. Cooley has never failed to respond when called upon. Let us show her that we appreciate it."

Frank T. Ripley writes from Oakfield, Wis.: "I arrived here this week to lecture and give messages for two Sundays; then I go to Lodi, Wis., for the 3rd Sunday. The other Sundays of September I go to Gotham, Wis. What surprises me most is the large number of Progressive Thinkers taken in this very orthodox town, and to find that many of these people are not Spiritualists. It is said a certain minister of the gospel takes the paper on the quiet, and often in his sermons quotes sentences, which sound most familiar to the Spiritualists. I am glad to see your paper in nearly every city or town I visit."

George W. Kates and wife will serve the First Spiritual Church of Baltimore, Md., as the settled pastors for the ensuing season, commencing Sunday, September 15th. Their local address in Baltimore is not yet determined, but letters will always be forwarded to them if addressed to their home, Cheyney, Pa. Mr. Kates, as president of the Temple Fund Society, asks all friends of Spiritualism to join that society before the October convention, and contribute one dollar for membership dues for 1908, so that the second year of effort will become successful enough to make great progress in Temple or building extension until each society may some sweet day have its home where magnetic forces shall be inviting to spirits who are anxious to minister unto humanity. This worthy cause and effort needs assistance. Who will fail to respond? They who do not assist human progress in spiritual culture, will ever regret it in spirit life.

A meeting was held at the home of Dr. C. A. Burgess, 54 Pearce street, last Wednesday evening, to perfect plans to be recommended to the next meeting, to be held at the same place, Wednesday, September 11, at which time and place it is the purpose to form into working order the Spiritualists' League of Chicago, and elect officers, appoint committees and do all possible in the nature of organizing said League. Everyone should go and get in touch and into understanding with the purpose of this organization.

Correspondent writes: "The Sunday evening, September 8th meting of the Hyde Park Occult Society was the occasion of the last appearance of Chicago's beloved medium, Georgia Gladys Cooley before a public audience as lecturer and message bearer, in the city of her home at least, and the little hall was crowded beyond its seating capacity, and the face of Mrs. Wilson, the president of the society, was likewise beaming with radiance. Mrs. Cooley began by inviting the audience into the silence for a few moments, and after reading a poem announced her subject as "The Progress of the Age," and certainly did herself proud from beginning to the close of her discourse, and the appreciation of the audience was very evident in the strict attention to the falling words of eloquence and instruction. Time and space forbid the real justice we would like to do this gifted medium and lecturer, but suffice to say, the New Zealanders, to whom she is to minister so soon, and for six months or longer, may well feel elated at the prospect of her appearance upon their rostrum. Her friends, and they are legion, wish her a pleasant voyage and a successful tour of labor in Europe. A birth-day and farewell reception is to be given her at the same hall on Friday evening, September 13, at the same hall, 319 55th street."

Mrs. Carrie M. Hinsdale has excellent audiences at Ft. Worth, Tex., where she is lecturing.

The meetings at Indianapolis, Ind., under the lectureship of Dr. Wattles, will commence on Sunday, September 15th. The front hall at the Orpheum building has been engaged for the season. This is one of the finest halls in the city, and will be an ideal place for the meetings. Mrs. Frances Ruddick, on of the greatest of the world's mediums, will give independent writings each Sunday night during October. The famous Wattles quartette will be present October 6, and Mr. Russell H. Wattles, the Musical evangelist of Spiritualism, will sing at the meetings. The distinguishing feature of these meetings will be able and vitally interesting lectures and wonderful and convincing phenomena. All Spiritualists are cordially invited to assist in making them successful.

W. O. Knowles writes from 247 Coade avenue Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I will accept engagements for the month of October and November, 1907, at reasonable terms, for lecture and message work."

Mrs. May A. Price of Washington, D. C., is spnding a few weeks with the Spiritualists of Spartansburg, Pa. Mrs. Price has some open dates, and will make engagements with societies as lecturer and test medium; also with camps for the next summer. Address Spartansburg, Pa., Box 121.

Mrs. E. H. Thompson wrties: "The Fraternal Daughters held their semi-monthly meeting at the home of Sister Travers, 275¼ Peoria street, Wednesday, September 4. We had a very nice attendance, both afternoon and evening. The home was decorated with red, white and blue streamers. The following mediums gave readings: Mrs. Dr. Caird, Mrs. Adams, Mrs. Lichtig and Brother Thompson. We feel ourselves indebted to our worthy sister, Mrs Travers for the vocal and musical talent which her friends rendered to us; in fact this meeting was one of the best we ever had, especially the social part of it, which we always strive to make it. The indications are that the young people are beginning to think the Spiritualists the only ones who have a real social time at their meetings. After the mediums were through reading, we had a distribution of prizes, after which the evening came to a close by some fancy dancing, such as Irish jigs and two-steps, by Sister J. S. Adams and other young people present. Our next meeting will be held at the home of Sister J. S. Adams, 1007 W. Harrison street, corner of Leavitt, when we will give a Japanese party, Wednesday, September 18, at 2 p. m. Come and bring your friends and drive dull care away."

G. H. Brooks, president of the Wisconsin State Spiritualist Association, passed through the city last Saturday on his way frim Lily Dale Camp, where he lectured. His permanent address is 253 St. Charles street, Wauwatosa, Wis.

Prof. Lockwood passed through the city last week on his way to St. Paul, Minn., to lecture before the meeting of the State Association. From there he goes to Milwaukee, Wis., where he will lecture at the Mass Meeting to be held there by the State President, G. H. Brooks.

AT CAMP MEETINGS.

A Good Letter From George W. Kates and Mrs. Kates.

Our service at the camp meetings we have attended the past summer, have been very pleasant. The interest in camp work seems to be as great as ever before. Of course there is more stability to the mode of propaganda and presentation.

The phenomena are of great power and attraction; but the lectures are making deep impressions and causing increased attention. The teaching and demonstration of the spirit must ever go hand in hand, and that is more dominant now than ever before. The Spiritualist camp meetings are great places where the first principles of Spiritualism reach the populace, and the higher teaching attracts and interests the Spiritualists. And, the friends of our cause seem to be more determined to sustain a propaganda. That must grow more and more in order to have the place we should have in public utility.

At Parkland, Pa., the restoration of a camp is having splendid assistance, and progress is so in the air that all feel enthused who attend there. Brother and Sister Locke are the warriors there who have borne the brunt of many sieges. All are heroes in the work, but their names are engraven in the memory of every visitor, if not recorded in public annals. And the spirits know their own, every time. Go on, and victory will crown all!

At Lake Pleasant, Mass., the camp has arisen Phoenix like, out of the ashes. The devastating conflagration last spring did not burn out a particle of enthusiasm, indeed the interest seems greater than ever. Under the leadership of President R. F. Churchill, of Greenfield, Mass., and the earnest efforts of Secretary Albert P. Blinn, of Norwich, Ct., the camp is going to be greater than before. They gave us all possible advantage to minister unto the people, and added appreciation to our labors. They gave each public worker on their platform a public reception that made each feel proud. Instead of finding gloom, we found bright sunshine.

At Blodgett's landing, on Sunapee Lake, N. H., there is a camp that should be widely known. It is an ideal spot for a summer outing. The grand Lake and glorious Pines make health supremely catching. The management of the camp is in the hands of Spiritualists who want Spiritualism, and no fads or foolishness need be mixed. They made our stay both useful and pleasant.

A large summer attendance by persons seeking this lake of resorts, and steamer excursions, adds an outside attendance that gives good opportunity for propaganda. We will ever feel indebted to Brother Thomas Burpee, of Sutton, N. H., for urging our engagement there, and to President John Gage of Manchester, N. H., for camp courtesies and for his effort to carry on the camp work. May good and wise spirits ever help all earnest Spiritualists to carry the good tidings unto the people, and may each Spiritualist grow in the grace of zeal and effort. Fraternally,

GEORGE W. KATES AND WIFE.

MASS MEETING.

Next Saturday evening and Sunday, September 14 and 15, there will be a Mass Meeting of Spiritualists at 421 Milwaukee street, Severance Hall, Milwaukee, Wis., George H. Brooks presiding. Prof. W. M. Lockwood, the scientist, will be present and lecture.

Harmony Grove Camp.

Harmony Grove Spiritualist Camp Meeting Association has just closed ONE OF the most, if not the MOST, successful camps in the history of the grove—a success socially, spiritually and financially. We had a goodly number of earnest workers, as folows: Arthur S. Howe, State President; Mrs. M. E. G. Howe, State Organizer; J. L. Dryden, State Secretary; Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, one of the State Board of Directors; John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas; Mrs. Evelyn E. Pomeroy, of Seattle; Mrs. Sanford Johnson, of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Mary P. Morrill, of Chula Vista, among whom there was not a ripple of ill will or jealous feeling made manifest throughout the entire camp.

The Management, too, added a good many improvements during this season, which are all paid for and a few dollars now in the treasury as a nest egg for another year.

In the absence of our president, Prof. W. C. Bowman, who, on account of illness, was unable to be with us at any time during camp, First Vice-President E. B. Lowman took the chair and conducted the various sessions of the camp.

The officers, as elected for the ensuing year, are: President, J. L. Dryden; first vice-president, E. B. Lowman; second vice-president, Sister C. A. Dodge; treasurer, Ezra Foster; director, W. C. Bowman, and secretary, T. J. McFeron.

SECRETARY.

EUSAPIA PALLADINO.

Occur in Her Presence.

Occur in HHer Presence.

Eusapia Palladino, the well-known Neapolitan medium who was rather a failure when she appeared before the Psychical Research Society in London, a few years ago, has just subjected herself to a series of experiments held under the auspices of the University of Naples and participated in by Profs. Bottazzi and Galeotti and other well-known scientists. Eusapia is an ignorant woman, and is known to have received no education whatever. Nevertheless, while in a trance she is able to converse in several modern languages, and writes in each of them in a script that is like copperplate.

At the University of Naples the professors deliberately set traps for her, placing objects with which she could bring about effects within reach of her hand and fixing electric lights close by, so as to throw instant illumination upon them if she attempted to make use of them. A dish containing clay to receive possible moldings or marks was placed at a considerable distance from the medium, and her hands were carefully controlled by two persons, when she suddenly stretched out the three middle fingers of one hand, and rubbing the under

As there was nothing on the table she was asked to what she referred and she said::

"How hard it is! What is it?"

As there was nothing on the table she was asked to what she referred and she said:

"It is the hard clay. I wish it taken away. I do not need it."

Transmits Finger Prints.

When the professors came to examine the distant dish of clay it was found to have marks of three fingers upon it, of which the movements corresponded exactly to those which had been made by the medium on the table and it appeared as though she were able in some way to transmit the sensations of her own hands to a distance.

In one of the experiments the wrists of Eusapia were tied to two iron rings fixed in the door; the cords that held her were knotted and sealed, and yet under these conditions a bottle of water was carried about, and a seat and large human hands were seen to appear. Prof. Galeotti declares that while he was holding Eusapia by the hands, he distinctly saw a double figure in her place, with identical arms, which, however, were held in different positions.

Prof. Bottazzi, the leader of the experiments, once touched the fingers of Eusapia, and an electric light, the tap of which had been fixed inside her cabinet, but out of her reach, was lighted four or five times, and as many times extinguished. Prof. Bettazzi also had a large, and apparently natural human hand laid upon his neck, his head, and his arm. Each time he was able to touch it, and, when on his arm; to see it by suddenly turning on the electric lights when it was not dragged away, but faded out of sight and touch as he held it.—Special Dispatch from Naples, Italy.

A GOLDEN SHEAF.

To Our Friends: — October next will bring the 50th anniversary of our marriage, and nearly the 55th of our labor in the field of Spiritualism. In the first years we published a volume, "Blossoms of Our Spring," thinking that should the time come in the autumn of life, we would have a volume fitting the occasion of the closing years, of fruitage. A half century has almost gone by, and this 50th anniversary gives the occasion for the issuance of this volume, which we have entitled A GOLDEN SHEAF. It will be made up of selections from matter not before published, in prose and verse; selections of the best sentences and paragraphs scattered through our various books; a new spiritual song with music; illustrations of fac simile automatically written manuscripts; photogravures of our home, birthplace, and brief autobiographical sketches

We propose to make the book in paper and binding as superior as the price, $1.00, will permit. Every copy will be numbered and contain our autographs.

The number of copies will be strictly limited to the number of subscribers, and the book will not be placed on sale after publication. As we have reached the conclusion to publish at a somewhat late date, if you favor the undertaking you will confer a favor by sending your name, by card or letter, at once (the price is not now wanted).

A list of names of subscribers will be published in the volume.

We thank you beforehand for your favor in inviting our book to your homes. HUDSON TUTTLE,

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected.

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Dr. Gilbert T. Smith.—Q. Reading passage in a closed book, is it a test of spirit power?

A.—Some numbers since this question was presented and called forth the reply from several spirits communicating that they could not read in a closed book, and that this test exceeded their capabilities, as it would were they yet in the mortal form. Dr. Smith kindly calls my attention to the evidence to the contrary furnished by Mr. Myers in his exhaustive work on "Human Personality." I think the reader will draw the conclusion that the quotation, while amplifying and explaining, sustains the position taken. For if to read depends on conditions difficult to determine, and more difficult to institute, and so few spirits are able to use the occasion, their failure cannot be taken as opposing evidence.

This quotation from "Human Personality," appendix to chapter IX, and quoted from the transactions of Society for Psychical Research, Vol. XI, pp. 106-7:

"I will now give you an account of 'Rector,' one of the alleged familiar spirits, as to quotation from a closed and unknown book. This spirit was intimately connected with Mr. Stainton-Moses, and habitually wrote for 'Imperator,' and for a group of guides occasionally. His hand writing came more and more to resemble that of Mr. Moses himself. To him, moreover, was attributed the power of reading in books unknown to Mr. Moses, and of writing out matter there found through Mr. Moses' hand.

"Q. Can you read?"

"A. No, friend, I cannot, but Zachary Grey can, and Rector. I am not able to materialize myself or to command the elements."

"Q. Are either of these spirits here?"

"A. I will bring one by and by. I will send—Rector is here."

"Q. I am told that you can read. Is it so? Can you read a book?"

"A. (Spirit handwriting changed) Yes, friend, with difficulty."

"Q. Will you write for me the last line of the first book of the Aeneid?"

"A. Wait,—Omnibus errantum terris fluitibus aestat."

(This was right.)

Q. Quite so, but I might have known it. Can you go to the bookcase, take the last book but one on the second shelf and read me the last paragraph of the ninety-fourth page? I have not seen it. I do not even know its name."

"A. 'I will surely prove by a short historical narrative that popery is a novelty, and has gradually arisen or sprang up, since the primitive and pure time of Christianity, not only since the apostolic age, but even since the lamentable union of Kirk and State by Constantine.'"

(The passage was accurate except the substitution of "narrative" for "account.")

"Q. How came I to pick upon so appropriate a sentence?"

"A. I know not, my friend. It was by coincidence. The word was changed by error. I knew it when it was done, but I would not change."

"Q. How do you read? You write by fits and starts?"

"A. I write what I remember, and then I went for more. It is a special effort to read, and useful only as a test. We can read only when conditions are good. We will read once again and then write and impress you of the book. 'Pope is the last great writer of that school of poetry, the poetry of the intellect, or rather of the intellect mingled with the fancy.' That is truly written. Go and take a book called Poetry, Romance and Rhetoric. It will open at page for you. Take it and recognize our power, and the permission which the great and good God gives us to show you of our power over matter. To him be glory. Amen.'"

"The book opened at page 145, and there was the quotation perfectly true. I had not seen the book before; certainly had no idea of its contents."

It is to be observed that Stainton-Moses, from whom this record was copied by Mr. Myers, was one of the most sensitive mediums, and brought the limit of erudition, devotion and honesty to his investigations. He sacrificed his position as professor in the London University to his zeal for the cause. His sincerity and integrity was never called in question by even opposers, and he stood alone in his wonderful psychic powers.

A. C. S., Jamestown.—Q. Can the blind see spirits clairvoyantly, and are they blind after passing into the other life?

A.—As spirits see by spiritual vision, even the organic destruction of the physical eyes would have no influence on their spiritual sight. Clairvoyance of the highest order is often observed among the blind. A spiritual being cannot be blind in the sense of physical blindness. When, however, they are susceptible to impressions remaining fixed and solitary, without receiving a thought from those around and above them, they are like blind who receive no ray of light.

Mr. J. Nickenhead.—Q. Does Nature ever err?

A.—If failure is the meaning of erring, Nature makes many errors, and success comes after many futile attempts. For every perfect apple how many blighted blossoms, gnarly fruit, and immature fruit dropped from the branches! How many deformed and mentally weak children, for the one that matures in the fullness of physical and intellectual capacity. To human understanding, the storm that destroys, the lightning that rends, are counted as mistakes in the order of the world; but in a wider view the end is attained, and these failures are manifestations of antagonizing forces which are thereby brought into harmony.

Q.—Is tobacco ever beneficial? Is it ever beneficial to health?

A.—It would be difficult for the most strenuous advocate of the use of tobacco to give an instance of the usefulness of the habit of using it, for it is not craved nor tolerated until the habit is formed, and will, when taken, produce deathly sickness. It contains one of the most virulent poisons, which, until the system becomes habituated to it, stimulates to destroy. When the habit has been formed, tobacco, by arresting the organic functions, prevents waste, and thus enables want of food to be longer borne. But this is always at the expense of reserved strength. Of itself it is not the least benefit as a food in building up the body or repairing waste tissue. When the habit is formed it means that the system has become adjusted to the action of the nicotine absorbed by chewing or smoking, and ceases active resistance. It may be inferred that the constant use of tobacco, if not excessive, would be less injurious than occasional indulgence. Its use is unnecessary, and probably in all cases health would be better without it, for it may be taken as a rule that no poisonous substance—mineral, vegetable or animal—can be taken into the system without injury. The best that can be said of the use of tobacco is that it is a luxurious habit which, when not carried to excess, is not as injurious as morphine or alcohol.

Q.—What prevents water from overflowing when its level is higher than the edge of the vessel containing it?

A.—It is the greater attraction of the water for itself, and the level may be raised above the edge of the vessel to a height equivalent to this attraction. It is the same force that rounds the dewdrop.

Q.—Do the bodies of those killed by lightning present any difference in appearance from those dying of disease?

A.—Not unless burned by the stroke. Death may with such instantaneousness that the blood remains in the capillaries, and the flesh then has the appearance that such blood saturation gives. An electric shock may be so severe that every cell will be ruptured and the body burst into flame. In such cases it is not to be expected that the aspect will be the same as when a peaceful death occurs.

THE BRAIN CELLS.

Some Excellent Suggestions as to Their Cultivation.

Get good and clever by growing the right brain cells in Prof. Gates' human garden. Prof. Gates says that brain cells can be generated by stimulation of their particular phrenological area. He claims that by this system both the good and the bad may be controlled. His first experiments were with animals, to which he gave extraordinary and excessive training in mental faculty, that is, seeing and hearing, and in depriving other animals identical in age and breed of the opportunity to use that faculty. He then killed both classes of animals and examined their brains and found a marked structural difference had been caused by excessive mental activity as compared with the absence thereof. He says that children ordinarily develop less than ten per cent of the cells in their brain area and many more cells can be put into the fallow parts, so improving the brain and increasing the power of the mind. He says he has succeeded in entirely eliminating vicious tendencies from children with dispositions toward cruelty, stealing or anger. This he does by creating a greater number of opposite or moral memories as impressions and keeping them active till the old structures disappear; in fact, crowding them out as the planting of certain kinds of grass in the soil will drive out and supersede the weeds. He says that alcoholism and derangement of the digestive functions may be overcome by his process of creating numerous moral cells which are sensitive and harmonizing. Give people more mind, he says, and all undertakings will be ameliorated and better results accomplished. Give them more moral minds and the evils of society gradually disappear.

Hindu Spiritualism

The Aim and Scope of Modern Spiritualism, as Set Forth in the Hindu Spiritual Magazine of Calcutta, India, Giving Many Very Interesting Particulars.

"A CHILD WAS BORN IN 1485 OF BRAHMINICAL PARENTS, IN THE CITY OF NADIA, WHICH IS 70 MILES NORTH OF CALCUTTA. HE FLOURISHED IN THE WORLD FOR 48 YEARS. HIS SAYINGS AND DOINGS WERE RECORDED BY HIS CONTEMPORARIES AND FOLLOWERS TO THE MINUTEST DETAILS, SO THAT WE CAN ASCERTAIN EVEN NOW HE LIVED, AND WHAT HE SAID AND WHAT HE DID. THIS RECORD WAS NOT KEPT BY ONE OR TWO CONTEMPORARY AUTHORS, BUT BY HUNDREDS, INDEPENDENTLY OF ONE ANOTHER. THE LIFE OF JESUS IS FOUND TO BE RECORDED BY FOUR OF HIS FOLLOWERS, BUT THAT OF THE BRAHMIN, WHOSE REMARKABLE ACHIEVEMENTS WE ARE GOING TO DESCRIBE, BY MANY HUNDREDS OF MEN, MANY OF WHOM WERE THE MOST LEARNED OF THOSE DAYS—HIS IMMEDIATE FOLLOWERS, FRIENDS AND COMPANIONS. IT IS FOR THIS REASON THAT NO REASONABLE AND HONEST MAN CAN HAVE ANY DOUBT AS TO FACTS RELATED IN CONNECTION WITH THE OBJECT OF OUR SKETCH, WHICH ARE BASED ON WRITINGS OF SUCH MEN."

We have now to see how the light came to the public in India in 1485. The art and science of Yoga were discovered by Kapila. The discovery was so important that the Hindus considered him a minor incarnation of the Deity. This Yoga disclosed to mankind the hidden capacities of the soul and the way to develop them. This science and art was latterly developed by Patanjali. But the process of Yoga was so difficult that none but the highest could hope to practice it with success.

This Yoga was followed in India by Tantra, which has, in some respects, great similarity to Spiritualism in America. Men and women sat at night to invoke spirits and also to practice hypnotism and other cognate sciences. They sat in "chakra," which means a "circle." The medium of this circle was called the "patra." This "patra" or the "adhar" would be possessed by spirits, or develop clairvoyance and other occult powers.

Thus the person possessed, if he developed clairvoyance, which was called "dibya-chakshu," could diagnose diseases, discover hidden or lost articles. Sometimes this "patra" or medium held converse with invisible intelligences; sometimes he would write and sometimes speak, as they do in the West in spiritual seances. Unfortunately no attempt was made to open comunications with the dead or inquire into the conditions of the spiritual world in a systematic manner. And even if this were done, no record was kept. The fact is, India, being desolated by conquering hordes, the people had scarcely time to pay any attention to such subjects.

These "chakras" or circles were held generally to serve petty purposes. Thus the spirits were asked how to convert base metal into gold, how to discover hidden treasure, how to cure incurable diseases, and so forth. So usually the lowest spirits came to these circles. Sometimes, of course, the highest spirits also came, and then the medium usually became the founder of a new religious sect. It was thus that innumerable sects were founded in India. It was also in this manner that sects were formed in Christian and Mohammedan countries. The Protestants, the Shakers, the Methodists, the Quakers, etc., were founded in this manner under spiritual guidance. But all these Tantric and other seances were held in the utmost secrecy and the public had no access to them.

We shall now show how the gates were thrown open in India in 1485 and heaven was brought face to face with public gaze.

A child was born in 1485 of Brahminical parents, in the city of Nadia, which is 70 miles north of Calcutta. He flourished in this world for 48 years. His sayings and doings were recorded by his contemporaries and followers to the minutest details. So that we can ascertain even now how he lived, and what he said and what he did. This record was not kept by one or two contemporary authors, but by hundreds, independently of one another. The life of Jesus is found to be recorded by four of his followers, but that of the Brahmin, whose remarkable achievements we are going to describe, by many hundreds of men, many of whom were the most learned in those days—his immediate followers, friends and companions. It is for this reason that no reasonable and honest man can have any doubt as to facts related in connection with the object of our sketch, which are based on the writings of such men.

The Brahmin was full twelve months in the womb! So he was born a well-developed child, and was always in health. Once only he was ill of fever, which, however, was got rid of without any treatment. Physically he was considered a perfect being. He was the fairest, strongest, tallest and the most beautiful of all men that were born in this sphere.

Almost from the day of his birth he was seen to be accompanied by diverse supernatural incidents. Thus he was seen surrounded by illuminated figures at night. This frightened his mother, but she gradually became used to such supernatural occurrences. He had other special characteristics which marked him out from other children. Thus whoever took him in his lap felt a thrill of pleasure pervading his or her whole system. So his mother had very little opportunity of carrying him in her lap. We quote the following from his life:

"The boy, it is true, was human in form, but he was not, as has been said before, quite like other children. A complexion resembling molten gold, is a poet's creation, but in the case of the boy it proved to be a reality. The palms of his hands and the soles of his feet were, as it were, painted with fresh vermillion. When he ran about, it seemed as if blood was oozing out of the soles of his feet. His features were beautifully formed. The contour of his body was simply perfect. The movement of every limb, the glance of his eyes, his smile and his speech were all equally graceful. His fascinating face, free from the slightest defect, was, as it were, the master-work of a sculptor of the highest genius. His lips were ruddy like the ripe bimba fruit, but his eyes were perhaps more lovely than any other part of his body. His eyes elongated as the petals of a lotus, slightly tinged with red, seemed as if 'moist with lotus honey.' Every one who looked at the child felt an attraction toward him, and instinctively asked within himself: 'Is he a human child, or a child of the Gods, fallen from heaven?'

"There was another charm possessed by the child which made any one that caressed him feel a thrill of joy passing through his frame. On this account anyone who happened to take him in his or her arms, was unwilling to set him down again. His mother, therefore, was allowed but limited opportunities of enjoying the pleasure of keeping the boy in her arms.

"Besides, from the time of the child's birth, his father (Jagannath), his mother (Sachee), and other near relatives began to witness many supernatural incidents. While the boy slept, something like a moon was now and then seen shining on his breast. Sometimes he was seen enveloped with a light which looked like lightning or electricity. Sometimes Sachee would see the room filled with luminous figures, and in her alarm would call her husband."

This wonderful child was thus subjected to a course of discipline by unseen and unrecognized intelligences, so as to fit him to be able to act as a postoffice between this and the other world. He frequently entered into a trance state even when a child of five. Sometimes he would be found in a deathlike swoon; and these symptoms no doubt frightened his parents. But they gradually became used to them. When in this state of trance, though only a young child of only four or five, he would utter words of the highest wisdom. Sometimes in this state he would personate others. When asked in his normal state why he had spoken like another man, he would say that he remembered nothing. "I was sleeping," he would say, "and dreamt something and possibly described what I saw in my dream." It was in this manner he was prepared to act the part of the most powerful psychic that ever came into this world.

It seemed that some outside influences were acquiring an authority over him, so that he was gradually losing control over his own body, his own senses, nay, over his very soul. Let us here describe how these influences affected him. His chroniclers have left a minute and vivid description of how he was being prepared to receive the highest truths from the other world, and to convey them to mankind below. He is playing as a child, but suddenly he takes to weeping and weeps for hours together. When he weeps, sometimes he cannot assign any cause for his weeping. Sometimes he tries to explain himself but cannot; and sometimes he tells his companions that he is weeping because God has forsaken him. The weeping is accompanied by floods of tears, which actually make the earth muddy where they fall. Tears gush from his eyes as water from a fountain. This is no figurative description.

The mood changes and he begins to laugh, and he laughs in this way for an hour. The weeping makes his companions weep with him, and the laughter makes them laugh. Sometimes he cannot, or at least does not, explain the cause of his laughing; sometimes he does, to the effect that it is impossible for the loving Lord to leave him, for he has chained him to his heart.

It soon came to be perceived that if one symptom appeared, the opposite was sure to follow. For instance, when there was weeping, laughter was sure to be the next manifestation, and when there was laughter, weeping was sure to follow. Not that one was to follow the other immediately as a matter of course; but it was clearly established that if a strange symptom manifested itself one day, a contrary one was sure to appear sooner or later. Thus, laughter followed weeping, and vice versa. Sweating was one of the symptoms which sometimes occurred as a result of the influence. It was, however, so very unusual that it created wonder.

Then again, his body would become dry and hot to such an extent that even when big jars of water were emptied thereon, its pores absorbed it all instantly. There was thus an ebb and flow of water through the skin. Sometimes there was a violent shivering and a chattering of the teeth, and sometimes the body became so rigid that it seemed to be made of a single piece of some unyielding material.

Sometimes breathing was suspended altogether, and sometimes it became so strong that it seemed that a storm was blowing, and those who sat before him had to move aside to give it passage, so violent was the shock they received.

Sometimes his body became so heavy that it could be lifted only with great difficulty, and sometimes it became so light that each of his companions, weak or strong, could in turn take him up in his arms. Indeed, his body became so light that it was seen to float in the air.

It was also seen that though he was kept confined in a room, he was brought out when in a trance state, the doors of the room remaining shut. Indeed, sometimes he was brought out in this manner when the room itself was surrounded by a separate wall, too high for any man to cross.

Sometimes he formed his body into a circle by bringing his feet in touch with his head and turned round and round like a wheel. Sometimes his body was elongated so that it was found to be from 7½ to 10½ feet in length. Sometimes his limbs were drawn within his body, and he looked like a tortoise. Sometimes there was so violent a hiccough that he became quite restless on that account. Sometimes his bright countenance became pale or colorless, or sometimes red or sometimes dark. Sometimes the color of his eyes changed; indeed, sometimes they exhibited two different tints. Sometimes the hair stood on end all over his body, with plumlike pimples at their roots, from which oozed blood.

In the above we have given some account of the external changes that were brought about in this person by this influence. But these external symptoms were also accompanied by still more extraordinary internal developments. Indeed, his soul was day by day drawn toward God, and gradually the highest angels—nay, a Being higher than the highest angels, manifested Himself through him!

Now remember what we said before. Spiritualism teaches us that man is immortal, but every one would come to know this truth after death. We are, therefore, more vitally interested in knowing how to make this immortal life happy. This defect of Spiritualism was realized by Richard Hodgson when he was dead, to whom Spiritualism is indebted more than to most men. Dr. Hodgson, in a communication to Professor Hyslop, wishes "he had studied the spiritual side of his investigations as closely as the scientific." This, what Hodgson calls the spiritual side of Spiritualism, was revealed to mankind by this Prophet of Nadia, an account of whose life we are now giving.

THE PATHWAY of the Human Spirit, or the Pathway of the Spirit Traced, by Dr. J. M. Peebles.

Did it pre-exist and does it reincarnate again into mortal life? When did it enter the body? What is its form—how does it relate to the soul body? Can it leave the human body and return again? Can it live in and control another mortal body? These questions and many others are asked and answered by the Doctor in this, his latest book, of two hundred pages. Price 75 cents; postage 12 cents.

Definitions of Terms.

A Matter of Vital Importance to Spiritualists.

At the last Convention of the National Spiritualists' Association, held in Chicago, in October, 1906, President Harrison D. Barrett appointed a Committee on "Definitions of Terms used in Spiritualism," to-wit: Charles R. Schirm (Chairman), George W. Kates, W. A. Willing, Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley and Miss Elizabeth Harlow. This committee was appointed to obtain from as many able sources as possible, definitions of terms, carefully digest them, and report to the coming convention the result of its labors. For this purpose it was authorized to publish such data as it desired in order to give the opportunity for making suggestions to persons not members of the committee, and in a manner to prepare those who will be delegates to the next convention to act upon the report.

Mr. Barrett turned over to the chairman communications on the subject from Andrew Jackson Davis, Dr. G. W. Brown, Hon. A. H. Dailey, Dr. George A. Fuller, Mrs. Helen L. P. Russegue, and Rev. Cora L. V. Richmond, and wherever their definitions are used, proper credit will be given. Copies of these communications were sent to each member of the committee with suggestions of a plan for prosecuting the work, but up to this time only two of the committee have made reply. As the time for the next Convention is drawing near, I have deemed it proper to place before Spiritualists the data in hand.

The importance of this work can not be overestimated and it should not be hurriedly done. In a number of instances, judges sitting in cases involving Spiritualism have asked for definitions of terms; and yet, it seems to me, we have not yet reached that stage where we can reduce these definitions to rigid form. By way of suggestion, I will say, that the entire data should be published in pamphlet form for general distribution, leaving for a later day, after thorough consideration, the difficult task of forming such definitions as we would be willing to rely upon under all circumstances. This plan, I think, will largely meet the demands of the courts and will permit us to take advantage of any form of definition, just as the right shade of meaning may be selected from the various definitions of words given in the dictionary.

The terms thus far presented for consideration are: Clairvoyance, Clairaudience, independent writing, automatic writing, mediumship, trance and inspirational speaking. We will begin with definitions of clairvoyance.

Definitions of Clairvoyance.

1. "According to our definition, "Clear Seeing, or Spirit Vision," while yet in human form, is the opening of the one faculty of the spirit that takes the place of all sensation, i. e., perception. This, in our view, is always the result of the action of a spirit outside of the human form who produces upon the spiritually sensitized brain the impression of sight. Evidently there is no science of spiritual optics. The physical senses are but so many divisions of faculty, perception; the blind perceives through touch and hearing and the other avenues of sensation; when these are also closed the perception will still find a way. Spirit influence awakens and sets in action the perception of the spirit, and it takes the form of vision. In other words, it reproduces an impression upon the sensorium in the form of sight. It is quite certain that the impression of sight in the clairvoyant is not actual optical vision, but a more real perception that takes the form of vision."—Rev. Cora L. V. Richmond, A. A. Ballou, spirit influencing.

2. "Clear Seeing: a sensitive state of all degrees of acuteness, from that where the personality predominates and modifies the perception, to that where the mind is independent of the physical body and its surroundings, and is in direct contact with superior intelligences. The last phase of clairvoyance is often seen in the dying, death being the separation of the spirit from the body."—Hudson Tuttle's Glossary of Terms Pertaining to Spiritualism and Psychic Science," quoted by Dr. George A. Fuller.

3. "Clear seeing, or seeing with the spirit eye; the indestructible part of the physical eye. An exercise of the spirit function of the physical eye."—Rev. Geo. W. Kates.

4. "Clairvoyance is from and of the soul—not of the spirit. For soul is an individualized chemical unit (an ultimate body) surrounding and protecting the spirit. Soul sees by the eyes of perception. Soul is often deaf and dumb, or it may by growth become clairvoyant, and also, it may become blind by means of disease impairing the outer organization. Soul is a growth of evolution. It acts by means of the bodily senses and through all organs and parts of the physical body.—Letter of Andrew Jackson Davis.

5. (a) "It is the faculty or power, possessed by certain sensitive persons, of seeing or perceiving, as though visually, forms and scenes invisible to others."

(b) "Soul, or spiritual perception of scenes and conditions, invisible to the physical sense of sight, hence, usually without use of the organs of sight, though not necessarily so."

(c) "It is a power of perceiving, exercised by certain sensitives, upon special occasions, when the sub-conscious mind rises above the threshold of mental consciousness."

(d) "The faculty of seeing distant objects, or objects regarded as on another plane of existence, invisible to organs of sight."

(e) "Clairvoyance is a term commonly applied to a function exercised by sensitive persons denominated mediums, phychics, seers, and prophets—who possess the power of seeing hearing and perceiving, without the use of the ordinary senses or in combination with them."

(f) "Clairvoyance is synonymous with telaesthesis, when applied to the discerning of distant objects, and is confounded with telepathy, when applied to distant scenes and conditions connected with the contact of the mind of distant or absent personality."—Letter of Hon. A. H. Dailey.

6. "It is generally impossible to deal exclusively with any single phase of psychical experience; it often happens that clairvoyance and telepathy are practically inseparable, * * * * * Experimenters in telepathy should resolve to keep their minds concentrated on some clear and definite topic of mutual interest, as by so doing they are certain to secure satisfactory evidences of the transference or transmission of mental pictures."—W. J. Colville in Sunflower, August 10, 1907, quoted from "Light;"

7 a) "The ability to see or discern objects not within reach of the eye under normal conditions, as in a trance, claimed to be possessed by some persons in the mesmeric trance state."

(b) "Clairvoyance is a natural trance condition as opposed to mesmerism or hypnotism which is induced—by artificial or external means."—Standard Dictionary, Vol. I, p. 347. 1902.

8. "A power attributed to persons in a mesmeric state by which they are supposed to discern objects concealed from sight and to see what is happening at a distance."—Century Dic. & Cyc. Vol. 2, P. 1023.

9. (a) "Under this form of mediumship spiritual intelligences who understand the process are able to control the nervous organism of the eye through which impressions are conveyed to the consciousness of the medium. By this method of operation they are able to impress upon the consciousness of the medium whatever picture or image they desire."

(b) "Or, they may, in a higher form of clairvoyance, produce a condition which opens, for the time being, a direct channel between the spiritual world and the consciousness of the medium. In the latter case the medium unconsciously employs the spiritual sensory organs of sight. He thus sees whatever there is to be seen upon the spiritual plane within the immediate range of his spiritual vision.—The Great Psychological Crime, p. 155.

10. "The eye of the soul is independent of the eye of the corporeal body. * * * * * * When the body is thrown into a magnetic slumber, so deep, indeed, that the murderous roaring of a battle field could not disturb it, then the spirit's beautiful, sun-lit eyes can contemplate very distant localities as though they were present; and its gentle eyes can also fix their observation distinctly upon objects, persons and facts hundreds of leagues away, with all the accuracy and objectivity natural to the bodily vision. * * * "The clairvoyant vision is positive, not delusive like a sleeper's dream. Thus it has been proved repeatedly to the medical world, that the physical organs of sight are not always necessary to accurate seeing. * * * * * * * *

"The cerebral organization is not the sole agent of intellectual phenomena, but, positively, it is demonstrated that the various physical organs are simply containing vessels and viaducts for the development and flow of man's mental capabilities."—The Great Harmonia, Vol. 5, pp. 319 & 330, by Andrew Jackson Davis.

11. "In subjective clairvoyance, where mediums perceive the spirits, as you speak of it, they do not see them in the sense that you see objectively; the external organs of sight are excluded in this operation of clairvoyance. It is a utilization of the interior centers of the visional tract upon which it depends. Thus if I, as a controlling intelligence, have a desire to produce a scene in a locality where the medium has never been, then it would be simply necessary that I should have sufficient wisdom to manipulate or energize the neurotic centers at the terminus of the optic nerve so as to produce the same result, the vibratory impress upon those centers which would have been produced had the medium actually observed the scene. In the latter case the vibrations of light would have operated upon the external organ, the vibration would have been carried through the optic nerve and the consciousness of sight would have resulted; but, in subjective clairvoyance, as I have shown, the same result is accomplished by a different process. Thus a spirit intelligence can impress with accuracy upon the consciousness of the medium scenes at a distance, externalized in the brain of the medium by the method to which I referred."—Trance Lecture of Oscar A. Edgerly on Mediumship, Dr. Chalmers, the spirit controlling.

12. "Clairvoyance, n. (Fr.) Literally, clear-sightedness; a power attributed to persons in a mesmeric state, of discerning objects which are not present to the senses."—Webster's Dic., p. 209, 1852.

13. "A faculty of power claimed to be possessed by some persons while under the influence of mesmerism. By it the clairvoyant claims to be able to see mentally things concealed from sight, to see and describe things happening at a distance, and to discover things hidden."—Universal Dic. of the English Language, Vol. 1, p. 1032, 1898.

14. "The alleged ability (in certain states) to see things not normally visible; the pretended ability to see the internal organs of a patient, and thus diagnosticate his ailments."—Gould's Illustrated Dic. of Medicine, p. 301, 1903.

15. "In the state termed clairvoyance, or clear-seeing, there is no action of the will; there is no thought; there is no evidence that the life follows the spirit; yet the spirit is away across the wide ocean; the spirit is in the depths of the captor's dungeon; the spirit is in the cloudy region, far off in space; it is away among the shining stars, in the land of souls, in that remote realm where nothing of flesh and blood can enter. The spirit is far away, and yet the life is present. And so is the body; still the silver cord is not loosened; still the golden bowl is not broken."

"Into the state of catalepsy, or trance, or even in the condition you term abstraction, when the thought is far away, mingling with the sweet home scenes, the spirit does not act

THE SON OFFICIATES AT THE FUNERAL OF HIS FATHER.

No minister of the gospel stood at the bier of the late Rev. Edward F. Strickland during the funeral services at Benton Harbor, Mich. Instead, short services were conducted by Edward F. Strickland, Jr., the only son. The deceased was an interested reader of The Progressive Thinker.

Mr. Strickland prefaced his remarks with tender references to the noble life and character of his dead parent. His conclusion was a recitation of a poem from the pen of Dr. Strickland, written some years ago and entitled "How I Should Like to Die."

Address of Mr. Strickland.

Friends and neighbors, the great change that faces all hath come to him whom we loved—the head and the heart of our household.

A great heart is still, a kind eye is closed, a kindlier voice is silent evermore. A noble mind has sunk to rest. The silence and the night hath come that giveth our beloved sleep.

Fourscore years and nearly ten he was of this world, and now a soul long seeking may have found its elysium.

This we feel and know, that with him, as with all the countless numbers of earth's children, who have come to abide a little time upon her bosom, and then to sink again upon that bosom encircled by the everlasting arms of the great mother—Nature the omnipotent; Nature, who gave, and Nature who taketh away, it must be well.

She doeth all things well, and we who have loved and lost do not rebel, indulge no vain repinings.

But this solace and recompense remains—the memory, the dear memory of a noble life; a life loyal always to its highest conception of truth and right. A kindly nature, a brave spirit that spake and prayed, and loved and lived for man, until old age gave him surcease from strife, asylum with those he had cherished and held together in the fond bond of family solidarity, and who in return for this fatherhood, and love, in his declining years, endeavored to give peace and comfort, and to assuage the one great grief, that oft filled his heart with anguish—the virtual loss of the one precious personal influence that more than any other filled his life and blessed it with a fealty steadfast, helpful and true.

Over 50 years ago ordained a Baptist minister, he for many long years served or sought truth in that church. But truth belongs to no church, is clothed in rags of credular dogma in all of them, and so through the Congregational and Unitarian pulpits, the Spiritualists and free religious rostrums — the Christian Science and Metaphysical Schools of thought he spoke and taught the highest truth he knew, the most encouraging and hopeful thought of which he was capable—until at last, we know that with the soul emancipated, he came to stand, a member of that great church, that embraces all of humanity in its starlit aisles; "that claims the great and good of every race and clime; and finds with joy the grain of gold in every creed, that floods with light and love the germs of good in every soul."

To us who loved and honored, who stood by his side as boy and man, who sustained a sometimes weary though never faltering spirit, this is our devout memory, our sweetest benison, that though the years were ofttimes filled with perplexity, with suffering, with sorow—for the roadway of the free is never a primrose path, men's prejudices are bitter, their conservatism pitiful, their ignorance dense, still could he write his own and our creed,

Our Brethren, All Mankind.

"Bound to no sect, to no creed confined;
Our home the world; our brethren all mankind.
Do right; do good; be just and kind to all;
Exalt the truth, though every ism fall."

Many years ago when he gave utterance to this thought and soul longings in verse more often than in later years, there came from his pen some lines of singular beauty and pathos:

"How Should I Wish to Die."

How should I wish to die? Oh! like
The wearied child that sinks to rest,
And in its slumbers, the dreams
Of happy hours alone obtrude Themselves. And as it wakes again to life,
Unmindful of those visions that
Charmed him in his sleeping hours,
Finds brightest glories in Returning consciousness.

How should I wish to die? Like the Wayworn traveler, drawing near the home
He hath left so long, and in Whose journey he hath encountered
Much of misery—so much
That his weary soul clings not to
The remembrance of it. Whose path
Uncherished by a single smile, so
Full of woe, that he fain would rest.

How should I wish to die? With hope,
With calmness and with resignation.
With hope my life in another sphere
May be more like that which I have Pictured in the dreamings of past years;
With calmness, that I may be prepared
To meet the change—how great so'er
it may be;
With fortitude and peace that now I feel;
With resignation, that I may wander
On through that course the soul must Tread in life eternal, to that land where
The weary are at rest.

How should I wish to die? Like one
Who parts with human life as a worn-out gift—
Resign it as a useless thing
That has exhausted all life's virtue to sustain it;
And for this service, traitor-like, deserts when old
And grown too feeble even to wish a longer sojourn—
Useless in itself, valueless to all;
and as
Each tender bond is severed, and the Immortal essence—the soul—is at length
Unbound! And like the 'scaped bird
From its prison house, mounts up
To greet the great Ruler of Space as Something near akin to God himself.

How should I wish to die Peacefully.
To see around my bed those few that Loved me in the world; to feel their Kisses upon my lips and their breath
Fanning my brow, as they Bend their heads once more to bless me.
To feel their hands within mine own,
And the soft pressure of their fingers
Telling me more than a thousand tongues
That they love me still—yes, love me still.

How should I wish to die? Like one
Who hath naught to live for—like one
Who tasted deeply the bitter of the cup
And liked it not. Like one
Who found not in the life he resigns-
so willingly
Those hundred ties that bind
The heart to life; like one who Finds himself alone in a world unheeded,
Unknown, out of place. One who Hath not the power or the will
To succumb to the evils that Bind man to man in one common worldly
Interest. Therefore being so isolated,
He would fain return to his soul's
Home; to that place where The soul's own divine reasoning builds
For itself an eternal home. There! yes,
'Tis thus I would die, and live there
Forever and ever and ever.

It is with a sense of devout satisfaction, a joy—a holy joy I may term it, that we feel that measurably near the wishes so beautifully expressed in these lines he should have approached the valley of the shadow that closes in upon every life journey, and though we may not see, we, too, shall follow where midst the encircling gloom hope may point a star, and faith alone may hear the flutter of a wing.

SAW AND HEARD SPIRITS.

A Brief Outline of My Spiritual Experience.

When I was about eight years of age, while I was eating my breakfast, my mother, oldest sister and a visiting neighbor were seated at the table talking, having finished their breakfast. I am quite sure it was the visitor who made this remark: "I feel so sorry for Mrs. Daisy, her little girl died and is to be buried to-day. They say Mrs. Daisy is almost crazed with grief." After breakfast, I remember that I was in the old barnyard south of the house; later I see myself entering the yard and slowly walking toward the house.

When I was about midway between the house and the yard gate, I was suddenly stopped, and something or somebody spoke to me as plainly as I was ever spoken to in my life, saying, "That is your little wife that is being buried to-day." I remember that I was startled for a moment or two, for I thought of the girl that had been spoken of at the table. I can see myself as a little boy as plainly as if it were yesterday. I threw up my hands, waved them and exclaimed, "Hah, what do I want with a little wife?" All this experience passed out of my mind to be brought back forty years later.

Having an intense desire to know the truth regarding a conscious existence of the individuality after the change called death, I sought in literature of varied kinds, until I finally concluded that I might possibly in following certain hints that I had gleaned, acquire the power that would be sufficient to convince me beyond the peradventure of a doubt. For many years I continued to seek, until at last I was rewarded in such a positive way that I can affirm in all positiveness that we do live after the final dissolution of the physical organization. I have seen, I have heard, and I have talked with those whose earthly bodies had been mouldering in the tomb for many years. Eight years ago while I was resting in my bed I saw at my side two shadowy forms. I could hear mumbling voices, and I requested that I be given clairvoyance and clairaudience, which was done. It was then I heard my mother's voice. I knew it was her voice, for I had heard it many thousands of times from infancy to manhood, and could not be deceived. These were the words she said to me: "Lomie, why don't you pray to Jesus?"

I answered: "Mother, I would; there is not a soul in Aberdeen who would not more gladly or willingly pray to Jesus, that myself; but I have become almost thoroughly convinced that no such personality as the Jesus Christ of the Bible ever had an existence on this earth."

I paused, expecting my mother to speak, but she did not at that time. (Later on she did speak of family affairs).

I then turned my thoughts to the shadowy form at my right and asked: "What do you know of Jesus Christ of the Bible?" I was answered by a woman's voice, pleasant, kindly and loving. She said: "We don't know anything about him; we have never seen him."

A few minutes later I asked the shadowy forms if they could not give me some other demonstration. The simple answer was, "We don't know; we will try." The two forms raised up and stood against the wall at my right. They whirled around and around each other for perhaps a minute or two, when one of them became clothed in beautiful white light (such light fairly resembling that as may be seen in the sheen of silvery moonlight spread over a beautiful landscape). The other by the side of the one in light remained in shadow.

The one clothed in light held a rod in her hand, about twenty inches or two feet in length (the rod seemed to be made of some very dark wood, perfectly smooth throughout). She (I say "she," for the appearance was that of a woman) gathered the light on the end of the rod and sprinkled all over me. I would hold up my hand, she would sprinkle the light on it; but when I undertook to take hold of the rod, she would lift it up out of my reach, smiling all the time. I called my brother Sile, who was sleeping in an adjoining room with cousin Dick Campbell.

I said: "Sile, come here; mother is here and has been talking to me." I called him three or four times; he would not come. I got up out of my bed, went into his room and said: "Sile, I tell you, mother is here and has been talking to me and there is a beautiful angel clothed in light; come and see."

He grumblingly arose, stepped in front of me and entered the room where I had been. His first words were, "I don't see anything." I said to him, "Right here on the wall." He then said: "Well, I don't see anything; I want to sleep."

Immediately there was impressed on my brain this very plain statement: "It was you who asked for your ears to be opened and your ears to be unstopped; how can he see or hear?" (That was certainly plain enough.)

While Sile and I were in bed together, the one in light would gather the light on the rod, reach over him and sprinkle the light over me. I remained for several minutes, when I concluded I would go and get in bed with cousin Dick. Accordingly I got up for the second time and got in bed with Dick. After a few minutes I looked up and by my surgical chair there the party stood gathering the light on the rod and sprinkling it on me. After several minutes I said to myself, "Well, I can't get away from them, I shall go back," which I did, and lay down with Sile again, the sprinkling of the light continuing as before. After a time I requested Sile to go into his own room. I wished to be alone. He complied. I tried to get the one in light to talk to me, but she either could not or would not. Having witnessed the phenomena for a half or three-quarters of an hour, I said, "Well, that will do," and turned my head to one side for a few seconds, looked back and they were gone. I have never seen the phenomena since.

While lying in bed thinking about what I had seen, I heard a man's voice, one I had never heard before, saying, "Doctor, do you know Annie?"

I answered "No," and then asked, "Annie who?" The voice answered, "Annie Daisy."

In a short time I again heard the pleasant, kindly, loving, woman's voice again. It said, "I am Annie Daisy. I died when I was four years old. I have been with you for over thirty years. I am your twin soul. I love you so much—oh, you don't know how much. Come out and be with me." She asked me several times. I refused, but she persisted. I then said, "I have a little girl in Indiana whom I must do for." She then said, "Let me take you to see Georgia." This request was made several times, and as often refused by me. Finally I said, "How long will it take?" She answered, "Five minutes." I hesitated, was at the point to consent, but was a little too wary, became cowardly and would not consent, for which I have been sorry ever since.

Twenty-four hours after the above occurrence I was out of the body and was seen by my brother Siles. On the third day of my experiences I was in my office thinking the occurrence over. While thus thinking, I requested the one who had told me, "I am your twin soul; I have been with you for over thirty years," to come and remain with me, which request she complied with; and I have been positively conscious of her presence every day since.

In my talk with mother, reference was made to Jesus Christ. Don't think for one moment that I deny his existence.

Spiritualism has taught me this religion (if it can be called a religion): Be honest, retain pure thoughts, pure aspirations and pure desires.

Mediumship Should Not Be Used for Selfish Gain.

To the Editor:—So much has been said about Spiritualism, and so many people are trying to promote it, that I would like to know if they are the ones who think it were not for them it would perish from the face of the earth.

I write thus to express certain lines of thought and bring confidence to sorrowing ones. Spiritualism is a truth, but this truth will not grow, if we use it for personal or commercial use.

Yes, Spiritualism is going to have a few more hard knocks, and it must be so till people learn that it can't flourish on a business basis. No Spiritualist should use his or her mediumistic powers for selfish gain.

To leave nothing, to give all and ask nothing in return, is the highest philosophy. All great seers and sages of the past were of such, and they got power, wisdom, glory, and truths untold, but being in harmony with the Infinite, the Infinite was at their command. Mediums should be very careful, and not practice mediumship only to do good; then they will be blessed.

with the body; still the life is there."—Lecture of Emma Hardinge Britten on "Spirit, its Origin and Destiny," delivered in Chicago, Ill., October 28, 1860.

16. "A power of perceiving objects however covered or remote, without the use of eyes; said to be communicated to a person under the influence of animal magnetism or mesmerism."—Worcester's Dic. p. 248, 2nd. ed., 1888.

17. "A power attributed to persons in a mesmeric state, of discerning objects not perceptible by the senses."—Webster's Dic., 1881.

Having before me the foregoing definitions, I have attempted to formulate a definition of clairvoyance which I here insert for what it may be worth.

18. Clairvoyance literally means, clear seeing; but in Spiritualism it has a technical meaning and may be either objective or subjective:

(a) Subjective clairvoyance is that psychic power or function of seeing, objectively, by and through the spiritual sensorium of sight which pervades the physical mechanism of vision, spiritual beings and things. A few persons are born with this power; in some it is developed and in others it has but a casual quickening. Its extent is governed by the rate of vibration under which it operates; thus, one clairvoyant may see spiritual things which to another may be invisible, because of the degree of difference in the intensity of the power.

(b) Subjective clairvoyance is that psychic condition of a person which enables spirit intelligences to impress or photograph upon the brain of that person, at will, pictures and images which are seen as visions by that person, without the aid of the physical eye. These pictures and images may be of things spiritual or material, past or present, remote or near, hidden or uncovered, or they may have their existence simply in the conception or imagination of the spirit communicating them.

HE POINTS THE WAY.

To Distinguish Between the Medium and the Fortune Teller.

To the Editor:—The difference between the genuine spirit medium and the fortune teller—the "blow-hard", brazen fortune teller—may not be difficult to know, but easy; that is, if the medium herself should want to make it easy; and here is how either can make it easy if they want to:

If, therefore, dear reader, you are a spirit medium and a gifted counselor, giving to clients spirit counsel and advice, and you are visited by special officers to spy out your work in order to tax you with fortune tellers, and should ask:

"Are you a fortune teller, a palmist or clairvoyant? If not, then, what are you? Don't you as fortune tellers tell how often and how soon persons may marry? Don't you as fortune tellers promise every already married man another wife, and every already married woman another husband? Don't you tell if wife or husband is true or false? Don't you give market tips on stocks and grain? Other fortune tellers do. Don't you tell how to have good luck, how to fascinate the one you love and marry the man or maiden of your choice? Other fortune tellers do."

"I scorn," you say, "all such! Then what are you?? If none of these, please rise and explain."

At this juncture, dear Oracle, methinks I see you standing on your dignity and hear you exclaim:

"No, sir, I am none of these, and don't you dare identify me with them. I am what all your ecclesiastics proudly claim to be, "A Spiritual Adviser." such is part of their religion;; such is part of mine! If you tax me, you will have to tax them, for all of them claim to be Spiritual Advisers."

As Spiritual Advisers, we may not differ outwardly or physically from the fortune teller, but mentally and spiritually we differ, and herein lies the secret of spirit mediumship, the mental anatomy or mental equipment. It is this mental equipment which makes us receiver and transmitter of spirit messages from spirit life to mortals. It is this mental equipment which gives to invisible key-men and and invisible key-women operators, the power to control and the power to transmit. And it is this and the nature of our sacred work that makes the difference—a difference in work, as far removed from the work of fortune teller as is the furthest fixed star from the planet Earth.

Besides look at the modest claim and modest announcement of the spirit medium, simply, Jane Doe, Spiritual Adviser, and then look at the long-winded and nauseating newspaper advertisements of the loud-mouthed fortune teller.

Municipal officers, please note the difference. DR. R. GREER.

Price, $1.00.

OUR CHILDREN.

Hints From Practical Experience for Parents and Teachers.—By Paul Carus.

In this little book "Our Children," Paul Carus offers a unique contribution to pedagogical literature. Without any theoretical pretensions it is a strong defense for the rights of the child, dealing with the responsibilities of parenthood, and with the first inculcation of fundamental ethics in the child mind and the true principles of correction and guidance. Each detail is forcefully illustrated by informal incidents from the author's experience with his own children, and his suggestions will prove of the greatest possible value to young mothers and kindergartners. Hints as to the first acquaintance with all branches of knowledge are touched upon—mathematics, natural sciences, foreign languages, etc.—and practical wisdom in regard to the treatment of money, hygiene and similar problems. 207 Pages. Germs of Mind in Plants

By R. H. France, Translated by A. M. Simons.—Cloth, Illustrated, 50 Cents.

A cardinal point in the philosophical systems favored by the ruling classes is that the mind of man is something unique in the universe, governed by laws of its own that have no particular connection with physical laws. Modern science has proved that not only animals, but also plants receive impressions from the outside world and use data thus obtained to modify their movements for their own advantage, exactly as human beings do. These facts are told in this book in so charming and entertaining a style that the reader is carried along and does not realize until later the revolutionary significance of the facts.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 36 CHICAGO, ILL., SEPT. 21, 1907 NO. 930

The Dynamics of the After Life.

The Following Article, Published in a Leading Periodical, the Medical Brief, of St. Louis, Mo., will be Read with Thrilling Interest. It Illustrates the Important Fact, that Outside of Our Ranks, among Scientific Men, Spiritualistic and Occult Subjects are Receiving Great Attention.

"There is more between Heaven and Earth, my dear Horatio, than all our philosophy has ever dreamt about."—Hamlet.

In Touch with Impalpables.—We had met—my deceased wife and myself—under circumstances which the thoughtless would attribute to the empire of chance, but which the philosopher appreciates as integral and law-governed parts in the eternal fitness of things. Though born and raised under antipodal signs of nature and culture, we had yet imbibed the same fundamental aspects of life and destiny, impelled by the same inappeasable passion for knowledge, to pursue, rationally and scientifically, the dynamics of after-life.

She died, as we all do, from failure to fully understand and fully live up to the minutiae of the plan embodied and ensouled in the free, rhythmic throb of the world-life. She died in my arms, sane and hopeful, philanthropically not less than intuitively convinced that death should cause no arrest of her evolution, but rather be instrumental in opening up new fields of research and realization.

But before she died she had whispered between the hectic convulsions: "Gerald, if I am to change the theater of existence for some more needed experience, I shall endeavor to communicate with you, and lay before you scene after scene of the panorama of after-life."

These words alone consoled me for the loss of her cherished earthly association. For in the light of that promise her departure became merely nominal. As souls and thinkers we ignored death, fixing our attention with unquestioning certainty on the conscious continuation of individual identity beyond the threshold.

About a week after her death, while sitting in my library and looking through some of her posthumous notes, with a view of publishing them, I suddenly felt a cold draft of air with great force strike my face, while the room was rapidly filling with the odor of putrid flesh, peculiar to the presence of a corpse. Looking up from my work, I beheld in front of me a dark, shrouded form, as if exposed to a heavy gale—a form which I instantaneously recognized as belonging to my deceased friend. A drab-colored tunic, covering head and body, parted at the flurry of a gesture, and uncovered a face emaciated and careworn, and over-drawn with deep-laid lines. From two deep, dark sockets I saw the piercing light of her eyes shine with intense and nervous energy.

She articulated syllables with great rapidity, coloring her sentences with German, French and English idioms—languages with which she had been familiar while on earth. But did she really speak?

I saw the lips moving, the hands gesticulate, the spare form swinging to and fro, and yet the excitation of my sense of hearing, resulting in an intelligible response in my mind to this epiglottic stream of ideas, did certainly not come over the path of the eighth cranial nerve. The waves of vibratory motion gave rise to verbal utterances without being accompanied by sound. Did a receiver in some of the departments of the vast terra incognita known as "psychic centers" register waves of motion along "wireless" paths, and reflect them over the roads of Corti into the mediating and interpreting agency of the mind, and there start reactions in terms of audible sensations? Or was the entire process a direct registration of the soul in terms of sympathy and feeling, introducing the descriptive imagery of the mute speaker into my consciousness without involving the cumbersome agency of cerebral machinery.

"Do not grieve," she articulated with great vehemence; "grief is pain—a missile of agony darting through the soul of those to whom it is directed. Please do not grieve."

Strange to say I was neither shocked nor surprised. I listened to her statements with the same interest and philosophical absorption as in former days, when we used to discuss problems of life and destiny. Interrogating her about the effect of grief as a purely subjective force, I spoke loud at first, but, startled at the sound of my voice, and with a sudden realization of the inappropriateness as well as the needlessness of vocal utterance, I proceeded to formulate the thoughts in my mind, without translating them into words.

She referred to grief as a species of thoughts, and as such possessing qualities characteristic of the latter. Like thought, it is a carrier of emotion. And, furthermore, as grief stands for the realization of all that we failed in doing or undoing for the departed while they were yet with us, a realization intensified and magnified by the consciousness of our utter helplessness in regaining lost opportunities of demonstrating to them our faith and affection, it follows that the energy with which grief charges its messages carries a tremendous potency, embodying in its impulse all that is dynamic and forceful in our personal natures. If to this we add the fact of common experience that thought has the power of changing the nature of gross, molecular substance, as witnessed in its action on the anatomical and physiological groupings of our body—thereby giving expression to character—it can be readily realized what effect grief must have on the soul itself when the latter is no longer enshrouded and protected by a gross physical covering.

"The pain which your grief inflicts on my soul is indeed real, and strikes me as resembling the piercing, lancinating sensations experienced by the victims of locomotor ataxia at a certain crisis in their progressive break-down. I assure you again that these sensations of grief have to me the entire reality of objective touch, streaks of lightning, leaping through and through my quivering substance, crossing and recrossing my sphere of identity until my entire nature feels honeycombed by invisible, trackless, uncontrollable arrows of flame. Ah, I beg you, do not grieve! If mothers realized the pain their grief inflicts upon the very objects of their love, they would wipe away their tears, and replace them with a smiling and hopeful countenance; for sunny, cheerful, hopeful thoughts are like stimulating draughts for a thirsty and tired-out body. Oh, ye mourners and grief-stricken lovers of the dead, give joy, not grief, strength, not—"

The words grew fainter and fainter, and finally became inarticulate and lost in a stream of unintelligible mutterings. Simultaneously changes of dissolution appeared in her features, which began to lose their lineaments and gradually fade out of objective vision. A moment later the phantom was dissolved, and the four walls of the room, which for the time being I had lost sight of, again enclosed me as concrete and impenetrable as ever.

I describe these and the following scenes as minutely and ad verbatim as my memory enables me. If an illusion, then I am not less illusioned than the reader. The whole matter stands before me at once, incredible, yet real; a fairy tale, and yet concrete history.

IT IS NEEDLESS TO STATE THAT I HENCEFORTH STOPPED GRIEVING, AND GAVE MY WHOLE THOUGHT-LIFE A HIGHER VITAL TONE, CHARGING EVERY FEELING WITH PERENNIAL BUOYANCY AND HOPEFULNESS.

About a month after this experience, in the early twilight of a Swedish winter day, in which country at the time I was sojourning, while sitting in my library, wrapt in memories of the past, and with my eyes resting on a miniature portrait of my dead friend, I suddenly felt the strange, chilling, uncanny touch of a damp, malodorous garment creeping over me. I at once became conscious of the presence of my dead friend, and recognized, with no surprise whatever, the appearance immediately in front of me, of her old dear face, wrapt in the same loose, dark-colored garment as when I last saw her. She seemed to move in a sphere of intense excitement; waves of stirring emotion dashed over me like breakers on an ocean surf, while her hands and features twitched as under the strain of a tumultuous though half-suppressed agitation. In her attitude she gave the impression of trying to resist some invisible but overpowering force, against the influence of which every minute of her time had to be bought by unceasing struggle.

She pointed backward over her shoulder, and as I followed with my eye the direction of her finger, I scanned a vast unconfined expanse of space where spectral forms seemed floating along currents of unceasing agitation as if under the resistless action of a mastering force, compelling its ghastly, wreathing, rebellious cargo to assume the definite attitude and momentum of a preconceived plan of adjustment.

Straining my attention I observed that the uncanny creatures of this forbidding habitat were not only shifting their positions, but also forms and characters. Apparently in response to some internal impulse of feeling, their forms, now and again, with lightning-like rapidity projected some grotesquely exaggerated member of their plastic, jelly-like organisms. Lips would all of a sudden swell out into a hideous monstrosity, involving in its formation almost the entire creature. Similar changes occurred in other functions and parts of these constantly shifting forms. Ears, noses, tongues, etc., increased and decreased in size and character, portraying the entire range of progressive or retrogressive changes of moral life, and thus giving rise to a pantomime, at once hideous and interesting, in which every ruling emotion portrayed itself in the size and expression of the projected organ.

This ghostly carnival swept onward in a circling motion without a sound. I shut my eyes to gain a relief from the infernal performance, only however to realize that their objectivisation in my optic thalami did not depend upon the activity of my organs of vision. They belonged to the great class of what might be called optical "wireless," which depends on no external sensation for its manifestation, but appears as realities to every mind attuned to a corresponding key of vibration.

Dante and Milton must have been able to sink their minds self-consciously and deliberately to these depths of existence, with which they seemed to have been as familiar as with the topography and ethnography of their own native countries.

"This is my present home," said my unfortunate friend, "and here is where I experience the fate of Iamlet's dead father, who found himself—

"———confined to walk in fires
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away. But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison house,
I could a tale unfold whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,
Thy knotted and combined locks to part.
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood———."

"I burn," said my friend, resuming her weird tale, "yet the fire which consumes me is not the elemental destroyer which goes under that name on earth. It is a fire of anguish that consumes whatever of my nature is destructive in this state of life. It is the fire of a fever—a soul fever—weeding out and consuming the toxic elements of selfishness, the moral corruption, accumulated during a life lived mostly for self, and inspired by egoistic motives. It seems to divide or dissect the subtlest compound of my nature, as if the atoms were laid bare and honeycombed. I experience the presence in my nature of a corrosive force pulsating through my consciousness, and eating away every tendency and desire that connects me with the sense-world. All notions of personal stature and advantage, all inclinations for sensual indulgencies, all fears, ambitions, envies, jealousies—every notion arising in my mind of being a separate, exclusive and self-sufficient being, with interests and hopes, ideals and destinies, which in any way distances me from my fellow men—are being mercilessly burnt out by these ever-present, inescapable flames of searching, dissecting light."

She shrunk together, collapsing from the strain under which she seemed to labor, but rallying again, rose up and continued in the sombre pathos of the inevitable, at once expressing rebellion and submission:

"OH, HOW LITTLE MANKIND REALIZES THE MASS OF WORTHLESS BALLAST IT DRAGS ALONG ON THE VOYAGE OF LIFE, RETARDING AND ENDANGERING ITS PROGRESS. VERILY, WE ARE SAILING WITH A CORPSE IN OUR CARGO. I LOOK UPON MY PAST LIFE WITH UNSPEAKABLE DISGUST.

"It seems to me almost as if it were void of every redeeming feature of positive unselfishness, of freedom from any taint of personal, self-seeking motive. And when all this final balancing and clearing-up business is over, how little is worth survival in the larger, eternal life of the liberated soul. All the strain for social benefits and positions, vanities of style, and impressiveness of stature, literary fame, political power, intellectual domineering, any ambition, any ideal, any hope, if only aiming at personal advancement in some form or other, constitutes a most horrid and unreasonable waste of life, time and energy. To love humanity in motive and service is the only legitimate expression of life. All the rest of life is forfeited, wanton, hopeless."

But her storage batteries of sustaining psychic energy were exhausted, and the stream of her communication seemed lost in the gulf-streams and whirlpools of emotions sweeping through this spectral abode. An invisible force, not unlike the suction at work in a vacuum pump, seemed to pull her backward to the zone of dark phantasm from which she had momentarily escaped.

As her power of resistance weakened, the force of suction seemed to increase, until finally, tottering under the overpowering strain of this thousand-armed monster-force, she lost her equipoise, and suddenly, as if caught by a cyclone, was swept headlong away from my field of vision to re-enter the dominion of living phantoms.

The Trail Brightens.—For some time I saw nothing of my departed friend. My business of late had rendered my existence somewhat fluidic, and landed me for a season at the extreme end of the Scandinavian peninsula, in the little isolated commonwealth of Haparanda, which, while the northernmost city of Sweden, nevertheless during its short, two-months-long summer season, exhibits all the voluptuousness and fascinations of a tropical vegetation.

One evening in the heart of June, while sitting by myself on a granite boulder a little distance out of town, with an intensely blue dome above me, and a dreamland of verdure, flower and fragrance below me, with the lingering after-glow of a recent sunset illumining the towering mountain-peaks of the majestic Areskutan—the Sierras of Sweden—gradually my thoughts sank into the events of the past, pursuing in imagination the movements of the strange being, who, while dead, still remained to me a living companion. For some time, however, perhaps three months, I had not seen her, and my interest in her unknown vicissitudes largely absorbed my mind during my leisure hours. All at once a cold shiver crept over me, giving rise to a sensation, which, having no basis in the almost tropical temperature of my surroundings, flashed into my mind the idea of its possible association with the presence of my friend.

I mistook not. Before me stood the object of my thoughts. But ah! how changed. The fear, despair, and agony which at our last meeting were visible in every feature and every gesture had been displaced by a lofty submissiveness and dignified repose. She looked at me with a full eye, expressive of at once tenderness and power, compassion and will. What a noble, superb animation, beaming with interior light, passionate devotion and irrevocable resolve!

"I AM OUT OF INFERNO," WAS SYLLABLED IN MY CONSCIOUSNESS. "THE GROSSNESS OF MY NATURE IS REMOVED, BUT MY SOUL IS STILL IN THE THROES OF BIRTH-GIVING. FREED FROM THE NOXIOUS WEEDS OF SELFISHNESS AND IMPURITIES IN ALL ITS HYDRA-FORMS OF LIFE, I AM AT PRESENT PLACED UNDER THE ACTION OF AN ENVIRONMENT WHICH COMPELS MY PURGED NATURE TO DEVELOP ENTIRELY NEW AND UNSUSPECTED POWERS."

She paused for a moment, as if to collect and formulate her thoughts. While waiting for to continue, I noticed the change in her robe, which from the old shade of dark drab had assumed a color of cream, streaked with light blue.

"My evolution," she continued, "in this posthumous realm has hitherto been largely negative and eliminative, while at present it is passing over into a positive, constructive and organizing phase of consciousness. My soul is budding into self-consciousness, and my mind is beginning to wield a self-sustaining, self-determining power. But I shall try to put before you the factors at work in the process of my unfoldment.

"As a basis to start out from, I will refer to the life of ordinary humanity, where self-consciousness mostly consists in reactions of the mind to external impressions. The minds of the great majority of people are a blank on which gossip, sensations, sightseeings, travels, accidents, stirring vicissitudes, etc., scribble down their incongruous contents. External stimulants in one or another form of sensation lie back of and support the entire structure of what goes to make up most people's actual self-consciousness.

"Now if sensation were suddenly to stop its generative process, and not a ray of light or life be permitted to enter the mind through the agency of the five senses, what then? Would not the individual find himself in chaos and night, very much like awakening from a sleep when bereft of the powers of hearing, seeing and general sensation, a state of existence which corresponds to my own experience upon awakening from the shock imparted to me by the death of my physical body? I woke up dazed and bewildered, without any power to communicate with the order and expressions of life and consciousness peculiar to this supersensuous plane of existence, where consciousness manifests its terms of life quite different from what I experienced through the functions of the senses. Thus being divorced from my sensory vehicle on which I had so largely depended for guidance in my subjective as well as objective existence, I found myself not only inadequate to deal with the intelligences of the new world, but also rendered powerless to reassume my interrupted relation with the old sense world.

"Yet here are some phases of this subjective after life to which I have been able to respond—phases related to the emotional forms of imagination with its selfishly passional and sentimental indulgences so characteristic of sense-life. Hence, every notion associated with forms of fear, worry, anxiety, envy, dislike, desire, vanity and unbrotherliness or selfishness, in any of its thousand-tongued expressions, constituted the only stock of my available knowledge responding to my power of recognition—a fact which opened up to me the morbid contents of the awe-inspiring inferno, which, in spite of its hideous dwellers, represented in principle the main expression of the life with which I had retained familiarity. Everything else was largely a blank, on which I now and then discovered flitting presences of transfigured beings diffusing pulsations of a faintly palpable zone of holiness.

"For only such stages of consciousness, with which we have the power personally to identify ourselves during earth-life are recognizable during the immediate stages following death. Powers and qualities are not generated through the mere change called death; nor do the eternal laws and principles of the universe suspend their operations because an individual passes over from one state of existence into another.

"'AS BELOW SO ABOVE,' SAID HERMES; IN HEAVEN OR ON EARTH—IN LIFE OR AFTER LIFE—WE ARE THAT, AND NO MORE, WHICH WE HAVE ATTAINED TO THROUGH SELF-CONSCIOUS EXERTION IN THE ONE OR OTHER DIRECTION.

"And as the character of man is expressed in his form, so the quality and power of his soul can be traced in the influence they exert on his physical evolution expressed in his demeanor and attitude to trials and vicissitudes of general existence.

"I am now developing subjective consciousness, i. e., the power of the mind to reflect and verify life and its meaning in perfect independence of sensory or functional aids. Had I been given less to social functions, less to outer, sensational, transitory and purely personal interests, and in place devoting my time and power to cultivate acquaintance, through meditation and aspirations with my own soul, I should find fewer obstacles to overcome in my present state of evolution."

Notwithstanding my friend's austere denunciation of the manner in which she had spent her physical life, she was not by far as much "given to social functions" as are the great majority of our society ladies. But she was not without a fondness for gossip, and enjoyed plunging into the social whirl with all the enthusiasm of her sex. It was for the first time, in the after-life, that she learned to appreciate the full meaning and value of time—an appreciation which came out with full force in the ardor of her self-disapproval.

"In what way do you develop your subjective powers in your present state?" I queried in my mind.

"Ah, by enforced, absolute solitude and silence. Look at that endless, solitary trail leading on, and on, surrounded by sterile rocks, without a spear of vegetation, or a motion or a wingstroke of animal existence. Silence of death everywhere, or perhaps more correct, the silence of a new, higher, but as yet inexperienced life. I feel compelled by some resistless directing inner power to pursue this terrible, endless destiny without companionship or semblance of life and consciousness in any form. My sense-nature is absolutely at rest, being bereft of every opportunity to assert itself, and without any means of self-preservation—thus compelling the impersonal, supersensuous soul-nature to unfold its slumbering powers. For it is in the arrest and silence of the animal life that the divine life arises to the surface through channels and media formed by the

VITAL AND MENTAL FORCE.

A Selection from a Work by Prof. J. S. Loveland.

* * * We find the glorious orb of day a center and radiator of such tremendous energy as to fill us with unspeakable wonder. From every part of his immense body flows out into space the ocean waves of almost omnipotent force. We saw the earth absorbing its share of this constantly emitted energy, and, while retaining some portions in permanent form, yet the greater portion is converted into all the varied forms of force, which produce the countless phenomena of Nature. The angry flash of the frowning cloud, the crashing roll of thunder, the maddening rush of the cyclone, the up-springing tree and grain, the falling rain, the many-hued flowers, the mingled strength and beauty with which our earth is clad, are only some of the protean forms of the one force, issuing from the god of day.

I have more particularly called attention to this because it is the great foundation of all discussions upon the nature of man. The earth is from the sun, and man is from the earth. The sun is the primary source, the parental fountain of all the earth's substance and energy.

And while, through different combinations of substance we should look for varied phenomena, we shall be sure to have the same identical force in one world as in the other. We shall also be sure to find in man the workings of the same forces that rule in the suns and worlds of space. In the ascension of matter and force we shall look for higher forms of manifestation, but the same unitary law, running through all the changing and varied phenomena. We shall nowhere find man, the child of Nature, transcending the laws of Nature. If man, as to any part of his being, were not a product of Nature, then it would be vain for us to comprehend the philosophy of his action We should be at once relegated to the realm of the supernatural, the miraculous, the incomprehensible. But so long as we are environed by the laws of Nature, we are within the domain of science, and can, therefore, invoke the aid of the grand laws of analogy in the elucidation of all the new and strange phenomena. It is in view of this that I have started in this discussion from the primary forms of force.

Man is said to be the epitome of the universe—the microcosm of the macrocosm. That is, he embodies in himself the essentials of all that is. And as he is the youngest, the last born of all the kingdoms of being, he should be the flower, the fruitage, of all preceding him. This natural deduction is demonstrated to be true. If man is the culmination of all the prior essences and forces, then a careful study of the primordial elements of man must be indispensable to his full comprehension, even though he may surpass, in functional capacity, all that has preceded him. As submitted at the outset, we have matter, force, and mind before us as the trinity of being.

The enigma of all philosophies has been HOW mind and matter—two assumed and unlike and antipodal substances—could contact, act and react upon each other. The difficulty of solving the problem has forced some to the assumption of exclusive matter (materialism) and others to the position of exclusive mind (idealism). But neither of these theories affords us the slightest help in unraveling the knotty question; for precisely the same substance and agents exist in spite of the profound lucubrations of idealists or materialists. The attributes and functions of mind are just the same, and just as impossible of being reduced to the categories of matter, when the materialist has demonstrated his philosophy as before he commenced it. So also the hard-headed facts of matter are as intractable to common sense and reason after the learned essays of Berkeley and the inspirational utterances of the mind-curers and metaphysicians as before we listened thereto.

Man's idea of causation flows from his consciousness of being or possessing a change-producing force. He produces motion, action, change. He calls it causation. What is the agent, the substance which connects or relates the conscious mind with the effect produced? How do the conceptions of the mind become the phenomena seen by others? To answer these questions aright will go a long way in aiding us to solve the problem of mediumship. * * * * *

IN THE SILENCE.

Softly when the day is done,
In the Silence all alone,
Loving voices come to me,
From the realm of mystery.

Spirit voices, loving, kind,
Speaking deep within the mind,
Words of kindly helpfulness,
Thoughts to sweetly lift and bless.

Thoughts to strengthen purest ties
Thoughts to clear the clouded skies;
Still the frets and cares of life;
Calm the winds and waves of strife.

Ling'ring in the soul's retreat,
Comes an influence pure and sweet,
Waking asirations pure,
Blessings bring that e'er endure.

O, the heavenly beauties seen,
In the silence deep, serene,
And the angels touch with vision
Glimpsing fairest fields elysian.

And the soul in raptured wonder,
Music hears from "over yonder,"
Symphonies of heavenly sweetness
Thrilling with divinest meetness.

Sweet the hour to Silence given,
Bringing antepast of heaven,
While the soul in silence waits
Op'ning of the golden gates.

Camp Chesterfield a Great Success.

The Indiana Spiritualists' 17th Annual Session at Camp Chesterfield is one of the "has beens," and I want to say, as a matter of fact, that never in its history has this Mecca of Spiritualism, with all its scenery of the beautiful, the lovely, and the grand, where Nature and art combine their efforts for a display of perfection, put in a better appearance than in the year 1907.

Never before have its officers, from president down, including the managers of hotel, lodging house and Ladies' Bazaar, paid closer observance to their official duties respectively, to make the camp a success. As a result, financially it can be truthfully said that the dark clouds that had previously arisen and hung out menacingly over Camp Chesterfield's fair name have faded into mists, and they even are so thin that the light of salvation shines clearly through them, and this fact our arisen Mother Colby-Luther as a materialized spirit predicted with emphasis at the first seance given by Mrs. Mendenhall, in the beautiful language: "Chesterfield Camp was not born to die; it came to stay."

While speaking of mediums, I must, to be exact, say that, though I had but little opportunity to visit personally the seances given by the numerous media present on the grounds, other than Mrs. Mendenhall, I am justified in saying that from all reports by those who did visit them, that the mediums never acquitted themselves here or elsewhere with higher honors for the good work done.

Lyceum Work.—In the years gone by the little folks had almost concluded that, as a conductor for this branch of spirit work, our beloved sister Mrs. Gillespie was the only woman for this place. I will say in reference thereto, with all due deference to Sister G., that the work performed in this department during this camp session, under the management of our good and worthy sister Mrs. Fesler, of Indianapolis, evidences the fact that there is no one person so great and useful in the work of building up character for future humanity; but there may be found a peer. It certainly can be truthfully said, without hesitation, by the thousands of witnesses to the method of training the young idea how to shoot, as well as faithfulness to duty and interest shown therein, Sister Fesler in every respect touching her work in this all-important line of culture won for herself laurels that will not fade away in coming years. May she long live, and her good name ever remain endeared to many hearts.

Conference work also was voted a success this year at Camp Chesterfield, though perhaps modesty would compel this subject to be touched lightly, as the writer was the chosen manager thereof. But I will say, at the risk of being gainsaid, that never at any previous session upon our camp was the glow of intelligence, love and real heartfelt delight to be seen so uniformly manifest on so many dear faces.

But, to the culminating point. What shall I say of the array of talent brought into use to entitle Camp Chesterfield to the honors of bearing away the banner of intellectual and spiritual glory of the year 1907? Our speakers, we think, were second to none others in any camp since "Our Moses" and Mother Colby-Luther and Sister Jennie H. Brown have joined the laborers of broader fields. Our own honest-hearted Tom W. Smith, of Anderson, being the first on the program after President O'Neill voiced the address of welcome.

He took the platform and at once made clear the fact that he was the right man in the right place. Spiritualism being his subject, I want to say right here that if any speaker ever showed the need of being honest in dealing with the cause of Spiritualism, whether it be medium, speaker or investigator, Brother "Tom" did the work.

Justice and fair play would demand a brief notice or synopsis of all who occupied the platform, as the reading of their work would be valuable to any class of thinkers. But neither space on paper nor time would admit of such.

Brother E. W. Sprague requires no recommendation from the writer's pen. It needs only to be said that he and his good wife were with us and their work was done in their usual style of earnestness and candor.

Brother T. Grimshaw, of St. Louis, Mo., in his lectures on Genuine Mediumship and Its Important Uses in Studying Life's Philosophy and Religion, proved himself a masterly teacher, under the control of the higher inspiring intelligences.

Brother Harrison D. Barrett is known to the world, and here, as in all other localities, he did his work nobly.

Mrs. Henderson, of Indianapolis, did her part as lecturer and message bearer in her usual way, ever to the honor of the cause and herself.

Dr. W. D. Wattles, formerly of Winchester, Ind., for his subject—first lecture—from the following three points, which present the subject of Spiritualism in its broad, deep and much-needed sense of understanding as the science of life in its practicabilities thus—the past, present and future of Spiritualism; in other words, the Spiritualism of the World's Bibles; the spiritual concept of the marriage relation; and the Brotherhood of Man. On these the speaker displayed a wide range of biblical thought, psycho-physiological study, and the culmination of the spiritual philosophy. Dr. Wattles is widely known as a lecturer and teacher in the school of "New Thought," and is prepared to serve the people when and where needed if called upon. He and family members make a quartette equal to the best on lecturing occasions. Call for him and family.

Mrs. Lillie—one of Nature's choicest blooms—ah, what shall I say of her? Only this: She is not only the Lillie of the West, but the Lillie of the world. She did a noble work while here.

Brother Wilson Fritch, of Seattle, Wash., filled his place as none but he alone could. His subject was Mediumship and the True Religion of Now. It is enough to say that his personal figure on the platform, together with his matchless oratory, holds every thinking member of the audience spellbound from start to finish. As substitute for dates reserved, Dr. Marvin, of Anderson, Ind., was brought into service, and in his lecture made deep impressions upon the minds of his attentive listeners. Along the same line Miss Mae B. Hedrick, of Brooklyn, New York, was introduced by the president as the "adopted daughter of Camp Chesterfield." This certainly is a beautiful as well as a befitting title. This beautiful angel in the earth form, as lecturer and message bearer did her work to the satisfaction of both mortal and angel audiences.

I come now to the top round in the ladder—the world-wide famous Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, who, accompanied by her good husband as her reporter, served Camp Chesterfield the last week of its session. Oh! that my pen were the harp of a celestial musician, that I might to the world sing the melody and true worth of her inspired words. In her lecture entitled "The Approaching Glacial Period and its Effects," as being both destructive and reconstructive to the various business institutions as well as to the various systems of moral and religious thought; and "The Uses and Modes of Co-operation of the Unseen Forces of the Universe" was, to put it mildly, sublimely grand. With her personality clad in her peculiar suitably-cut costume when upon the platform would alone render her a central power of attraction for any thinking audience. But when her lips voiced slowly, clearly and wisely her thought on the unseen universal forces and their uses, she reminded the humble writer of some great soul let down from the higher realm—nay, rather some one of the gods or goddesses who had taken an active part in the construction of worlds and was here to teach us mortals something of the divine lessons of life which we are yet to learn before we can boast largely of our scholarship.

Sister Richmond's closing lecture was an elaborate explanation of her mission to the World's Peace Conference now in session at The Hague in Holland. She went there as the representative of the Spiritualists of the United States of America. Mrs. Richmond, there among the chosen savants of the world, in which forty-six nations were represented in their best thought in behalf of humanity's interest in the peaceful adjustment of all national difficulties, on the economic principles of arbitration. On this question of all questions I may only say our good sister Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond showed herself, as on all other occasions, to be master of the situation.

MESSAGE FROM AN ARISEN ONE.

I have stepped to the verge of the love-land shore,
Where life is so clear to me,
Just stepped as close, dear ones, as I can,
To tell what it is to be.

I caught the inrush of the spirit zones
As I sped from your sight away,
And left you the poor, worn, broken
shard
That had served the little day.

But I that had been its tenant, freed
From its close environment,
Departed for another clime
And on nobler life intent.

I swept the blue to my glad surprise,
At home almost anywhere,
But sorrow's call, the voice of love,
Brought me back the home to share.

I saw your tears fall like the rain,
I gave you the hand of love,
I essayed to make you hear my voice,
To tell you "I'm not above.

"Nor yet below; right here am I,
In your midst, alert, alive;
No death as yet has come to me,
And I only cried, 'forgive' "

For papa could have found the way,
He should have sought for light
For himself and you, and left you there
In the midst of sorrow's night.

But listen now, dear ones, I call
Across the lessening tide,
And bid you seek the truer way
That I have found and tried.

There's no such thing as death,—to die
Has never yet been known—
Nor sleeping either—spirit sleep?
Why should you then bemoan?

I am but in advance of you;
My work goes on the same;
I care for all—but oh, the ways!
These grand attention claim.

Think of me, then, as knowing still
The ways you daily go,
And think, too, that it makes me proud
To have you love me so.

I'll watch to help you everywhere,
I'll heed your slightest call,
And in a blessed yet-to-be
I'll learn to teach you all.

Come closer, then, at eventide;
Papa will list' for you,
Will seek to guide the every thought
To higher ways and true.

MEETINGS IN NEW YORK.

First Commenced by Andrew Jackson Davis.

In December, 1862, Andrew Jackson Davis was publishing a weekly paper, "The Herald of Progress," in this city, and in said paper he made the following statement: "President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation takes effect January 1, 1863, and we should conduct Progressive Sunday meetings, as the movement will mark an important epoch. Hon. John W. Edmunds, Ralph Glover, M. D., Henry J. Newton, Charles Partridge, P. E. Farnsworth, Warren Sumner Barlow and myself, and a host of others concurred in the movement, and on Sunday, January 4, 1863, Meeting was commenced at Dodsworth Hall, Broadway, opposite 11th street; said meetings have continued up to June 30, 1907; the last season at Elk Hall, Majestic Bldg., 8th ave and 59th street, was eminently successful. Mrs. May A. Newton is president, of the First Association of Spiritualists. Mrs. Margaret Gaule Reidinger, a remarkable psychic, has given earnest attention to the welfare of said society for the past 9 years, and her husband, August Reidinger, has been an energetic and harmonious assistant in her work, and their combined efforts have resulted in attracting a very desirable membership of ladies and gentlemen, whose aim is to labor in every possible way to advance the glorious Cause of Spiritualism. Mr. Reidinger has been very fortunate in obtaining so desirable a hall for their meetings, which are to commence September 15.

Splendid Spiritualist Meetings Held by Will J. Erwood of Elkhart, Indiana.

For three days the gifted speaker and psychic, Will J. Erwood, has ministered to the Spiritualists and interested friends who have indeed enjoyed a real spiritual feast. His lectures have been masterpieces of oratory and eloquence, and the manner in which he presented and discussed spiritual and scientific truths prove him to be one of the foremost thinkers and leaders of the day.

His many messages were splendid and all recognized as being absolutely correct. Every moment of his time was taken in answering questions and explaining the philosophy and phenomena, and giving private readings. The interest shown was so great that Mr. Erwood was prevailed upon to hold afternoon meetings.

The excellent work of this splendid man has created the greatest interest and enthusiasm the cause has ever known here. The friends were anxious that Mr. Erwood remain ten days or two weeks, but owing to previous engagements he was compelled to leave for other fields, but we hope and expect to have him again. We are always glad to come in touch with the master minds, and to discover ministering angels and friends in human forms makes life much sweeter and better. In every department of his work he has given excellent satisfaction, and one has said:

"There are no words too beautiful to say,
Of him who's gone for but a day,
Beyond our plane of sense and sight."

He can never go beyond the influence or out of reach of the good wishes and kindly thoughts the friends here send to him, and when he finds another opportunity to return, a cordial welcome awaits him. We invoke the angels' blessing on this splendid worker, and know they linger very near him in his ministry.

The N. S. A. Convention.

To the Editor:—Back again to dear old home, both feeling fine this beautiful September morn while the sun is streaming through the eastern window, filling our hearts with choicest of Nature's gifts.

I have been trying to secure special rates from several cities for the convention at Washington, D. C., but the best are the ones already out, viz., from Chicago, $22.25; from Peru, $19.70; from Muncie, $18.50; from Indianapolis, $19.25. These tickets are good for fifteen days from each given point; ten days or less at Washington, with a trip by boat to Norfolk, Va., or Jamestown; from there by boat up the historic James river to Richmond, and back home over the most picturesque route. Arrangements can be made whereby we can go in a body and meet in Cincinnati. The best time to leave Cincinnati is in the evening about 9 o'clock; this will bring you about dawn through most delightful mountain scenery, arriving at Washington, D. C., about 5 p. m. next day. Anyone wishing to join our party can find out about time of starting by writing Mrs. Carrie Mong, 415 Franklin street, Muncie, Ind., or Mrs. Ella J. Bloom, 896 Turner avenue, Chicago, or Mrs. Woolsey, 127 West 16th street, Indianapolis, Ind.

To give you a description of this trip is impossible; it is a delightful one.

I want to see some protection made for honest mediums wherever they may go. I want to see the frauds swept from our ranks.

W. D. Wattles will commence his series of lectures on Spiritualism on Sunday, September 15, in Orpheum Hall, 135 North Delaware street, in this city. It is his intention to organize one of the best and strongest societies in the United States this coming winter.

Get together, go to Washington, make this convention the largest and best attended convention the National has ever had. Go prepared to work for its good, and assist those who have spent years in making it what it is to-day.

Science of the Soul.

In The Progressive Thinker of June 22 will be found an address by Geo. W. Lewis, A. M., upon the above title, which shows an almost exhaustive research and a keen, criticising appreciation of what he found in the records of science, and the opinions of scientists and students of the occult as well, and finally concludes with this statement:

"The soul is an eternal and uncreated entity, and the wisdom of the scientists, the machinations of the priest, or the gates of hell, cannot prevail against it."

This is true, but is not all. In Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond's book, "The Soul in Its Human Embodiments," which was given in lessons to private classes some forty years ago, and purported to be the wisdom of the Spirits of the Heavenly Order of Gabriel, a band of whom at that time claimed to be her guides, after a like exhaustive study upon entirely different lines, concludes, in part, with this statement:

"Soul is an eternal, immortal, finite entity, uncreated; in essences like unto God; therefore all souls have had, and will have, being forever. God and the souls in the universe constitute all the consciousness of the universe.

"God is the Infiniverse, and the universe is that which God expresses.

"There is never any change in the relationship between the soul and God; the soul is always finite, God is always infinite.

"The Deity pervades, surrounds and controls, but is not the finite entity God; nor are all souls God, or parts of God, but like unto God."

Such are some of the conclusions arrived at by the grand band of intelligences who at that time controlled Mrs. Richmond, and in all that I have ever seen emanating from her control since, none has seemed to come from so high a source as that book; and still it has never seemed to be all required to establish a perfect understanding of the entity called "soul." There is no reason given why it should desire to embody in habiliments of earth, nor what the value is to the soul in being obliged to express itself in so many entirely different embodiments, nor what the result will be to the soul, nor what value it will all be to God.

Now in accordance with the few glimpses that have come to me through what I term soul consciousness, the conception of God, as has been presented above, is at fault in these regards.

If God is infinite and fills the infiniverse, which contains all universes and systems of universes and all beyond, then He, They, It, is ALL, and has no negative, there being nothing beside Him, which, to finite minds, is absolutely incomprehensible, as it should be, to be REALLY infinite!

One glimpse I caught showed me that the law of polaric force was and is the basic law of creation, and that particles of substance are to each other as the vibrative energy in one is to the same energy in the other. This led me to question the source of this vibrative energy, and on entering the silence I saw that before creation all substance was held in INFINITE vibrative energy; was and is held in the potency of the Infiniverse, THE INFINITE! Before Creation the Infinite held in potency all that manifestation, through power, expresses in universes; hence ALL that is palpable to sense perception has been externalized as expressions—manifestations—of the Infinite. "HOW?" do we ask? One way was shown to me through SOUL ILLUMINATION. It was shown that John, the beloved disciple upon whose bosom the Master rested his weary head, caught the true version when he said, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made."

Evidently, in the realm of being, where ALL is uncreate, The Infinite determined MANIFESTATION SHALL BE, and it was shown that the first move in that direction was a DIVISION in the elements of infinity. Under His fiat the power-wielding elements separated and became positive and negative universal spiritualities, Male and Female, Father-Mother, God-head, the Almighty Creator! The Agent of the Infinite to produce the universal manifestations He had determined should be. But this Word was positive creative Spirit, and polaric force having been determined as the law of manifestation, there was demanded a corresponding NEGATIVE, which should be as absolute in its position as the Word was in its position, it was shown to be the ATOM, a thought of the Infinite, the vibration of which was slowed down to absolute inertia—congealed! and thus becoming the basis of universal manifestation; hence, when science strives to determine the atom, it is striving to discover and measure a congealed, purposeful thought of the Infinite, which in truth seems to be the mathematical point endowed with perfect resistance, but capable of taking on polaric conditions; hence, under the action of the Word, one side of each became positive and the other negative, thus clasping each to each and thus demonstrating that "LOVE is the fulfillment of the law," and pointing the way of aggregation, concentration and combination, resulting in what is termed "CREATION."

It was also shown that in a general way evolution is true, evolving the involved energy and ideation placed within the clasping atoms by the action of the Word, until a planet of a system in the universe became evolved, up to a point beyond which mere material, animal, physical organizations could not go. A new departure became necessary in order that progress could be maintained as had been decreed at the beginning.

At this crisis came the response from the Infinite to the Word "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness," etc., and there proceeded from the innermost of the Infinite His Divinity, polarized to correspond and harmonize with the attained condition of the planet, ready to become dual entities of male and female. Under the manipulation of the Father-Mother principle of the Word, a substance was generated that separated each dual-entity from all the rest, and ALL from the Infinite and from themselves; thus were the soul-entities individualized in the Garden of Eden, the Paradise of God, the Soul Nursery of the unborn, unembodied souls of men which is still existent, in the realm of no attraction between Solar systems; thus it will be seen that ALL the souls to be embodied on any planet were individualized at one and the same time, of the same substance, the Divinity of the Infinite, that contained every attribute of Himself, in germ, except INFINITY. There can be but one Infinite! All that is has life, breath, form and being in Him.

Thus it is plainly seen that in QUALITY all souls are alike and like unto God and are in very deed His children, no matter how they may differ in quantity and individual unfoldment, the latter of which is all gained by and through human embodiments or incarnations in HUMAN form, for it was just as plainly shown that no soul ever was embodied in any form below the human, after the inauguration of the human on the planet, and that IT was through the soul's action upon the highest evolved animal form that the human form was evolved, that bridged the chasm between mere animal and right human form and relegated the "lost link" idea to the realm of myths, where it belongs.

It will also be observed that the NECESSITY of the many embodiments of the soul is to unfold and make active the germinal attributes of the Infinite, which are passive at inception and were decreed to become active and finally masterful over environments through that class of contact with physical forms. It may also further be observed that it is the pleasure of the Infinite to see Himself glassed in every class of human form, from the bushman to the archangelic form in heaven.

Again, this view of the science of soul gives immortality per se, for as a divine principle, holding an eternal past, naught but an eternal future can be predicted; hence Mr. Lewis' concluding statement, also Mrs. Richmond's conclusions, are true, and this further and more definite version of the science of soul is true to me because it came on the lines of soul illumination, which carries within itself the evidences and impress of truth to whomsoever the manifestation may come.

In conclusion I will say I deem the above but a version of the highest, holiest truth that has ever been presented by The All-Father to his children for them to discover each for himself, and that sooner or later there will come an impulse to each soul to solve the problem which it needs must obey; but if there is any higher, holier solution extant I would like to see it, for I am only a searcher after God's Holy Truth.

MINNESOTA STATE ASSOCIATION.

Tenth Annual Convention of Spiritualists.

To the Editor:—The State Spiritualists' Association of Minnesota, has just closed its tenth annual convention, and we are pleased to know that it was as harmonious and forceful a convention as we ever held.

There was a large attendance of delegates and visitors, and the interest manifested in the deliberations of the convention was very gratifying. Some of the fraternal societies sent delegates who were most cordially received, and whose remarks on their line of work were greatly appreciated.

We were favored with the assistance and lectures of two of the prominent workers in the ranks of Spiritualists, Prof. W. M. Lockwood of Buffalo, N. Y., and Miss Elizabeth Harlow of Columbus, Ohio. Miss Harlow will speak for the State Association during the month of September, and the local societies, to show their appreciation of the efforts of the State Board to bring talent from out of the city, have closed their meetings for this month, and will join forces with the State Board in making the meetings a success financially as well as intellectually. Miss Harlow is well known to the people of the Twin Cities, and Prof. Lockwood has made many friends and admirers who will give a cordial welcome whenever he comes to us again.
